P R E F A C E.

I SHOULD willingly have saved the Reader and myself the Trouble of a Preface, if it had not been necessary to give him some Information, relating as well to the Life of Dr. Pocock, as the present Edition of his Theological Works.

WITH respect to the former of these, I am to acquaint him, that Dr. Pocock's Life was begun to be written forty Years ago, by the Reverend and Learned Mr. Humphrey Smith, Vicar of Townstoll, and St. Saviour's, Dartmouth, in the County of Devon. At whose Instance he first undertook the Work, I know not; but he was greatly encouraged and assisted therein, by the Doctor's eldest Son, the Reverend Mr. Edward Pocock, Rector of Minall near Marlborough, in Wiltshire, and Prebendary of Sarum: No Pains were spared by either of them to procure Materials for the Design. Mr. Pocock made all the necessary Searches at Oxford, and transmitted the Result of them, together with the Papers in his own Custody, that concerned the Work, to Mr. Smith; he, on the other Hand, wrote to all Dr. Pocock's surviving Friends, particularly to Dr. Wallis, Archbishop Marsh, Mr. Locke, Dr. Huntington, Dr. Smith, Dr. Mill, Dr. Hickman, Dr. Francis Atterbury, Dr. Lancaster, Dean Aldrich, &c. desiring from them such Notices, as they could recollect about him, and what Letters they had of his in their Possession. Some Intelligence came in this Way; but to the great Discouragement of Mr. Smith, it was found, that the greatest Part of the Letters, which had passed between Dr. Pocock and the Learned, both at home and abroad, for full sixty Years, was entirely given for lost. It seems, those Papers, in order to their Publication, had, soon after Dr. Pocock's Death, been put into the Hands of Dr. Arthur Charlett, then Fellow of Trinity in Oxford, and afterwards Master of University-College; and to him Mr. Pocock applied, to get them for the Use of Mr. Smith, as soon as he understood the Design he had to write his Father's Life; but after long Search among his Papers, Dr. Charlett, not finding them, concluded, they were irretrievably lost in the Removal of his Books and Papers from Trinity to University-College. Such, however, was Mr. Smith's Zeal for preserving the Memory of Dr. Pocock, that he resolved to attempt his History upon the Strength of those imperfect Memoirs, that could be come at. With this Resolution he began, and drew up the Doctor's Story, fairly written, and scored for the Press, down to the Restoration, and left behind him a foul Copy of the same, continued for three Years further; but here he stopt, either discouraged by Want of sufficient Lights, or by ill Health, and probably by both.

I FEAR the World will be but too sensible of its Loss, through the Change of Hands employed about the Life of our Author. Mr. Smith was excellently qualified for the Undertaking, and, had he been supplied with the Papers, which since his Time have come to light, would have finished the Life with greater Advantage, than it can now reasonably pretend to.

IT was once, therefore, my Intention to have obliged the Publick with what my Predecessor in the Work had prepared, distinct, and to have thrown all the necessary Additions and Alterations into Notes at the Bottom of each Page; but the Bulk and Number of them soon convinced me, that such a Method would cause too great an Interruption to the Thread of the History, and that whatever Disadvantage it might be to Mr. Smith's Performance, there was a Necessity to work up all together. Besides, where authentick Information failed him, he was compelled to proceed upon Conjectures, which the Papers, since found, discover to have been, in some Instances, wide of the Mark; and I was by no Means fond of pointing out and correcting the Errors into which that worthy Gentleman fell, through a Misfortune, as unavoidable, as it was piteous. However, to make Satisfaction for any Injury, that may have been done to Mr. Smith's Part in the Narrative, by a Mixture with mine, I declare myself content, that whatever shines in our joint Work be placed to his Account, and that all of a different Character be deemed mine.

I FURTHER think it a Debt to the Memory of this worthy Person, that he, who took so much Pains to transmit to Posterity the History of Dr. Pocock, should himself be known to the World by more Circumstances, than merely those of his Name and Preferments. But besides this, I have a particular Reason for laying before the World a short Account of Mr. Smith's Life, which is, that some Things in his MS. Life rest wholly on his Veracity, the Vouchers and Authorities for them having died with him. It is fitting, therefore, that Strangers to the Character of this Gentleman should know how responsible a one it was.

MR. Humbrey Smith was born in the Parish of Chew Stoke, in the County of Somerset, and there baptized the 12th Day of January, 1654: His Father was Mr. Jasper Smith, a worthy and loyal Gentleman of that Place, who underwent Imprisonment, and Sequestration of his whole Estate, in those Times, for his Zeal and Activity in the King's Service. He was put to School in his native Place, under the Care of the Reverend Mr. Robert Paine, from whom he went to the University of Oxford, about the Year 1671, being admitted of Queen's-College, where he staid, till he had taken the Degree of Bachelor of Arts; after this, he took Holy Orders from the Hands of Dr. Peter Mew, then Bishop of Bath and Wells, and served as a Curate in the Neighbourhood of Wells, till the Year 1680; at which Time he was presented, by the Dean and Chapter of that Church, to the Vicarage of Long-Sutton, in the same Diocese, and some Time during his Incumbency there, commenced Master of Arts. In the Year 1685, he was by the Mayor and Magistrates of Clifton Dartmouth Horanes, in Devonshire, presented to the Vicarage of Townstoll and St. Saviour's, Dartmouth, of which they were Patrons, through the Recommendation of his Countryman and intimate Friend, Mr. Burscough, then Vicar of Toinefs, and afterwards Archdeacon of Barnstaple. Not long after his Induction, the Mayor and Magistrates of the Place freely granted Mr. Smith a Lease of the Improprate Tithes of Townstoll, belonging to them, without any Reserve to themselves, to continue in force during his Incumbency; for the like Term, and in the same generous Manner, they granted a Lease likewise to Mr. Smith's Successor, Mr. Pritchard: The present worthy Incumbent, Mr. Henry Holdsworth^a, having a Grant of the like Lease for sixty Years, if he should so long continue Vicar: A rare Instance of Generosity in Lay Improprators, for which that Corporation deserves the highest Honour and Esteem from those, who love the established Religion! But to return.

MR. Smith was scarce fixed in his new Settlement, when he was attacked by two zealous and eminent Teachers of the Separation, Mr. Flavel and Mr. Carey, the former being of the Presbyterian, and the latter of the Anabaptist Persuasion: Those Gentlemen seemed to have promised themselves an easy Conquest over a Person, so much younger, and more unexperienced than themselves; but after the Exchange of several Letters with each of them, in their respective Ways, they were convinced of their Mistake, in thinking, that he had Zeal without Knowledge. They found him wise above his Years, of solid Learning and sound Judgment: Inasmuch, that they are credibly reported, both of them, to have confessed their Surprise, at the ready and ingenious Answers they received from him. Upon this they forbore to assault him any more openly, endeavouring to discredit him by sly Insinuations, and invidious Reflections upon his Preaching.

HE had delivered two Funeral Sermons in the Years 1687 and 1689, at which great Offence was taken, and Clamours raised by the Friends of the Separation: Some Misreports concerning the former of these Discourses, he had Reason to believe, were partly owing to one of the Teachers above-mentioned. Out of Regard, therefore, to his own injured Reputation, he wrote three Letters to that Gentleman, and being able to draw only some doubtful Answers to the two first, and none at all to the last, he was in the End obliged to print both the Sermons together, and gave the Reasons for their Publication in the Preface.

SOME Years after, the like ungenerous Treatment obliged Mr. Smith to print two other Sermons, preached at his own Parish Church the Sunday before the Election of Burgesses to serve in Parliament for that Corporation, in the Year 1698: These Sermons, in which he recommended Steadiness in Religion, and Zeal for the Interest of the established Church, underwent so much Censure from those, who were disaffected, or very coolly affected to it, that he was obliged to make them publick; and to these he added a Letter to a Friend, (Mr. Archdeacon Burscough) in which he endeavoured to refute those, who ignorantly, or else maliciously affirm, that the only Difference between the Church and the Meeting-house is, that of a few Ceremonies.

IN the Year 1701, he put to the Press a Treatise, giving an Account of the Nature and Guilt of Schism, being a Defence of Mr. Burscough's Discourse on that Subject: To which he added some Passages out of Mr. Flavel's Fountain of Life opened, recommending to the Consideration of those, who should have the Care of the new Edition of his Works, that they may either reconcile them to the Holy Scriptures, or else expunge them.

THESE important Services to the established Church recommended Mr. Smith to the Notice of his Bishop, Sir Jonathan Trelawney, and to the Esteem of his Brethren of the Clergy in that large Diocese: Of this the former gave a handsome Testimony, by collating him to a Prebend in the Cathedral of Exeter, in September of the Year 1703; and the latter, by chusing him one of their Representatives in Convocation, though he did not very long survive the Honour hereby done him.

^a This Gentleman, at the Desire of his Brother, and my very good Friend, Dr. Holdsworth, of Chalfont, St. Peter's, in Buckinghamshire, supplied me with these Particulars concerning Mr. Smith.

HIS last publick Work, was a Sermon preach'd at Totness, at the Visitation of the Arch-deacon of that Place, May 17, 1708, and printed, at his, and the Clergy's joint Request. The Title of it was, The divine Authority and Usefulness of Church Censures asserted.

FROM this Time, a consumptive Disorder increasing upon him, he died, Nov. 17, 1708.

By his last Will, he left an Estate of his in Trust, after the Decease of his Widow, for raising 1000 Pounds towards the Augmentation of small Benefices; and by a Schedule annexed thereto, he ordered, that all the Papers he had received from Mr. Edward Pocock, should be returned to him, and with them, so much of Dr. Pocock's Life, as had been already written by him; which was accordingly performed, save that some of the Papers being lost, or mislaid, never came to hand.

AFTER this, the Design, for want of sufficient Materials, lay dormant many Years; and that it ever was resumed, is owing to the Care and Goodness of a worthy Gentleman, Thomas Rawlin, Esq; of Pophills in Warwickshire, Nephew and Executor to Dr. Charlett, who, among his Uncle's Papers, after his Decease, found the Letters before-mentioned, and most obligingly communicated them to the Reverend Mr. John Pocock, Grandson to the great Professor, and Rector of Minall near Marlborough, in Wilts, who pressed me to fill up and compleat what Mr. Smith had so happily begun. Thus much for the Life.

AS to the present Edition of Dr. Pocock's Theological Works, a very learned and eminent Person, whom I consulted about the Life, propos'd to me, to re-publish his Commentaries, and Porta Moysi, which were become exceeding scarce, and consequently very dear; and as that Gentleman's Advice, with me, has always had the Force of a Command, I readily complied with it; and having obtained the Consent of Mr. Pocock, the Proprietor of the several Copies, I, without Loss of Time, set about it.

MY Proposals for printing the Work, through the Assistance of my Friends in London, the two Universities, and elsewhere, in a competent Time, brought in Subscriptions enough to encourage the putting it to the Press. But I should be chargeable with Ingratitude, if I did not, in an especial Manner, own the high Obligations I have to the Right Honourable the Lord Bruce, to whose powerful Sollicitations, I owe the greatest Part of my illustrious Subscribers; nor must I neglect this Opportunity of acknowledging the many other Honours and Courtesies, which that noble Lord has for several Years heaped upon me.

MY next Concern was to get a proper Person to correct the Press. The Distance of my Habitation at that Time from it, and in some Respects, my own Insufficiency, gave me no small Uneasiness. But here I was happily, and I may say providentially, relieved by the uncommon Generosity of the very Learned and Reverend Mr. Hunt, Chaplain to the Right Honourable the Earl of Macclesfield, and now a worthy Successor to our Professor in the Arabick Chair at Oxford. This Gentleman, then unknown to me, hearing of my Distress, out of his great Humanity, just Regard to the Memory of our Author, and Zeal for promoting sacred Knowledge, voluntarily offered his gratuitous Help, which he hath, with unwearied Patience and Chearfulness, afforded us throughout the Impression. And if this Edition shall appear incomparably more correct than the former, as I doubt not but it will, the World knows to whom it is principally indebted for that Advantage.

THE Reader is further to know, that the Arabick Types were kindly supplied by The Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, through an Application made to them, by the Reverend and Learned Mr. Arthur Bedford, of Hoxton.

MR. Hunt had not proceeded far in correcting the Press, before he found the Errors in the former Edition of the Commentaries, especially in the Notes, and Marks of Reference, so very numerous, as greatly retarded the Work. Of this he justly made his Complaints to me, and finding upon Enquiry, that most of the original Copy of the Commentaries had been preserved in the Author's own Hand-writing, it was the easier to correct them, though collating so large a Work, was no small Expence of Time and Pains to me. Some Parts, however, of Micah were missing in the Original, to which Accident it must be imputed, that one or two of the Notes and References in that Commentary, are less correct than the rest. Of this, however, I am confident, that by the Help of the original Papers, I corrected more than a thousand Errors, chiefly in the Notes; and Mr. Hunt assures me, that he amended more than twice that Number in the Text. We cannot say from what the Incorrectness of the former Edition proceeded, but most probably it was owing to the Negligence of the Person, whom Dr. Pocock trusted with correcting after the Press. Thus the Work proceeded with all the Expedition which the Nature of it would admit of, and had been published much sooner, if I could have been more forward with the Life of the Author; which I most certainly had been, but for my unforeseen Removal to Town, and the Engagements I came under in consequence of that Change. Not expecting any extraordinary Interruption, I reserved the Life to the last, in Hopes that Time would bring in more Materials, which has protracted the Delivery of the Books, and for which I heartily beg Pardon of the Publick. All I can say for myself is, that the Delay has not been affected, and that I have spared no Pains to perfect the Edition, as far as it was in my Power. The compiling of a new general Index, was a Task equally laborious and illiberal; and the accommodating that, and the other Indexes, to the Difference of Pages in the new Impression, was both tedious and unpleasant; but all that I shall esteem as nothing, if the World will but accept my good Intentions, and forgive all Failings.

IT may seem strange to some, that the Works of so learned and famous a Writer as Dr. Pocock, at least his Theological ones, were never jointly printed before; but such may please to know, that Sebastian Petzoldus, Librarian extraordinary to the Elector of Brandenburg, in the Year 1700, was preparing an Edition of all Dr. Pocock's Works in Folio, at Amsterdam, of which Notice was given in the Works of the Learned, for the Month of February, that Year; but of this Design, and of the Causes of its Miscarriage, I can say no more. All that has been actually done, in whole, or in part, towards a Republication of our Author's Works, is, that a second Edition of his Commentaries on Micah and Malachi, was printed at the Theatre in Oxford, the Year after his Death; and in the Year 1695, was printed at Leipzig, a Latin Translation of his Commentary upon Joel, to which, besides what belongs to that Commentary, is prefix'd, the Preface to Micah.

I HAVE now nothing more to add, but my humble Thanks to those worthy Friends of mine, who assisted in procuring Subscriptions to this Work. They are too numerous to be particularly mentioned, and too deserving utterly to be pass'd over in Silence.

Of the Reverend and Most Learned

SECTION I.

DR. Pocock was born on the eighth Day of November, in the Year of our Lord 1604. He was the Son of Mr. Edward Pocock, Bachelor of Divinity, some Time Fellow of St. Mary Magdalen-College in Oxford, but then Vicar of Chiewely in Berks. It happened, that the Place of his Birth, was that, wherein he was to spend the greatest Part of his Life. For his Father having been lately presented to the Vicarage before mentioned, could not yet order his Affairs to settle upon it, but was forced, it seems, for some Time, to leave his Family in Oxford; and there, within the Parish of St. Peter's in the West, this his eldest Son Edward was born.

His Infancy discovered such promising Parts, as easily drew his Parents to dedicate him to Religion and Learning: And for that Purpose he was early sent to the Free-School at Tame in Oxfordshire. The School-master there, to whose Care he was committed, was Mr. Richard Butcher, Bachelor of Law, a Man of great Accuracy in Grammatical Learning, whose Skill and Industry the Doctor, even in his old Age, would often very gratefully remember. The Diligence of that worthy Person; meeting with an extraordinary Capacity in this his Scholar, was blessed with a more than common Success: For he was no sooner come to the Age of fourteen Years, but he was thought fit for the University; and accordingly, being brought to Oxford, he was entered in Magdalen-Hall: And after two Years Stay in that Place, his Merits recommended him, upon a strict Examination, to a Scholar's Place in Corpus-Christi College, to which he was admitted, Dec. 11, 1620.

By all our Enquiries we cannot learn who was his Tutor in the Hall, but are assured, by a late Writer*, that Mr. Gamaliel Chafe, Bachelor of Divinity, and Fellow of Corpus-Christi, was his Tutor in that College. Of whom the same Author^b gives this Character. 'He was a Man of great Piety, and of deep and sound Learning; insomuch that he was justly intitled to the Character of a great Man.' Afterwards, as we learn from the same Hand, he became Rector of Wanbrook in Dorsetshire, and Vicar of Warcomb in Devon, both which he lost, in the Grand Rebellion, for his Adherence to the King and the Church. At the same Time, his temporal Estate of 100*l. per Annum*, was sequestered, his Wife and seven Children exposed to the greatest Necessities, and his Goods, not excepting his Books and Papers, entirely carried away, and himself imprisoned. He survived the Restoration many Years, was restored to both his Preferments, and died not till about the Year 1680. It is not to be wondered at, if, under such Direction, Mr. Pocock imbibed those Sentiments of Religion and Loyalty, which distinguished him in the future Conduct of his Life; and still less, that he made a very considerable Progress in his Studies. He soon appeared eminent in all those Parts of Learning, which are commonly taught in Universities. To those Arts and Sciences, which the ordinary Discipline obliged him to be acquainted with, he added the Knowledge of the best Writers, both Greek and Roman. For in some Papers, written by him when very young, there are such Observations out of Quintilian, Cicero, Plutarch, Plato, and other Authors, as speak a great deal of Skill and Judgment. And there are too, in the same Papers, the Marks of a mighty Industry: For it being sometimes his Custom, to note the Time, when he began the Perusal of any Treatise, it thereby appears, that the reading and considering that whole Dialogue de Oratoribus, by some ascribed to Tacitus, but commonly printed with Quintilian's Works, was the Business only of one Day.

ON Nov. 28, 1622. being but very little more than eighteen Years old, he was admitted to the Degree of Bachelor of Arts. And, having already made a considerable Progress in the ordinary Paths of Learning, he began in a short Time to betake himself to some of the more retired, and untrodden Walks of it; applying his Mind, with great Diligence, to the Study of the Eastern Languages. For which, he had the Advantage of a skilful Director, in Matthias Pasor, a German, the Son of George Pasor, a learned Professor at Herborn, the Author of the Greek Lexicon to the New Testament. This Matthias Pasor, having been Professor of Mathematicks in the University of Heidelberg, whence he was driven by the late Troubles which befel the Palatinate,^c came to Oxford, and there being incorporated Master of Arts, as he had stood at Heidelberg^d, for his Maintenance, he not only taught in a private Chamber, the Sciences he had professed in his own Country; but also the Oriental Tongues, reading for some Time an Arabick Lecture twice a Week publicly in the Divinity School, upon the Encouragement of a Pension collected from his Auditors. Dr. Pocock would, upon all Occasions, express a great Regard to the Memory of this Person, whom he was wont frequently to commend, as for a very learned, so likewise for a very honest and good Man. He was Scholar to him for Languages, at the same Time that the late^e Lord Radnor was for Mathematicks.

THE Statutes of the College requiring some Delay, he did not take the Degree of Master of Arts till March 28, 1626. And soon after that, I suppose it was, that being arriv'd at as great a Height in Oriental Learning, as Mr. Pasor could lead him to, he applied himself for farther Instruction to Mr. William Bedwell, Vicar of Tottenham High-Cross, near London: A Person, to whom the Praise of being the first who considerably promoted the Study of the Arabick Language in Europe, may perhaps more justly belong, than to Thomas Erpenius, who commonly has it. This Mr. Bedwell had made a vast Progress in the Knowledge of that Tongue, before Erpenius had any Name in the World for Skill in it. And as the latter spent some Time in England, about the Year 1606, he was obliged to the former for many Directions, which he received from him in that Sort of Learning. Besides several Books, which Mr. Bedwell published relating to it, he employed himself many Years in preparing an Arabick Lexicon in three Volumes; and, was at the Pains of a Voyage into Holland, to peruse the Papers of Joseph Scaliger, who had made a Collection, as he declar'd himself^f, of twenty thousand Words in that Language. But being, as^g Isaac Casaubon complained of him, slow in his Proceeding, doubtless out of a Desire that the great Work he was engaged in, should be as perfect as might be; at length, Goliath's Undertaking of the same Kind, who had furnished himself to the best Advantage from the East, made the Publication of it useless.

MR. Pocock profited much under the Instructions of this learned Man; and, the Advances he made in several uncommon Sorts of Literature, could not but meet with Encouragement from that learned Society, whereof he was a Member; who, as a Proof of their just Regard for him, admitted him Probationer Fellow, July 24, 1628. And now the Statutes of the College providing that he should speedily enter into holy Orders, it was high Time for him to add the Study of Theology to his former Acquirements, which were only preparatory for it. And this, I cannot doubt but he betook himself to, in the Method, which had been, some Years before, recommended to the University of Oxford, by that learned and judicious Prince, King James I.^h namely, not by insisting on modern Compendiums and Tracts of Divinity, but by applying himself chiefly to Fathers and Councils, Ecclesiastical Historians and other antient Writers, together with the sacred Text, the Word of God. For tho' he perus'd the Books of some late Writers in Divinity, it was not, I find, to form his Notions in Matters of Religion, according to their Conceptions and Opinions, but to take their Direction about several Pieces of Antiquity, in order to a general Knowledge of their Nature and Excellency, and to distinguish the genuine, from such as are of doubtful Original, or manifestly spurious. This, in particular, I learn from some Papers begun to be written by him, Sept. 7, 1629, was the Use he made of a Treatise of some Account, then reprinted at Oxford, namely, Ger. Vossius's Theses Theologicae, out of which he collected several Things of this Nature, and of no other.

BUT amidst his Theological Studies, it was impossible for him to lay aside all Regard for those Eastern Languages, to which his Mind was so addicted, and on which he had bestowed so much Time and Pains. He therefore, about this Time, pursued a Design, wherein both were join'd together, and that was, the fitting for the Press those Parts of the Syriack Version of the New Testament, which had never yet been published. Ignatius, the Jacobite Patriarch of Antioch, had, in the last Age, sent Moses Meridineus, a Priest of Mesopotamia, into the West, to get that Version printed, in order to the carrying back a sufficient Number of Copies, for the Use of his Churches. And this Work, by the Care and Diligence of Albertus Widmanstadius, was very well performed at Vienna, A. D. 1555. But the Syriack New Testament, thus brought out of the East, and followed in that Impression, wanted the second Epistle of St. Peter, the second and third Epistles of St. John, the Epistle of St. Jude, and the whole whole Book of the Revelation: Because, as a learned Manⁱ conjectures, those Parts of Holy Scripture, tho' extant amongst them, were not yet received into the Canon, by those Oriental Churches. This Defect no Body took Care to supply, till that very learned Person, Ludovicus de Dieu, on the Encouragement and with the Assistance of Daniel Heinsius, set about the Revelation; being furnished with a Copy of it, which had been given with many other Manuscripts, to the University of Leyden, by the famous Joseph Scaliger. That Version of the Apocalypse was printed at Leyden, in the Year 1627. but still the four Epistles were wanting, and those Mr. Pocock undertakes, being desirous that the whole New Testament might at length be published in that Language, which was the Vulgar Tongue of our Blessed Saviour himself and his holy Apostles. A very fair Manuscript for this Purpose he had met with in that vast Treasure of Learning, the Bodleian Library; containing those Epistles, together with some other Parts of the New Testament. Out of this Manuscript, following the Example of de Dieu, he transcribed those Epistles in the Syriack Character; the same he likewise set down in Hebrew Letters, adding the Points, not according to the Ordinary, but the Syriack Rules, as they had been delivered by those learned Maronites, Amira and Sionita. He also made a new Translation of these Epistles, out of Syriack into Latin, comparing it with that of Etzelius, and shewing, upon all considerable Occasions, the Reason of his Dissent from him. Moreover, he added the Original Greek, concluding the Whole with a good Number of learned and useful Notes.

THIS Work was finished by him, when he was yet but four and twenty Years old; and, tho' he performed it with the utmost Care and Exactness, yet so great was his Modesty and Distrust of himself, that he could not be persuaded to think it fit for Publication, till after it had lain by him about a Year, when he suffered it to be printed upon the following Occasion:

GERARD John Vossius, at this Time a Professor at Leyden, being of great Fame throughout the World for his extraordinary Learning, had a particular Respect paid him by some of the Nobility, and many learned Men of the English Nation^k. He had published several excellent Books, particularly his Pelagian History: Wherein, as he had expressed more Temper and Moderation, than some of his Countrymen, so he manifested a just Esteem for Ecclesiastical Antiquity, which no Church in the World had a truer Regard for, than that of England. Being on these Accounts much valued by his Friends in this Nation, he had some Time since been earnestly pressed to accept of a Professor's Place, with a very honourable Salary, in the University of Cambridge; and now, was invited by a Message from his Majesty King Charles I. to a Prebend in the Church of Canterbury. The first of these Offers he had refused, as not agreeing with his Circumstances, which would not admit of a Remove from his own Country: But the latter he readily closed with, having been assured that Residence would not be expected from him. To be installed in this Prebend, he comes into England; and there making a Visit to the University of Oxford, where he was receiv'd with all the Marks of a very great Esteem, he spent much of his Time, during his Stay, in viewing the Manuscripts, and other Rarities of the publick Library. Amongst other Things, he took particular Notice of the Syriack Manuscript of the Epistles, which gave Occasion to Mr. John Rouse, the chief Librarian, to acquaint him with Mr. Pocock's Performance. Vossius, being extremely pleased with what he thus heard, desir'd to see both the Author and the Work. And, after much Discourse with him, and a diligent Examination of that, he made it his earnest Request, that what so well deserved to see the Light, should no longer be kept in Darkness.

Mr. Pocock was overcome by the Persuasions of a Man, against whose Judgment he could have no Exception. And being also further encouraged by the Promise he made, that it should, by his Procurement, be carefully printed in Holland, he presently took Care to add a Preface and a Dedication. And the Patron he made Choice of was Vossius himself, to whom he addressed this Work in Terms of much Deference and Respect. Vossius, upon his Arrival at Leyden, committed the Care of the Edition to the learned Ludovicus de Dieu, who gladly received Mr. Pocock's Papers, and after a diligent Perusal of them, wrote to him, highly commending the Fidelity of his Transcript, the Justness of his Version, and the Learning of his Notes. At the same Time he proposes several Emendations in the Pointing of the Hebrew Character, and one in that of the Syriack, together with two Alterations in the Latin Version, and likewise one additional Note, intending to delay the Impression, till he could receive Mr. Pocock's Answer, without whose Consent, he resolved, as himself expresses it, to interpolate nothing. After that was come to hand, de Dieu put the Epistles to the Press, and when the Edition was finished, he wrote a second Time to Mr. Pocock; and congratulates him on that Occasion. From this second Letter it appears, that the Reply to the first brought Consent to most of the desired Amendments. And accordingly all of them, except three, stand, as proposed, in the printed Work. Besides which, de Dieu had a Commission to make what further Alterations he should find expedient. In Pursuance of which he proceeded to other Emendations with Vossius's Advice, in Number six, of which he gives an Account in his second Letter, with his Reasons for each of them: They all concerned the Latin Version. The Edition being thus finished, a considerable Number of Copies were sent, by Vossius, as a Present to the Author at Oxford, together with due Acknowledgments of the Usefulness of the Work, and of the Affection and Honour expressed in the Dedication. And, indeed, that most learned Man entertain'd on this Occasion, such a Value for Mr. Pocock, that, tho' he was thirty Years older, and a Sort of Dictator in the Common-wealth of Learning, he treated him ever after with all the Kindness and Familiarity of a Friend. He corresponded with him by frequent Letters, some of which have been made publick¹; he presented him with the Books he published; and, upon all Occasions, made honourable mention of him to the Day of his Death.

SOME Time in the Year 1629, Mr. Charles Robson of Queen's College in Oxford, returned from being Chaplain to the English Merchants at Aleppo, and the Vacancy thereby made, Mr. Pocock was appointed to fill, being now in holy Orders. That of Priest was conferred on him by Richard Corbett, Bishop of Oxford, Dec. 20, 1629. By whom also he had some Time before been made a Deacon. We cannot say, to whom it was Mr. Pocock was indebted for his last mentioned Preferment. Bishop Laud was in himself a most observing and munificent Patron of Learning, and being then Bishop of London, had the Direction of religious Affairs abroad. On both which Accounts he might naturally be suppos'd to have recommended him to that Post, were it not that the first Letter written by that Prelate to Mr. Pocock at Aleppo, and dated, Oct. 30, 1631, plainly discovers that they had then no Acquaintance with each other: And that the Bishop having no Interest of his own in the Chaplain at Aleppo, wrote to him in the Strength of Mr. Bedwell's Acquaintance.

I CANNOT meet with any Account of the Circumstances of his Departure from England, nor of his Voyage, till he came to Scanderoon; where having been long at Sea, he arrived, I find, Oct. 14, 1630, and came three Days after to Aleppo. Being a Man of a meek and humble Temper, and naturally in Love with Retirement and Peace, he did not (as many Travellers do) carry with him a violent Desire of viewing strange Countries. Nay, he was so far from being delighted, either with what he had already seen, or the Place where he was now settled; that in a Letter, written about two Months after his Arrival, to Mr. Thomas Greaves, a very studious young Man, then Scholar of Corpus-Christi, he gave but a very melancholy Account of himself. 'My chief Solace, said he, is the Remembrance of my Friends, and my former Happiness, when I was among them. Happy you that enjoy those Places, where I so often wish myself, as I see the barbarous People of this Country. I think that he that hath once been out of England, if he get home, will not easily be persuaded to leave it again. There is nothing that may make a Man envy a Traveller.' However, being abroad, he resolved that his natural Aversion for such a Kind of Life, should not make him neglect the doing any Thing in the Post he was in, which was either his Duty to God, or might answer the Expectation of good and learned Men.

ABOVE all other Things he carefully applied himself to the Business of his Place, as Chaplain to the Factory; performing the solemn Duties of Religion in that decent and orderly Manner, which our Church requires. He was diligent in Preaching, exhorting his Countrymen, in a plain, but very convincing Way, to Piety, Temperance, Justice and Love, and all those Christian Virtues or Graces, which would both secure to them the Favour and Protection of the Almighty, and also adorn their Conversation, rendering it comely in the Sight of an unbelieving Nation. And what he labour'd to persuade others to, he duly practis'd himself; proposing to his Hearers, in his own regular and unspotted Life, a bright Example of the Holiness he recommended.

As he was seldom or never drawn from the constant Performance of these Duties of his Charge, by a Curiosity tempting him to the View of other Places of that Country, so he would not omit what belong'd to his Office, even when attended with a very affrighting Danger. For in the Year 1634, as the Plague raged furiously in Aleppo, and many of the Merchants fled two Days Journey from it, and dwelt in Tents on the Mountains; he had that holy Confidence in the Providence of God, and that Readiness to meet his good Pleasure, whatever it should be, that tho' he visited them that were in the Country, he, for the most Part, continued to assist and comfort those who had shut up themselves in the City. And indeed, the Mercy of God (as he most thankfully acknowledged, in a Letter sent a little after to a Friend in Oxford) was signally manifested, at that Time, towards him, and all our Nation belonging to that Factory. For tho' the Pestilence wasted beyond the Example of former Times, not ceasing, as usually, at the Entrance of the Dog-Days, all the English were preserved, as well they that continued in the Town, as they that fled from it. God covered them with his Protection, and was their Shield and Buckler against that terrible Destruction: A Thousand fell at their Side, and Thousands at their Right-hand, and yet it did not come nigh them.

DURING his Abode at this very melancholy Place (for so he always considered it) he diverted himself sometimes with philosophical Inquiries into those Works of Nature, which were not to be met with in his own Country. For, I find, in a Letter of his to Mr. Thomas Greaves, a short Description of the Wonders of the Chameleon, and yet in some Respects as accurate as that of the Anatomists at Paris^m; together with a Promise of further Observations, tions, as he should have an Opportunity to make them. He noted the several Colours, into which he saw that Animal change itself; which were chiefly such as are mingled of Green and Yellow. All Sorts of Green, from the darkest to the lightest, he observed it to take; and sometimes with Spots, one while blackish, another ash-coloured. And as for that Mistake of Pliny^a and some other of the Ancients, that it neither eats nor drinks, but lives wholly upon Air; he beheld the Confutation of it, as it darted out a long sharp Tongue and caught Flies: And, was assur'd by the Gardeners, that it frequently did Mischief to some of their Plants. However, tho' this Creature, as well as others, is supported by Food; he was convinced, as he kept it in a Box, that it could live indeed a considerable Time without any, at the least, several Months.

BUT, as well became a Divine and a Christian Philosopher, his Inquiries of this Kind were chiefly made into those Productions of Nature and Art, the Knowledge of which might give Light to some difficult Places of Holy Scripture. He was now in that Part of the World, wherein most of the sacred Penmen wrote; and he could not therefore but conclude, that a true Account of several Things of it, which they have referr'd to, might explain some Passages in those holy Writings; which have not yet, by many Interpreters, been very well understood. And, it will not, I suppose, be thought tedious, if I set down two or three Observations of this Kind, which are to be met with, among others, in his Papers and printed Books.

THERE are a Sort of Creatures mentioned in the Old Testament, which most Translators render by the Name of Dragons, tho' the Property there ascribed to them will not agree to the Nature of those Animals. For we read in the Books of Naturalists and Historians, of no other Noise made by Dragons, but only that of Hissing; whereas in most Versions, at Micah i. 8. we meet with the Howling or Wailing of Dragons. This Difficulty the learned Bochartus^o endeavoured to solve, from a particular Fancy of some of the antient Jews, who suppos'd the erecting the Heads, and opening the Mouths of those Creatures, to be a Sort of Lamentation to God, for the Lot that was befallen them. But the Observations made by Mr. Pocock, of those Animals, call'd Jakales, or, according to the Turkish Pronunciation, Chacales, led him to agree with the antient Syriack Version, and an Arab one of Rabbi Saadias, in supposing that these are meant, and not Dragons, in that and some other Places of Scripture. They are, as he describes them^p, a Kind of wild Dogs, between a Fox and a Wolf; and the Noise they make, is such as none that travel in those Parts in the Night, can be ignorant of. For abiding in the Fields and waste Places, they howl so lamentably, that Persons unacquainted with them, would conclude that a Company of Women and Children were wailing one to another. In this he was the more confirm'd by some Manuscript Notes of Rabbi Tanchum of Jerusalem, a learned Jew, who wrote on the whole Old Testament in Arabick, Part of which Mr. Pocock procured from the East. He observes it for an Error in Expositors, that in this and some other Places they render Dragons, where they should render Jakales. The Reason of which Mistake, he saith, is, that the Word which signifieth Jakales, in the Plural Number, is, in Writing, the same with that which signifieth a Dragon in the Singular, both Tannin. To prevent therefore this Mistake, Mr. Pocock lays down this Rule: That wheresoever we meet with Tannim, or Tannin, or Tannoith, as Plurals, they signify those howling wild Beasts, inhabiting waste desolate Places: But where Tannim or Tannin in the Singular, or Tanninim in the Plural, they are to be rendered Dragons, or Serpents, or Sea-monsters, or Whales, according as they are spoken of Creatures on Land or in the Water.

THESE Jakales are so ravenous, that they will prey on dead Bodies, yea dig them out of their Graves, if not well covered. For which Reason he thinks^q these Animals are meant, not only, Psalms xlv. 19. by Tannim, which we and others translate Dragons; but also, Psalms lxiii. 10. by Sbualim, which we render Foxes. The Name Jakale, he says, is borrowed from the Persian Language, in which it is written Shegal, and is from the Hebrew Sbual, which Word may comprehend both those Kinds, which are not very different from each other.

NOT a few Passages we have also in Scripture, relating to the Thrasbing of Corn, which to him that only considers the Customs in that Matter, of common Use in these Parts, will appear very hard to be understood. We there read of thrasbing with Instruments of Iron, of thrasbing the Mountains, and beating them small, and making the Hills as Chaff, with a new sharp thrasbing Instrument having Teeth, as also of thrasbing with Oxen and Heifers, with a Cart-Wheel, and with Horsemen. And when the Daughter of Zion is commanded to arise and thrasb her Enemies, who should be gathered as Sheaves into the Floor; she was, we read, to be provided with Hoofs of Brasses to beat them in Pieces. In some other Places also, thrasbing and cutting seem to be the same Thing; as when the Heathen were to be assembled together, for a terrible Destruction, in the Valley of Jehoshaphat, after the Preparation for the following Thrasbing or Execution, by putting the Sickle into the Harvest, the Place of it is called the Valley of Decision, or Concision, of Thrasbing or Cutting asunder. Now certainly, the Usage among us of beating out Corn with a Flail, will give us no just Idea of the true Meaning of such such Expressions as these. Whereas, what Mr. Pocock observed of the Customs of those Eastern People, makes them plain and intelligible: For he tells us, * that the Harvest being over, they lay the Sheaves in order, on a large Floor or Plain, made fit for that Purpose in the open Field, and there cause their Oxen, or other Beasts, to draw over the Sheaves, so dispos'd, either an Instrument made of heavy Planks of Wood, with sharp Stones, or Flints, driven into it, or else two Iron Wheels dented with sharp Teeth, and coupled with an Axletree or Beam of Wood; and that this Labour is not ended, till both the Grain is divided from the Husk, and the Straw cut into small Pieces; the latter being designed for proper Repositories, such as Caves, or dry Wells, where it is kept to feed their Cattle, as the former is for the Granary.

SEVERAL Years after his Return into England, some Letters passed between him and Dr. Hammond, whilst that very learned and pious Man was preparing his excellent Paraphrase and Annotations on the New Testament, concerning that Instrument used in the East, for purging or cleansing the Floor, which in our Translation is stiled a Fan. Being said in Scripture to be carried in the Hand, it cannot well be suppos'd to be any Contrivance of Sails, whereby to throw off the Dust, and therefore was rationally concluded by Mr. Pocock (whose Opinion was followed by Dr. Hammond) both from the Signification of the original Word, and those Words it is rendered by in Syriack and Arabick, to be a Kind of Trident, made use of after the Threshing was over, by raising or tossing up the Straw and Chaff, to separate them from the Corn; or else a Sort of Shovel, which would produce the same Effect, by throwing the whole Heap in small Parcels, to a good Distance, through the Air.

SUCH Remarks as these, so useful for understanding the sacred Text, he was careful to make, as he met with convenient Opportunities for them. But another Business there was, in which he daily employed himself; and which indeed took up the greatest Part of that Time, which he could spare from the necessary Duties of Religion; and that was, the labouring to arrive at what Perfection he could in the Knowledge of the Eastern Languages.

SOON after his coming to Aleppo, he endeavoured, by the Assistance of the Jews he found there, to obtain greater Accuracy in Hebrew, entertaining one Rabbi Samuel for this Purpose, to whom he allowed a good Stipend by the Month, and afterwards applying himself to some others. But it was not long, before he was fully convinc'd, that this Attempt would be altogether fruitless: For, the Stupidity of some of those wretched People was so great, that they could not, and the Envy of others so mischievous, that they would not, afford any considerable Direction.

IT appears too, from some Papers written by him in this Place, that he made use of such Opportunities as he there met with, of improving his Skill in Syriack: For they contain several Grammatical Collections relating to that Language, as also a Praxis in it, on some Parts of Holy Scripture. The same Way, it is also manifest, that he then studied the Ethiopic Tongue, and furnish'd himself, either from Masters or Books, with proper Rules whereby to understand it.

BUT Arabick, the most learned and general Language of the East, was the Subject of his greatest Industry and Application; for farther Instruction in which, he agreed with a Sheich or Doctor, call'd Phatallah, to come to him frequently, and entertain'd, as a Servant, by the Year, one Hamet, chiefly for this End, I suppose, that he might on every Occasion converse familiarly in it. With this Assistance, to obtain Exactness in a Tongue so very difficult, he furnish'd himself, as appears from his Papers, with many Grammatical Observations, and made sundry Collections out of Lexicographers and other Authors, which he there met with. He also read the Alcoran of that Impostor Mahomet, with great Care and a critical Diligence; a Book, the Contrivance of which, was held to be so great a Miracle ^u by the Author of it, and is so still by his Followers; and which indeed, as a very good Judge informs us, ^{*} bating the Folly, the Confusedness and Incoherency of the Matter contain'd therein, is, as to the Style and Language, the Standard of Elegancy in the Arab Tongue. Another very useful Exercise for the same Purpose, on which he then bestowed much Pains and Time, was the translating several Arabick Books. And the chief of these was a vast Collection he there procur'd, of six thousand Proverbs, containing the Wisdom of the Arabians, and referring to the most remarkable Passages of their History. This he turn'd into Latin, adding some Notes for Explication, with a Design, as he seem'd to tell his Friend Ger. Vossius, ^v to publish the Whole after his Return into England. By such a continued Labour and Study, he at length overcame, in a great Measure, all the Difficulties of this copious Language; and that to such a Degree, that he spake it with as much Ease, as his Mother-Tongue, and so well understood the Criticism and Niceties of it, that his Sheich pronounced him a Master in it, in no Sort inferior to the Mufti of Aleppo.

THO' what has been already mentioned, was a great deal of Work, it was not the only Employment he had at this Place. As he now resided on a Factory, so he was concern'd in a Sort of Merchandize: Not that of buying up Silks and other Ornaments to furnish the Pride and and Luxury of Europe, or any other Traffick that might issue in a plentiful Increase of Wealth; but the purchasing far more precious and valuable Wares, even the Learning and Knowledge contain'd in the Books of those Eastern Nations. Jacobus Golius, a very learned Professor of Arabick and Mathematicks, in the University of Leyden, was now very lately return'd out of Syria, bringing with him a great many Manuscripts of good Account, which he had procur'd in those Parts; and tho' Mr. Pocock had the Disadvantage of coming after, he resolv'd, that, if Diligence could effect it, his Abode there should not be of less Use to the Commonwealth of Learning. He bought up whatever Manuscripts of any Value, in any Language, he could meet with at Aleppo, and employed his Friends there, to procure the like from other Places, waiting the Opportunities of the Caravans from Persia, and other Countries. When he could not obtain the Books themselves, he took Care to have them exactly transcribed. And because, amongst the Rubbish, as he call'd it, of the Jews, there were many considerable Things; especially, such as had been formerly written by their learned Men in Arabick, when that Tongue was more in Request among them: He employ'd several Brokers to get some of these out of their Hands. For he was well assur'd, that tho' the Jews were either so ignorant, as not to understand them, or else so sottish, as not to make use of them, they would not part with them to one, whom they knew to be a Christian.

As he thus dealt in Books for his own private Use, and at his own Expence; so he had a Commission from Bishop Laud (in a Letter dated, Oct. 30, 1631.) then of London, desiring he would buy for him such antient Greek Coins, and such Manuscripts, either in Greek or the Oriental Languages, as in his Judgment may best besit an University Library. From whence it appears, that this excellent Man (as Lord Clarendon deservedly styles him) had then designed those noble Benefactions, which he afterwards bestowed on the Bodleian Library at Oxford. Whether the Arabick, Persian, Hebrew, Armenian, Ethiopick, and other Manuscripts given by him to that University, in the Years 1635 and 1636, were any of them procur'd by Mr. Pocock, I am not able certainly to say. I find a Letter of that Prelate's, then made Archbishop of Canterbury, dated, May 21, 1634. to Mr. Pocock, in which he thanks him for Greek Coins, but mentions no Books. Nay, he intimates, that no such had been procur'd, by expressing, at the same Time, his Doubt, that the French and Venetians had rais'd the Price of Manuscripts, more than that of Coins. The Archbishop however continues to request of Mr. Pocock, 'that he would send him Word when there was Hopes of getting any good ones at a tolerable Rate.' To which he adds, 'I hope you will, before your Return, make yourself able to teach the Arabick Language.' From which we may assuredly gather, that his Grace had then entertain'd Thoughts of founding an Arabick Lecture at Oxford, and was resolv'd in the Choice of his first Lecturer.

THE Execution of this Project, about two Years after, furnish'd Mr. Pocock with an honourable Occasion of returning home and leaving Aleppo, after a Stay of five or six Years in that Place, with which he was never heartily pleas'd. The Archbishop, notwithstanding the Calumnies of his Enemies, had his Mind always full of the noblest Designs, and never thought any Thing too troublesome or too costly, that might be for the Service of Religion, the Benefit of the Poor, or the Advancement of Learning. Amongst his other Cares for the University of Oxford, he had often reflect'd on a considerable Defect there, relating to the Study of the learned Languages. King Henry VIII. in the five Lectures he instituted, took Care both for Greek and Hebrew. But Arabick, a learned and useful Language, was still unprovided for; and for carrying on the Study of this, Archbishop Laud resolves to establish a Lecture, and to encourage it with a considerable Stipend. With this Design he acquaints Mr. Pocock at Aleppo, telling him, in the Letter he sent to him for this Purpose, that he could do him no greater Honour, than to name him to the University for his first Professor; and ordering him, at the same Time, to hasten his Return, that he might undertake the Employment.

ON such Encouragement as this, there is no Doubt but that he cheerfully prepar'd for his Departure. But that which was Matter of Joy to him, was not a little grievous to his Friends in that Place. A kind and obliging Carriage, and a virtuous Life; a faithful Discharge of his Duty as a Minister, and a wonderful Diligence in several extraordinary Designs, could not but obtain from all the English there, at least from them that had any Sense of what was Praiseworthy, a great Respect and Deference. And the approaching Loss of the Advantages they reap'd from his pastoral Care, and of the Comfort and Satisfaction they had in his Company, must needs be to them a very sensible Affliction. Of this we may speak the more assuredly, from the Character given of Mr. Pocock, in a Letter to Mr. Selden, written from Aleppo, in the Year 1632, by Mr. Wandesford, then residing there.

'You commended, says he, a diligent and able Gentleman, Mr. Pocock, to me, who hath enabled himself very much in the Arab Tongue.—I have no other Comfort but in him for Converse. And indeed his Nature is so sweet and amicable, I owe much to you for the Commands you laid upon me to receive him.'

EVEN the Mahometans themselves, with whom he was acquainted, were so charm'd with his shining Virtue, his amazing Industry, and most agreeable Conversation, that they were extremely unwilling to part with him. Particularly his Sheich, or Master for Arabick, was so fond of him, that when he saw him resolv'd to be gone, he not only offer'd his Service, but express'd also a very earnest Desire to accompany him to England.

England. Nor did this Mahometan Doctor ever forget his excellent Scholar, even to the last Moment of his Life. For in the Year 1670. Mr. Huntington, in his first Letter to Mr. Pocock, from Aleppo, writes thus: ‘ Your old Sheich (who died several Years since) was always mindful of you, and expressed your Name with his last Breath. He was still telling the good Opinion he had of you, that you were a right honest Man; and that he did not doubt but to meet you in Paradise, under the Banner of our Jesus.’ And the poor Dervise Ahmed, perhaps the same Person with Hamet, before mentioned, doubtless expressed his Affection in such Strains of Oriental Eloquence, as are to be met with in the Epistles he afterwards sent to him; telling him, that his Love for him, was it embodied, would fill a thousand Rivers; that tho’ absent from his Eye, he should be still present in his Heart, from which no Distance should remove him; and wishing and praying the Peace of God to be with him, as long as the East Wind blows. And that the Reader may be diverted with some further Expressions of this Person’s Esteem and Love; and also be satisfied, that Mr. Pocock’s Endeavours for the Promotion of Learning, by procuring Manuscripts from the East, were not ended on his Return to Oxford, I will here subjoin one whole Letter, being the first that Ahmed sent to Mr. Pocock, after he left Aleppo, as it was translated out of the Original Arabick, by his eldest and very learned Son, Mr. Edward Pocock, late Rector of Mildenhall in Wiltshire.

To the Presence of that eminent Scholar, Pocock the Honoured,

‘ VERY fair are the Ornaments of Paper enrich’d with the Embroidery of Words; and very beautiful is that which the Point of the Pen draws forth from the Minds of Souls: Let Peace spread its sweet Smell like Amber, and display its Savour like Jessamine toward the Tract of that Country, whither he goes. Let God give Success to what he delights in and desires. Besides this, there came to us a much desired Letter, fairly writtten after the best Manner; and we were revived at its Coming, and satisfied at its sweet Aspect, beyond the Spring, and Smell of Flowers; and we know the Matter it contain’d, and what Answers you desired in it. And if you enquire concerning us, God be praised we are well and safe, and we trust in God, you are in like Manner: Only, since you left us, we have been as tho’ our own Brother had left us, or the Spirit which is in the Heart. And therefore, we had sincere Joy, when we heard the News of your Health, and of your Arrival in your Country; and we praise God, who brought you to your People in Health and Safety; for his Mercy is plentiful. We also give you to understand, that we have taken to Wife a Camel Woman riding on a Camel, that she may look after our Affairs. We have also gotten Echwan Sepba, which you saw formerly, fairly drawn for sixty Garshes; and we had not gotten it for that Price, unless Hieronimo had gotten it for us; for how we could buy that which I saw the Day that I went from Aleppo, you know. And, as for the History of Al Jannabi, the Kadi, of which I saw some Pieces, you told me that we should tarry till the transcribing it was finished, and when it was finished we should buy it, if the most high God please. The Commentary on Gubstan is also finished, which we will send you; and, if it please God, we will do our Endeavour to send you the History of Ebn Chalecan; and any Book that we shall see, which is convenient for you, we shall send to you. And you must needs send us an Answer to these Letters, and some little Token of what your Country affords. Send us also a printed Geography; and whatsoever Business you shall have in these Parts, send and let me know, that I may enjoy the Performance of it.’

The poor DERVISE AHMED.

SECTION II.

MR. Pocock having settled his Affairs at Aleppo, in order to his Return, soon had the Opportunity of a Ship to carry him home. During the former Part of his Voyage, he enjoyed the Company of a Person, who, tho’ he told sad Stories, was of a very entertaining Conversation. He was an old Dominican Frier, dispatcht out of the East to Rome, with a lamentable Account of the State of Christianity in India and China. And as he diverted Mr. Pocock with several Relations of the Learning and Customs of those remote Countries, so he made no Scruple to acquaint him with the Secrets of his Message; which was to complain of the Jesuits, and give a particular Account of the Abominations they were guilty of. Those wretched Apostles, who had boasted so much of vast Numbers of Profelytes, converted People indeed, but not to the Faith of Christ: To acknowledge the Pope’s Supremacy, and bear a great deal of Respect to their Order, were some of the chief Duties they recommended to those they preached to; and provided they would be hearty in such as these, any Thing else, which they were fond of, was easily dispensed with. They might, on such Terms, have as much Zeal as they pleas’d for Confucius, or retain any of their former Impieties: They might be still Pagans and Idolaters, and yet very good Catholicks. What Success this honest old Frier met with, when he came to Rome, I know not; but too manifest it is, that these Missionaries tionaries have still proceeded in the same Method; their Practices of this Kind having been, not very long since, under the Examination of the Inquisition.

THE Frier being set on Shore in Italy, the Ship continued her Voyage, and came safe into England; and Mr. Pocock having taken Care for the Landing and Conveyance of the learned Ware he brought with him, made what Haste he could to Oxford; where he was receiv'd with due Respect and Esteem from all; but by his old Friends, with all the Expressions of a very tender Affection: Principally, by Mr. Thomas Greaves, aforementioned; the eldest, Mr. John Greaves, being then still in Italy.

AFTER what was due to the Kindness of his Friends in Oxford, Mr. Pocock's next Business was, to make Preparation for his Degree of Bachelor in Divinity, which he was now persuaded to take. The Questions, on which he answered, in his Exercises on that Occasion, were these two: Whether Pilgrimages to Places, called Holy, undertaken on the Account of Religion, are to be approved? And, Whether there be any such Thing as Purgatory? And, as he defended the Negative of both these, so in his Explanation of them, he confirmed the Protestant Doctrine, about these Matters, in Opposition to the Opinions of Rome, with all imaginable Strength and Clearness; not contenting himself with what is to be met with in modern Tracts, but searching out the Sense of the Primitive Church, from the Writings of the Fathers; particularly, on the first Question, to expose the Vanity of those Pilgrimages, which the Council of Trent hath declared to be very pious, and are esteem'd, as of considerable Merit, in Popish Countries. He made great Use of that Oration, or rather Epistle, of Gregory Nyssen; concerning them that travel to Jerusalem, published by itself in Greek and Latin, by Peter du Moulin; setting the Arguments of that excellent Father in their best Light, after he had first noted the unreasonable Scruples, and the impotent Rage of some Popish Writers, on Occasion of that Epistle, more especially of Gretser, the Jesuit.

THE Latin Sermon he preached, I suppose, was on those Words of the Prophet Malachi, chap. ii. ver. 7. The Priests Lips should keep Knowledge, and they should seek the Law at his Mouth; for he is the Messenger of the Lord of Hosts. This however is certain, that a learned Discourse on that Text, written by his own Hand, was found amongst his Papers. But on whatsoever Subject it was, he had, as he would sometimes in Discourse occasionally remember, an extraordinary Auditory, when he preached it. For, besides the usual Members of the University, there were then present, Dr. John Bancroft, Bishop of Oxford; Sir John Coke, one of the Principal Secretaries of State; Sir Henry Marten, Judge of the Admiralty and of the Prerogative Court; Sir Edward Littleton, Solicitor General; and Dr. Thomas Rives, the King's Advocate; being at that Time his Majesty's Commissioners at Oxford, on a very solemn Occasion². It was the Confirmation of the new Body of Statutes for that University, which by the Care and Wisdom of the Chancellor of it, had been collected out of a vast Number, that had continued a confus'd Heap for many Ages. A Work which prov'd too difficult for those two great Cardinals, Woolsey and Pool; who both attempted it in vain³, and which only that excellent Conduct, and those unwearied Edeavours, which were peculiar to Archbishop Laud, were able to get accomplish'd.

THE necessary Exercises being thus finished, he was admitted to the Degree of Bachelor of Divinity, July 8, 1636. And soon after that, the Honour, which his great Patron had design'd for him, was actually conferr'd on him. For on the eighth Day of the next Month, Dr. Baylie, President of St. John Baptist's College, and Vice-chancellor of the University, declar'd in a Convocation, held for this Purpose, That, whereas their much honoured Chancellor, the Archbishop, had lately given to the publick Library a considerable Number of Arabick Books; he was now to acquaint them, with an Addition to that Bounty. For, that those Treasures might not continue lockt up, and so useles, his Grace had been pleas'd to settle 40*l.* per Annum, during his Life, on a Person, who should read a Lecture in that Tongue. And the Man, whom he nominated for the Approbation of that House, was, he told them, Mr. Pocock, of Corpus-Christi, lately return'd out of the Eastern Parts, who was, as he assur'd them, and they very well knew, eminent for his Probity, his Learning, and Skill in Languages.

So kind a Message was received by the University, with much Joy, and a very grateful Acknowledgment. And the Lecturer, thus appointed, to express a just Diligence, open'd his Lecture two Days after, viz. Aug. 10, with an excellent Latin Speech; wherein, as he took Care to pay those Respects which were due to the Founder, so he gave a learned Account of the Nature and Usefulness of the Tongue he was to explain: A small Part of which Speech, declaring the mighty Esteem the Arabians antiently had for Poets and Poetry, was afterward printed⁴. After this Introduction, the Book, which he first undertook to read on, was, the Proverbs of Ali, the fourth Emperor of the Saracens, and the Cousin German and Son-in-Law of Mahomet: A Man of such Account with that Impostor, not only for his Valour, but Knowledge too, that he was wont to declare, that if all the Learning of the Arabians were destroyed, it might be found again in Ali, as in a living Library. Upon this Book, observing the Directions of the Archbishop, in the Statutes he had provided, he spent an Hour every Wednesday in Vacation-time, and also in Lent, explaining the Sense of the Author, and the Things relating to the Grammar and Propriety of the Language; and also shewing the Agreement it hath with the Hebrew and Syriack, as often as there was Occasion. The Lecture being ended, he usually tarried for some Time in the publick School, to resolve the Questions of his Hearers, and satisfy them in their Doubts; and always, that Afternoon, gave Admittance in his Chamber, from One a-Clock till Four, to all that would come to him for further Conference and Direction.

WHILST Mr. Pocock was employed in this Manner, his dear Friend, Mr. John Greaves, towards the End of the Year 1636, returned home from Italy, where he had been, probably on Archbishop Laud's Account, for two Years. Immediately after his Arrival, he writes to Mr. Pocock; acquainting him, that it had been his Fortune, to meet with Mr. Petty in Italy, who proffered him, in my Lord of Arundel's Name, 200*l.* per Annum, and such Fortunes as that Lord could heap upon him, if he would stay with him, and go into Greece. In Answer to which, Mr. Greaves declared his Purpose of returning first into England, to see Mr. Pocock, after so long an Absence; adding, that if he returned back, he should rather think of going into Egypt, where few had been, and where, besides searching after Books and Antiquities, he should make Astronomical Observations. Mr. Petty very much approved this Resolution, and assured Mr. Greaves, that if he would undertake that Journey, as under his Lord's sending, he should have, besides what was above mentioned, those Preferments settled upon him, which he himself then possessed. But getting no absolute Promise of Compliance, and perceiving that Mr. Greaves stood in some Relation to Archbishop Laud, Mr. Petty advised him, for his better Security, that since he would not cast himself upon his Lord, he should, by the Archbishop's Means, go Consul to Aleppo, and procure Leave of the Grand Seigneur to have a Consular Power at Alexandria, as often as he should go thither. To this Mr. Greaves could give no positive Answer, till he had spoken of it to Mr. Pocock, who could best inform him, whether he was fit for the Place, or the Place for him. And of both these he would plainly deliver his Opinion.

IT is very probable, that Mr. Pocock, at this Instant, wished for an Opportunity of travelling once more into the East, to perfect himself in a Language the most copious and difficult in the World. And besides attaining to greater Skill in the Arabick Tongue, he had other Reasons for desiring such a Voyage. He had lately engaged in the Translation of an Historical Work, which he intended to dedicate to the Archbishop, as a lasting Monument of his Gratitude; and this, he believ'd, could not be performed by him any where, with so much Ease and Exactness, as there, where, upon every Difficulty, he might have Recourse to those, whom he thought most likely to give the truest Accounts of the Matters of Fact, and also best understood the Language they were written in. Moreover, he could not be of Opinion, that the Oriental Books he had already purchas'd, were a sufficient Provision for his Studies; and hoped, that upon his Return to the East, he should be able to procure many useful Treatises he still wanted, and which were not yet heard of in the West.

THE Receipt of Mr. Greaves's Letter, happily opened to him a Prospect of accomplishing these Desires; and there is little Doubt to be made, but that, upon Sight of it, he soon approved the Project of the Consulship, and in his Answer signified how glad he should be, if, when he communicated his own Affair to the Archbishop, he could procure his Grace's Consent and Encouragement, for him to make another Voyage to the Levant, for the Ends above-mentioned. For in Mr. Greaves's next Letter, dated, Dec. 23, of the same Year, which was soon after, in Answer to one of Mr. Pocock's, he is desired to send him up Ulug Beg's Astronomical Tables; 'of which, says he, I propose to make this Use. The next Week I will shew them to my Lord's Grace, and highly commend your Care in procuring of those Tables, being the most accurate, that ever were extant. Then will I discover my Intention of having them printed, and dedicated to his Grace. But because I presume, that there are many Things, which in these Parts cannot perfectly be understood, I shall therefore acquaint my Lord with my Desires of taking a Journey into those Countries, for the more emendate Edition of them; afterwards, by Degrees, fall down upon the Business of the Consulship, and how honourable a Thing it would be, if you were sent out a second Time, as Golius in the Low-Countries was, by the States, after he had been once there before. If my Lord shall be pleased to consent, and compass the Business, I shall like it well; if not, I shall procure 300*l.* for you and myself, besides getting a Dispensation for the Allowances of our Places in our Absence; and, by God's Blessing, in three Years dispatch the whole Journey. It shall go hard too, but I will get some Citizen in, as a Benefactor to the Design. If not, 300*l.* of mine, whereof I give you the Half, together with the Return of our Stipends, will, in a plentiful Manner, if I be not deceived, in Turkey, maintain us.'

THE Success of Mr. Greaves's Application to the Archbishop, we know no otherwise, than by the Event. Mr. Greaves did not go Consul to Aleppo, nor indeed did he at all visit that Place, but went directly from Constantinople to Alexandria, or Grand Cairo. From whence we may conclude, that his Grace did not come into that Proposal, but provided for Mr. Greaves's secure travelling into Egypt some other Way, and questionless contributed generously to the Expence thereof. As to Mr. Pocock, the Archbishop not only approved of his Desire to visit the East once more, but also encouraged it, by allowing him the Profits of his Lecture, during his Stay in the Levant.

THIS, and the like Revenue, from his Fellowship in Corpus-Christi, together with an Estate of some Value, which was lately fallen to him on the Death of his Father, enabled Mr. Pockock to prosecute this Design, without accepting the Offer of his generous and affectionate Friend, Mr. Greaves. And accordingly, they both embarked together about the Beginning of July, A. D. 1637. Before Mr. Pockock left Oxford, he entered the following Memorandum in a spare Leaf of his six Chiliads of Arabick Proverbs, where it is yet extant in the Bodleian Library.

IN nomine S. S. & individuae Trinitatis, cui Laus in omnem Aeternitatem. Amen.

IF it please God that I return not, otherwise to dispose of this Translation of Proverbs, I desire that it may be put in the Archives of Corpus-Christi College Library; there, tho' very rude and imperfect, to be kept for some Help of those that study the Arabick Language; hoping that Mr. Thomas Greaves, or some other, may at some Time perfect this Work for an Edition.

April 10, 1637.

Per me EDV. POCKOCK.

MR. Thomas Greaves having, with the Archbishop's Consent, undertaken the Care of the Arabick Lecture, till Mr. Pockock's Return; Mr. John Greaves landed at Leghorn, and went thence to Rome, to dispatch some Employments, which, as he wrote to Mr. Pockock, the Year before, would make it necessary for him to return into Italy: But Mr. Pockock continued in the Prison of his Ship; for so he both consider'd and call'd it, till he came to Constantinople; whither Mr. Greaves soon after followed him; one of his Letters to the Archbishop being dated, Dec. 28, of the same Year, from Galata near Constantinople. Mr. Pockock, on his Arrival, was kindly receiv'd by all the English, and especially by the Ambassador, Sir Peter Wick, to whose Favour and Protection he was particularly recommended by the Archbishop. That very worthy Person, not only entertain'd him at his House, but also allowed him there all the Liberties he could desire, both for himself and his Friends; and doubtless was not wanting to afford any Assistance he could give him in his learned Designs. Of which obliging Temper also towards him, was Sir Sackvil Crow, who, in a short Time, succeeded the other, as Ambassador at that Court.

MR. Pockock being settled at Constantinople, or rather near it, at Pera or Galata, on the other Side of the Water, where the English, and other Merchants usually resided, made it his first Business to enquire out, and to obtain the Conversation of some learned Turk, that might assist him in acquiring both Books and Languages. But such a one was, it seems, a Rarity, which even the Metropolis of the Turkish Empire would not presently afford him. For in a Letter written there, some Months after his Arrival, he complain'd, that he could yet see no Likelihood of any such Person, of whom he might make Use.

BUT here he had a Happiness, which he formerly sought for in vain at Aleppo, which was the Society of several Jews, who were both learned and civil. For it is manifest, from an Account of his Expences, which he then kept, that some of those People did him considerable Services, in buying and transcribing Books, for which he very well paid them. And that which he then highly valued, and which he would afterwards frequently remember with great Satisfaction, was, an intimate Acquaintance he there had with Jacobo Romano, the Author of an Auctuarium to Buxtorf's Bibliotheca Rabbinica, and one of the most learned Jews of his Time. As this was a candid and very judicious Person, so he would make use of a great deal of Freedom in his Conversation. He had carefully read over several Christian Books, as well of Papish, as Protestant Authors; particularly, among those of the latter, Calvin's Institutions; and he would often declare to Mr. Pockock, the great Difference he observed amongst them. Which was, that the Reformed were of a Religion, which was very consistent, and held such Doctrines, as agreed with the Principles they owned, namely, the Writings of the New Testament: Whereas the Papists, in many Instances, were at War with themselves, and pretended to observe a Rule, which they would yet very frequently thwart and contradict.

AMONGST the Grecian Christians at Constantinople, those miserable Remains of a once famous and most flourishing Church, that have long groan'd under an insupportable Tyranny, there were several Persons, with whom he was acquainted, and that were useful to him in his Designs. Upon which Account they well deserve to be here mentioned. And the Precedence is most justly due to that great Man, Cyrillus Lucari, Patriarch of that See, who, to use Mr. Pockock's own Words concerning him, was a most reverend, grave, and learned Person. He was of a Genius much above the slavish Condition of his Country, and laboured, with a mighty Courage and Industry, to promote the common Cause of Christianity, and the particular Advantages of the Church under his Care, notwithstanding all the Malice and Barbarity that oppressed him.

FOR such Purposes as these, amongst the other great Things he did, he had collected a very excellent Library, furnishing it with all the choice Manuscripts, which those Parts afforded, forded, especially in the Greek Language. And indeed, a Specimen of the Treasures of this Kind, in his Possession, he had given the World in that Book of inestimable Value, brought with him from Alexandria, of which he had been formerly Patriarch, and sent as a Present to his Majesty of England, King Charles I. viz. the Septuagints Translation of the Old Testament, and the Greek Text of the New, written, as he believed, by the Hand of Thecla, a noble Egyptian Woman, near fourteen hundred Years ago; at the End of which Manuscript is also the admirable Epistle of St. Clemens Romanus to the Corinthians, as old as some Parts of the New Testament itself, and antiently read in Churches, but in vain sought for by the learned Men of Europe, for many Ages. Mr. Pocock, who could not but earnestly desire such a Privilege, doubtless had the Use of any Books, which this venerable Person had the Command of; the Esteem and Affection of that Patriarch being very great for the Reformed in general, and the People and Church of England in particular, of which, perhaps, a short Account will not be thought too great a Digression.

THIS great Man had travell'd, when young, in several Places of Europe, and understood, besides Latin, several modern Languages^d. And as he had Occasion particularly to enquire into the State of Religion in those Countries; so he was abundantly convinc'd, that the true Difference between Protestancy and Popery is, that the first is Christianity purg'd from many Corruptions, whereas the latter is Christianity loaded and polluted with them. This was very manifest to him from the Writings of the Fathers, and in a great Measure too, from the present Sense and Belief of the Church, wherein he presided; which he well knew to have been always a perfect Stranger to several of those Opinions, which the Church of Rome would impose upon the World for Catholic Doctrines. And as he had, upon these Accounts, a just Value for the Reformation; so the like Reflections produced in him a peculiar Regard for it, as it was established in the Church of England. For knowing the Constitution of this Church very well, he could not but discern, that as it cast out all the Errors and Superstitions of the Church of Rome; so no intemperate Zeal, nor any Necessity of Affairs, caus'd it to throw out, together with them, that Apostolical Government, and those Rites, which had been of constant Use with the whole Church of Christ, in all Places and Times. When therefore this great Man first compos'd his Confession of the Faith and Doctrines of the Greek Church, which hath been printed more than once here in the West, he dedicated it to King James I. and design'd to get it printed in England; and afterward, when he ventur'd upon that bold Attempt of ordering Nicodemus Metaxa to set about printing it at Constantinople itself, in the Greek Press which he had brought thither from London, it had a Dedication prefix'd, to King Charles I. And the Satisfaction that Patriarch had, in owning Communion with the English, as a sound and excellent Part of the Catholic Church, he sometimes express'd by his Presence at the Worship of God in the Ambassador's Chapel, according to our established Liturgy. Particularly, as Mr. Pocock would often remember, upon an extraordinary Occasion, when he was present, which was, the Baptizing a Son of the Ambassador, born at Constantinople. At which Time, the most Reverend Cyril was not only of the Congregation, and join'd in the Service with much Devotion, but also undertaking to be a Godfather, gave his own Name to the Child, who was afterward the Honourable Sir Cyril Wich, one of the Trustees appointed by Parliament, some Years ago, for the forfeited Estates in Ireland.

BUT of how much Comfort and Use soever the Favour of this most reverend and learned Man was to Mr. Pocock; alas! He enjoyed it not long. For before he had been a full Year at Constantinople, the good old Patriarch, being caught in the Snares his Enemies had laid for him, was hurried, to what the World calls a miserable End, but indeed to a Crown of Martyrdom. Of the Occasion and Circumstances of his Murder, Mr. Pocock sent a large Account to Archbishop Laud, soon after it was acted; keeping also a Copy of what he wrote, for his own Remembrance. But, as the former, I believe, did not escape the Fury of Mr. Prynne, when he scatter'd and destroy'd that Archbishop's Papers; so the latter, as Mr. Pocock would often complain, was casually lost. What I shall therefore here add, of this great Man's Death, is chiefly taken from a Letter of Mr. Pocock's, written to Mr. Thomas Greaves, in the Year 1659, to satisfy the Desire of Dr. Morton, Lord Bishop of Durham, then ninety six Years old, and residing in the House of Sir Henry Yelverton, and which agrees with the larger Account, which the Reverend Dr. Smith published many Years after, from Dr. Pocock's own Mouth, in his Latin Narrative of the Life and Actions of that great Patriarch.

HIS boldly asserting the Doctrines of true and genuine Christianity, in Opposition to the Corruptions of Rome, expos'd him to the Rage of those busy Factors for that Church, the Jesuits. Several of which Order, at Constantinople, under the Protection of the French Ambassador, continually persecuted him almost twenty Years; for near so long it was from his first coming to that Throne, to the Time of his Martyrdom. They had, more than once, by their Interest in the Ministers of State, gotten him deposed; they had also caused him to be banished; and to obtain their wicked Purposes, they suggested such Things against him, as any that pretend to the Name of Christ, one would think, should be utterly ashamed of: Representing the Arguments he made use of, for the Divinity of our Blessed Lord, against Jews and Infidels, as Blasphemy against Mahomet; and the Greek Press, which he had provided to print print Catechisms, and other useful Books, for the Instruction of the Christians under his Care, as a seditious Design against the Government; but by the Zeal and Diligence of the English Ambassadors, first Sir Thomas Rowe, and afterward Sir Peter Wich, together with the Assistance of the Dutch Resident, who heartily espoused his Cause, he not only disappointed the wicked Designs of those Men, but obtained such an Interest in the Prime Vizier, as seem'd a sufficient Fence against all future Trouble. However, a Jesuitical Malice, tho' baffled, is not ended, and a bellish Contrivance at length prevailed. A Bargain is struck up with a great Basha, to take the Opportunity of the Vizier's Absence, and fill the Ears of the Grand Segnior, Sultan Morad, then on the Borders of Persia, in order to the Siege of Bagdad, with the great Danger, that his Empire was in, from the Patriarch Cyril, a popular Man, of a vast Interest, and that kept, as this Informer pretended to be well assur'd, a close Correspondence with Christian Princes. This succeeded according to their Hopes, and a written Order was immediately dispatcht for the taking away his Life: Which was presently executed, with a Barbarity natural to such Instruments. A Crew of Janizaries, seizing him in his Palace, carried him to Sea, as it were for another Banishment; where, in a Boat, amidst the most devout Prayers to Almighty God, which on his Knees, with much Fervor and Constancy, he poured out, they reviled, buffeted, and then strangled him; and having taken off his Clothes, cast him naked into the Water. His Body, being driven to the Shore, was there secur'd, till some of his Friends took Care to bury it. But the Rage of his Enemies would not afford it such a resting Place. They caused it to be digg'd up, and cast again into the Sea. However, a second Time it was taken up, by the Humanity of some Fishermen, and at the Charge of his Friends, buried in a Greek Chapel, on a little Island; whence afterward, to satisfy the People, when the Heat of Things was over, it was brought to Constantinople, and there decently interr'd.

As this venerable Man was thus murdered on the Water; so a little Time after, there was too much Reason to conclude, that the choice Manuscripts of his Library were swallowed up by it. Those precious Wares were a very desirable Purchase, to any that understood the Worth of them; and, it seems, the Dutch Resident had the good Fortune to find Means to obtain them. To make sure of which, against the Endeavours of the new Patriarch, who began to make a diligent Enquiry after them, he sent them away, with some other of his Goods, by a Ship then returning to Holland. And tho' that Vessel arrived safely at the intended Harbour, the very next Day, by the Violence of an extraordinary Storm, it sunk there, among many others, and the Cargo with it. That those Manuscripts, by these Means, were irrecoverably lost, I find by one of Mr. Pocock's Letters, was believed at Constantinople. But whether the Report afterward appeared true or false, I have not had Opportunity of inquiring. I shall conclude the Account of Cyril with observing, that Archbishop Laud was deeply concerned at the Misfortunes of the old Patriarch. In his Answer to Mr. Pocock, on that Head, he writes thus: 'For his Successor, I hear no Good yet; what it will please God to work by him I know not. It may be, he hath shewed the Turk a Way, in the Death of Cyril, how to deal with himself.' In this, the Archbishop conjectured happily enough. For in less than a Year's Time, the new Patriarch, whose wicked Intreigues hastened the Death of his Predecessor, was charged, by the Greeks, with Extortion, and other Wrongs done to their Church and its Privileges; and upon a Hearing before the Basha, he was convicted and imprisoned, and the Greeks had Leave to choose a new Patriarch; upon which they elected Parthenius, Archbishop of Adrianople.

THE Patriarch Cyril having had a great Esteem for Mr. Pocock, it cannot be doubted, but that his Chaplains, and other Domesticks, treated him with much Respect, and did him all the good Offices they were capable of. This was particularly and certainly true of Nathanael Canopus, his 'Protosyncellus, a Cretan born, as was also the old Patriarch, and of equal good Inclinations towards the Religion established in the Church of England. This Person, being assur'd of commendatory Letters, both from the English Ambassador and Mr. Pocock, had resolv'd to spend some Time in England; there to improve himself in several Kinds of Learning. And upon the Death of Cyril, what before was Matter of Choice to him, became also necessary, to avoid the same Usage that he had met with. Taking, therefore, the first Opportunity of a Ship for his Passage into England, he came to London; where Archbishop Laud received him with a great deal of Kindness, sent him to Baliol College in Oxford[†], and there allowed him a comfortable Maintenance. Some Time after, he was removed from Baliol, and became one of the Petty-Canons of Christ-Church; and living there several Years after Mr. Pocock came back from his Travels, he met with suitable Returns from him, for the Kindness he had shewn him at Constantinople. And, to digress also here a little farther, with the Account of this good and learned Man, more Years would he have spent on his Studies in Oxford, had not such a furious Zeal, as forced him from home, driven him also from this University. It was not indeed that of Jesuits and Mahometans, but of a Sort of People, whom there will be too much Occasion hereafter to mention, call'd, Parliamentarian Visitors. By these, in the Beginning of Nov. 1648, being turn'd out of his Preferment at Christ-Church, he went into Holland^r, where he was reduc'd to such Extremities, that he was forced, in a Latin Address, to petition the States for the necessary Expence of his own Passage home, and the Carriage of his Books^b. After his Return, he was made Bishop of Smyrna, but what afterwards befel him, I know not.

^{*} The Syncelli, both in the Latin and Greek Churches, but principally in the latter, were Ecclesiasticks, that cohabited with Bishops and Patriarchs in the same Cell; from whence they took their Name. They were instituted as Witnesses of the Bishop's good Behaviour, and that they might profit by his holy Example. Of these the Chief was called the Protosyncellus. See Du Fresne.

ANOTHER Person amongst the Greeks, who proved of some Use to Mr. Pocock, was Georgio Cerigo, a Doctor of Physick, residing at Galata. Besides the Skill he had in his Profession, he was a Man of considerable Learning, especially in Astronomy, and other Mathematical Sciences. And as he had the Command of a great many Manuscripts, so he would part with several of them to Mr. Pocock for his own Use, and that of his Friends, especially to receive in Exchange for them, some Western Rarities. This Person had also a Brother, who was a Scholar, and now concern'd with him in the same learned Traffick. To whom may be added Segnior Dominico and Constantinus Duca, who are mentioned on the like Occasions.

WITH this Assistance, Mr. Pocock carried on his Business of procuring Manuscripts with good Success, purchasing a considerable Number of such as were very useful; but for the most Part of no small Price; for the Dearness of Books there he often complained of. Neither were his Endeavours of this Kind confined to Constantinople. For having frequent Opportunities of sending to Aleppo, he often desir'd several of his old Friends there, to be diligent in taking up such as that Country afforded. The chief of these were Mr. William Corderoy and Mr. Richard Hill, English Merchants; and indeed the Service they did, not only to this learned Man, but to Learning itself, well deserves that they should be remembered; especially the first, who was also very useful in this Way to some others¹. By the Diligence of these, he got the Persian Gospels; which proved afterwards of good Use in the Edition of the English Polyglott Bible. They waited a considerable Time before they could buy these, first from one, call'd by them, Cogie Caudie, and after his Death from his Son, who would not be induc'd to sell this Book, till at length his Poverty forced him to it. And there being several Books, which he had desired, that were not to be gotten there, they sent a Person as far as Damascus, on purpose to seek them for him. Moreover, they recommended to him a Syrian Christian, call'd, as they told him, Abdel Messiah, and dwelling at Mussoloe, who was taking a Journey on some Business to Constantinople, as a Person very fit and willing to be employed, on his Return, in buying Books, which, being sent to Aleppo, they promised to pay for, and to see conveyed. Indeed, among the Christians of those Parts, there were several, with whom he had been very intimate, and who now, and upon all Occasions, were ready to oblige him by any Thing they were capable of: Particularly the Patriarch of Antioch, and a Brother he had, who styl'd himself Thalge, the Scribe. The Patriarch had that Regard for Mr. Pocock, that he undertook to procure for him as many of the Books of Ephraim, in the Original Syriack, as were to be had in that Country, in order to their being transcribed. And his Brother, who wrote a very fair Character^k, and was very diligent in transcribing both Syriack and Arabick Books, engaged to furnish him with true Copies of all the Parts, that were to be found, of that Father's Works. Several of these were sent to him at Constantinople, by the Care of Mr. Hill, which, I suppose, are now among his other Manuscripts, in the Bodleian Library. The rest too would have been finished, and sent in a little Time, had not that Work been interrupted by the Death of the Patriarch. It also appears, by a Letter of this Thalge to Mr. Pocock, (wherein, with much Respect, he calls him his Father, his much desired chief Master, and honoured Doctor) that he undertook to procure for him whatever Historical Accounts were to be obtained there, of Ephraim's Life. Some few of these he inserted in that Epistle, but whether any more were sent after that Time, I know not. Besides these Persons, that were thus serviceable to him, his Turkish and Arabian Friends at Aleppo, gave him all the Assistance they could; particularly, his old Sheich, or Doctor, who procur'd, I find, about this Time, a large Parcel of Books by his Direction. And indeed the Kindness he still retain'd for him was so great, that he was even transported with Joy, on the News that his beloved Scholar was again in the East; and resolv'd immediately on a Journey from Aleppo to the Port, on purpose to see him, which he perform'd accordingly, some Time before Mr. Pocock left that Place.

BESIDES the Society of such learned Men as Constantinople itself afforded, Mr. Pocock had sometimes that of some, who came from other Parts. Amongst these was Christianus Ravius, born in, or near^l Francfort on the Oder, and Brother to Joannes Ravius, a Teacher of Arabick for some Time at Utrecht. He having a Design to go into the East, for his Improvement in the Languages of those Countries, and to collect Books, Gerard Vossius^m, at his Request, recommended him directly, in a Letter, to Mr. Pocock, and desired Archbishop Laud to do the same, which he did accordingly. And happy was it for Ravius, that he brought to Constantinople

This is Mr. Smith's Account; which I know not how to reconcile with a Letter of Ravius's to Mr. Selden (among a valuable Collection of that kind, now or lately in the Hands of the learned Dr. Mead) in which he styles himself Christianus Ravius Berlinas.

tinople this last Recommendation. For, as Mr. Pocock informed the Archbishop, by Letter, 'He came thither, without either Clothes befitting him (of which he said he had been robbed in France) or Money, or Letters of Credit, to any Merchant. He had Letters of Recommendation from some of the States to the Dutch Ambassador, who was departed before his Arrival. Sir Sackvil Crow, the English Ambassador, finding that he brought the Archbishop's Recommendation, generously took him into his House and Protection, and gave him all due Furtherance; requiring of him that, if Occasion so present itself, England may enjoy the Benefit of what Time he shall here employ, in the Study of the Eastern Tongues. His Desire, Mr. Pocock adds, seems to be, to be employed in setting forth Books in the Arabick Language, and to be Overseer of the Press in that Kind, for which he would be very fitting.' Ravius afterwards return'd with a^a Collection of four hundred Manuscripts in several Languages (a Catalogue of which was printed at Leyden) and became of some Fame in the World, for Eastern Learning.

BUT of all the learned Men that did, or could come to Constantinople, no one was so welcome to Mr. Pocock, as his dear Friend, Mr. John Greaves, who having dispatched those Affairs, which obliged him to stop in Italy, as has been before mentioned, arriv'd at the Port, probably, some Time in December, 1637. Having been recommended, as well as Mr. Pocock, to the English Ambassador, by the Archbishop, he found there the same kind Reception. And with the Assistance, and under the Protection of that honourable Person, he made those Observations, and did those other Things, which the learned Writer of his Life^o has promis'd to oblige the World with. But besides the Enquiries he was concerned in, as an Antiquary, a natural Philosopher, and a Mathematician, his Endeavours were much the same with Mr. Pocock's, in the Matter of Languages and Manuscripts. The Tongues, which he now principally applied his Mind to get Perfection in, were Arabick and Persian; and with what Success, his immortal Writings have sufficiently discovered; and as he was unwearied in searching after rare and curious Books, so he spared no Cost in the Purchase of them.

WE have observed before, that Mr. Greaves's original Design of travelling was to visit Egypt, as it is probable Mr. Pocock's was to reside at Constantinople. The latter was never fond of travelling, and he had now a particular Call to stay where he was. Sir Peter Wick's Lady was gone for England, himself intending speedily to follow her; and with her went his Chaplain. But Sir Peter was obliged to stay much longer than he designed, by Reason of the Grand Segnior and Grand Vizier's Absence, in the Persian War. For till their Return, he could not obtain his Recredential Letters; and wanting a Chaplain for that Season, which lasted a full Year, Mr. Pocock desired the Archbishop's Leave to supply that Place, and obtained it. Mr. Greaves, who, as is said above, arrived at Galata in Dec. 1637, intended, the following Spring, to set out for Alexandria; but delighted with the Company of his dear Friend, or finding more Employment about Manuscripts, than he expected, at Constantinople, he did not leave that Place, at soonest, till the latter End of August, 1638. About which Time, finding a Ship bound for those Parts, he set out, and after spending some little Time in the Way, in the Isle of Rhodes, he arrived at Alexandria, towards the Middle of October, where he resided for many Months, and from whence that Letter, full of due Respect and Reverence, was sent by him to Archbishop Laud, which became, among many other Things of like Sort, one of the Crimes with which he was charged, on his Trial in the House of Lords, and which gain'd to Mr. Greaves a lasting Testimony of his Worth and Learning, deliver'd in that Place by that great Prelate^p.

MR. Pocock having now the whole Business of procuring Books at Constantinople on his Hands, made use of the Diligence that was necessary, to serve Mr. Greaves, as well as himself. And some Time after, he found Cause for the Increase of it in both Respects, having receiv'd an Account from him, of the ill Success of his Endeavours of this Kind in Egypt. For he assur'd him, that notwithstanding all the Search he had made after Manuscripts, for himself and him, both at Alexandria and Cairo (where he ventur'd openly to go to the Bezar, and to many of the Moors Houses) he could find, besides common Things, nothing but a few old Papers, or rotten and imperfect Books. Several Letters, complaining of this Disappointment, he sent to Mr. Pocock, first from Alexandria, and afterward from Leghorn, wherein he press'd him to do his utmost, for supplying this Defect, at the Place where he now was, being, he said, as he found by Experience, the Sea into which all the lesser Rivers had emptied themselves, all Books of any Value, in other Parts, having been taken up and brought to the Port. He earnestly desir'd him, therefore, to make a due Use of the Opportunity, he now had in his Hands, not only by soliciting the Assistance of their common Friends at Galata, but even by going over the Water himself to the Bezars, and Shops at Stambol; which he suppos'd might be done without Hazard, provided a due Caution were used about such Books as relate to Religion. He intreated him also to make a further Enquiry after the Libraries of private Men, and to attend to the Return of the then victorious Army from Persia, which, perhaps, among other Spoils, might bring with them many Books in the Language of that Country.

^a Mr. Pocock, in a Letter to Mr. Selden (penes D. D. Mead, uti supra) speaking of this Collection, says, 'It is made, not only in Turkey, but more in London, of Books, gotten by the Direction of others, by Merchants who, by Reason of the Disturbance of the Times, knew not how to dispose of them.'

BESIDES the Directions Mr. Greaves had left with Mr. Pocock, at Constantinople, when he went thence, he now also sent him a further Account of such Manuscripts, as he most desir'd to have; and perhaps the learned Reader will not think it tedious to take a short View of some of the Particulars. Very solicitous, I find, he was for the Astronomical, and other Works of that Indian Prince, Ulug Beg, Nephew to Tamerlan the Great. With the Help of two or three Copies of these, one of which the Lord Ambassador had promised to buy for him, he hop'd, he said, having made a Latin Translation out of Persian, to publish the Whole at his Return into England. Which Work he, in some Measure, perform'd, dedicating one Part of it jointly to Mr. Pocock, and his own Brother, Mr. Thomas Greaves. He was not less earnest for the Geography of Abulfeda, Prince of Hamah, an Arabick Writer, Part of which, in like Manner, he afterward translated and published. The Alcoran he desir'd, not only in the original Arabick, but also in Turkish and Persian, with such Glosses and Commentaries relating to it, as could be found. Also Avicenna de Animâ, and any other Part of him, that was to be had in Persian; Al battany, the Planisphere and Geography of Ptolemy, Gulistan in Arabick and Mircondus in Persian. And tho' he nam'd these, and some other Books, it was not his Design that none else should be procur'd for him. For he desir'd that Mr. Pocock, who very well knew his Studies, and what would be of Use to them, would endeavour to get all the Manuscripts, he should think good, in Persian, Turkish, and Arabick, especially, such as relate to History, Philosophy, Physick, Chymistry, Algebra and Mathematicks. And as for Mathematicians, that he would carefully remember to enquire after the Ancients, that have been translated out of Greek, and either are not yet extant in Europe, or else imperfectly published. After all, he beg'd him not to be forgetful of several Greek Manuscripts, which Dr. Cerigo had promised to procure.

MR. Pocock's Commission from the Archbishop, was more general. He left it to his own Discretion, to procure such Books in the Eastern, or other learned Languages, as he should judge proper for an University Library, and in such Places, where he thought they might most easily be found. But in April, A. D. 1638, at the Motion of Archbishop Usher, he recommended to him a more particular Method. 'The Prioste, says he, in a Letter of the Date last mentioned, is persuaded that the Patriarch Cyril can procure Clemens Alexandrinus's Hypotyposes. It were wonderful well worth the getting, if it might be had. But, for my own Part, I do not think the Patriarch hath it. Yet you may try and hearken after it, that I may be able to give the Prioste the better Satisfaction. The Prioste writes further to me, that Greece having been often gleaned, the likeliest Way left for good Greek Manuscripts, is, for you to strike over, from the Place where you are, to Natolia, and see, what that and Mount Athos will afford you, whilst you are so near them; which yet I must leave to your own Conveniences.' In Answer to this, Mr. Pocock writes, Aug. 18, giving an Account of the Patriarch Cyril's unfortunate End, which prevented his applying to him for the Hypotyposes of Clemens. He gives also the Archbishop an Account of the Greek Books at Mount Athos; wherein the Patriarch of Alexandria seems to have promised his Assistance, if not also to accompany Mr. Pocock thither. But he was hindered from doing either, and moreover in Danger, for not consenting to anathematize good old Cyril. Which, to use Archbishop Laud's own Expression, in his next Letter to Mr. Pocock, is such a Piece of Charity, as Barbarity itself is scarce acquainted with. It appears, from the Course of the Correspondence, that the Patriarch of Alexandria, in the End, lost his Life, and, as was supposed, thro' the Contrivance of the new Patriarch of Constantinople, who had served his own Predecessor so before. The Death of two great and good Patriarchs, contrived to gratify his own Ambition and Malice, was a heavy Charge upon the new Patriarch. And as Men are apt to form severe Judgments against the Authors of Mischiefs, to those in their own Circumstances, it might have been expected, that Archbishop Laud would not have discover'd the least Approbation of that Mercy, which spared the Life of the new Patriarch, after his Fall, and condemn'd him to Imprisonment, rather to prevent his Death from the Fury of the Multitude, than as a Punishment. But to shew how little the Archbishop favoured sanguinary Methods, tho' still calumniated on this Score, by his Enemies, hear his Christian and Temperate Expression. 'I heard, says he, (in a Letter to Mr. Pocock, dated, April 8, 1640.) before your Letters came to me, that the Patriarch, who succeeded Cyril, was like to suffer. And certainly he deserv'd it, and that in a severer Manner, than is fallen upon him. Yet I cannot but say there is Charity, and perhaps Wisdom, in preventing the Execution, that might otherwise have fallen upon him.'

AND now to return to Mr. Greaves. It will not, perhaps, be thought a very great Indecency, that the Affairs of a Person, who had the largest Share in Mr. Pocock's Friendship, take up so much Room in this Account of his Life. I shall therefore let the Reader know a little further how Mr. Greaves employ'd himself in Egypt, and what Requests he sent thence to Mr. Pocock; besides those already mentioned. He was now, as a very learned Person hath observed^a, travelling in that Country, with Designs as great as those of Pythagoras, Plato, or any other of the ancient Greek Philosophers, who went thither in the Search of Knowledge. And as the Methods he made use of to obtain it, were much more exact than theirs, so his Industry was indefatigable. He made a Collection of an infinite Mass and Variety of Hieroglyphicks; considered all the Rarities he met with in Architecture; took a most accurate Account of all the Monuments of Antiquity, and the several Inscriptions he found; and diligently enquir'd into all the Works of Nature, which seem rare and wonderful. Twice he went from Alexandria to Cairo, and both Times measured the three famous Pyramids, which are near that Place, and that with an Exactness incomparably beyond whatever had been attempted there before; using, for that Purpose, besides other Instruments, a Radius, ten Foot long, most accurately divided. And as he ascended by the Degrees on the Out-side, to the Top of the greatest Pyramid; so by the narrow Passage, on the North Side of it, he entered to the very Center of it: Where, taking with the utmost Niceness, all the Dimensions of the spacious Marble Chamber, in the midst of which is the Tomb of Cheops, or Chemmis, the supposed Founder, he fixed a Standard, for adjusting Measures to all Posterity. An Expedient, much desired by learned Men, but never taken Care of by any before him*. At Cairo, nothing rare or curious could escape him, as appears from his Account of hatching Chicken there in Ovens, printed long after his Death, by the Care of his great Friend, Sir George Ent. Neither was he discouraged from travelling many Miles in the Libyan Deserts, partly to view the several Pyramids, that stand there, but principally to see the Mummies, several of which he opened and accurately examin'd, taking exact Notice, as of the Substance of each, so of the Make of the Coffin, the Linen Ribbands or Bandages about the Body, and the Scroles, full of Mytical Characters, that were fastened to it; and concluding from these, as well as the Measures of the Marble Tomb in the Pyramid, afore-mentioned, that Nature doth not indeed languish in her Productions, as some imagine, but that the Men and Women of this Age, are of the same Stature with those who lived near three thousand Years ago. And as such Enquiries were his Business by Day; so when the Weather proved clear, he allowed himself very little Sleep at Night; making accurate Observations, wherever he came, of many Phænomena in the Heavens, especially, such as were serviceable to rectify Geography, by giving the true Longitude and Latitude of Places. In one of Mr. Greaves's Journeys, from Cairo to Alexandria, between Rosetto and Alexandria, an Accident befel him, which might have proved of dangerous Consequence. He, with some English and French, fell into the Hands of the Arabs, who robbed them. But Mr. Greaves's Loss was inconsiderable, if we except that of a fair Manuscript of Euclid, in Arabick, with Vowels. This happened to him in January, 1638-9.

OF these Employments in Egypt, Mr. Greaves, from Time to Time, gave Mr. Pocock an Account, and pursuant to the same Designs, he requested his Assistance in some Matters of the like Nature, to be transacted at Constantinople. He desired him to be careful in procuring for him several Observations, especially of Eclipses, which were to be made by Dr. Cerigo, at Galata, by a Ragusa Doctor, who went with the Army to Bagdat, and by a certain Consul, of his Acquaintance, at Smyrna; also to consult a Manuscript, not to be bought, in the Hands of Signior Dominico, concerning the Topography of Egypt; and to transcribe thence several Things, particularly such as related to the Feddanes, which is the Measure, by which that Country is divided. Moreover, he recommended to his particular Care some Marble Stones, having Inscriptions, which were to be sent, by the general Ships, into England; and also requested him to be at the Pains of noting some Things, that had been omitted by him at Constantinople, concerning the Composition of their Ink, the Turkish Way of writing, their Manner of letting Houses, and making Contracts. Lastly, he desir'd Mr. Pocock, if he could possibly, to measure the West End of S. Sophia, very exactly, with a very fine small Wire of Brass, or Iron. He had done it himself with a Line of Packthread, which, because it sometimes stretches about half a Foot, he could not depend upon. 'You must, adds he, with many Circumstances, describe the Place which you measure, that if any should desire to do it hereafter, they may take the very same without erring.' So wonderfully exact was this great and good Man, to give Information in such Things, that might be depended on.

BESIDES all this, there was yet another Business, which he requested of Mr. Pocock, and that was, his Examination of a Latin Ode, lately made by him on a Victory, obtain'd by the Great Duke of Tuscany, over the united Strength of the Corsairs of Barbary. This Ode, he desir'd him carefully to peruse, and to send his Opinion of it in a Letter, that might meet him on his Return to Italy, where he design'd to make use of it. And the End, he said, which he had in composing it was, besides the doing an Act of Gratitude for the like Honour, lately done by one of that Court to his Majesty of England, by this Means, to gain Admission to the Medicean Library, which he had found, by Experience, when formerly at Florence, to be shut to Strangers. A Library, famous for a great Variety of excellent Greek Manuscripts; from one of which the genuine Epistles of S. Ignatius have, by the Care of Isaac Vossius, been publish'd to the World, after they had been lost for some Ages. Three Copies of this Ode he sent to Mr. Pocock, for fear of Miscarriage, two of which, I find, came to his Hands. It is address'd, Serenissimo, Potentissimoque Principi, Magnæ Hetruriæ Duci, and begins in this Manner:

*Tyrrheni Domitor Maris, Metusque

* Philosophical Transac-

MR. Pocock's Friends, about this Time, viz. 1639. began to press him, by Letters, to think of returning home. Mr. Greaves, from Alexandria, in his last Letters, had advised him, not to devote himself so much to his Oriental Studies, as to forget his Hopes, and his Fortunes at home. And Mr. Charles Fettiplace, a Turkey Merchant, residing in London, (who took Care to receive his Money from the Archbishop, and the College, and to give him Bills for it at Constantinople) acquainting him, in a Letter, with some Preferments lately bestowed on his Friend, Mr. Thomas Greaves, had desired him to consider, that his great Patron was mortal, like other Men, and that therefore, he should by no Means absent himself unnecessarily, and lose the Opportunities of improving his Favour to the best Advantage. The Archbishop also, in many successive Letters, had been quickening him in this Respect. In one, dated, March 4, 1639-40. 'I am now going, says he, to settle my Arabick Lecture for ever upon the University. And I would have your Name in the Deed, which is the best Honour I can do for the Service.' Mr. Pocock excused himself for some Time, as waiting the Coming of his old Arab from Aleppo, writing, that he purposed to set forward for England, some Time the following Summer. And with this, the Archbishop rested satisfied. Accordingly, in August 1640, he went on board the Margaret, after near four Years Stay at Constantinople, which had cost him between five and six hundred Pounds.

HE did not design to return to England entirely by Sea, but rather to make his Way through Part of Italy and France. It appears, that he intended, before his setting out, to land at Leghorn. For he had provided himself, before he left Constantinople, with Letters of Credit to some Merchants in that City. That he was at Genoa, he would often tell his Friends, relating to them some-what, that passed there; which well deserves a very serious Reflexion. During some Stay he made in that Place, there was on a certain Day, a religious Procession, which went thro' the Streets with all the ceremonious Pomp, that is usual on such Occasions. And as he stood in a convenient Place, to take a View of it, he was surpriz'd with the Discourse of some Persons, at a little Distance, who talked in Arabick. They were a Couple of Slaves in Chains, who being confident, that no Body could understand the Language they spake in, express'd their Opinions of what they saw, with all Manner of Freedom. And as they rallied the Pageantry they beheld, with a great deal of Wit, so from it they took Occasion to ridicule Christianity itself, and to load it with Contempt. So unhappy has the Church of Rome been in her Practices on the Christian Religion: For whilst, to serve some worldly Designs, she hath laboured to engage the Minds of the vulgar Sort, by empty Shews, and superstitious Solemnities, she hath, by those corrupt Additions, expos'd what is infinitely rational, wise and good, to the Laughter and Reproach of Infidels, who will not take the Pains to distinguish in the Professors of Christianity, what hath, indeed, the Warrant of the Gospel, from what hath not.

A LITTLE after Christmas, he came to Paris, where, doubtless, he conversed with several eminent Men, tho' no Account is to be met with of any Conference he had with more than two. One of these was Gabriel Sionita, the famous Maronite, who then resided at that Place. With him he had much Discourse about Oriental Learning, and, without question, was very welcome to him, not only because of his great Skill in those Matters, and the very considerable Pains he had formerly taken about the Syriack Epistles, but for the honourable Mention he had made of this very learned Man, in the Preface to that Work. The other, whom I am also assur'd he visited there, was the most learned Hugo Grotius, then Ambassador at the Court of France, from the Crown of Sweden, to whom he could not but be very acceptable, as upon several Accounts, so particularly, on that of the Relation he stood in to a Person, for whom Grotius had all imaginable Esteem and Reverence, the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury. And doubtless the Troubles, which had lately begun to fall on that great Prelate, and the black Cloud, which now hung over the Church of England in general, were the Subject of no small Part of their Conversation.

BUT there were other Things, about which he was willing to discourse with this great Man. Mr. Pocock, while he continued in the East, had often lamented the Infatuation, which so great a Part of the World lay under, being inflav'd to the foolish Opinions of that grand Impostor, Mahomet. He had observ'd, in many that profess'd his Religion, much Justice, and Candor, and Love, and other excellent Qualities, which seem'd to prepare them for the Kingdom of God; and therefore he could not but persuade himself, that, were the sacred Doctrines of the Gospel duly propos'd to them, not a few might open their Eyes to discern the Truth of it. Something, therefore, he resolv'd to do towards so desirable an End, as he should meet with convenient Leisure; and, he could not think of any Thing more likely to prove useful in this Respect, than the translating into Arabick, the general Language of the East, an admirable Discourse, that had been publish'd in Latin, some Years before, concerning the Truth of Christianity. With this Design he now acquainted Hugo Grotius, the excellent Author of that Treatise; who received the Proposal with much Satisfaction, and gave him a great deal of Encouragement to pursue it. And Mr. Pocock's Aim in this Matter being only the Glory of God, and the Good of Souls, he made no Scruple at all to mention, to that learned Man, some Things, towards the End of his Book, which he could not approve, viz. certain Opinions, nions, which, tho' they are commonly, in Europe; charg'd on the Followers of Mahomet, have yet no Foundation in any of their authentick Writings, and are such as they themselves are ready, on all Occasions, to disclaim. With which Freedom of Mr. Pocock, Grotius was so far from being displeas'd, that he heartily thank'd him for it; and gave him Authority, in the Version he intended, to expunge and alter whatsoever he should think fit.

UPON this Occasion, these two learned Men entered into a long Discourse, concerning the State of Things in the East, and the Reasons why the holy Religion of Jesus Christ was so far from gaining Ground in those Countries, that it was treated there, by Unbelievers, with great Contempt. Mr. Pocock mentioned several Things, which he observed to be thus fatally mischievous: But amongst them all, he told him, there was nothing more so, than the many Schisms and Divisions of those that own the Name of Christ, who ought to be as one Fold under one Shepherd. As Grotius very easily believ'd what Mr. Pocock thus reported; so it inspir'd him with new Resolution, and Courage, to pursue the Design he was engag'd in, to promote, as far as he was able, the Peace and Union of the Christian World. A glorious Undertaking, and such as highly deserves the most zealous Endeavours, and the most fervent Prayers of all that love the Lord Jesus Christ with Sincerity; tho' some of the Measures, which were followed by that most learned Man, are not to be justified. For, tho' we are to do what lies in us for the Sake of Christian Peace, we are not to yield up the Truth, even for obtaining that most desirable Blessing: We must not, we cannot, part with Truth.

IN a short Time Mr. Pocock left Paris, and came for England; where taking London in his Way to Oxford, he found, what he had heard several Reports of before, namely, a great Change of Affairs since he left the Nation, and a sad Face of Things. A turbulent Party among the Scots, who, when upon very groundless Pretences they had arm'd themselves the last Year, had met with all the Kindness and Satisfaction, which a very gracious Prince could give them; renewing their Sedition, had now invaded the Northern Parts of the Kingdom. And in the Parliament, which was conven'd to find out the proper Means of sending these disorderly, and ungrateful People home, too many there were, who were so far from promoting a just Defence against them, that some of them approv'd, and others resolv'd to make use of their Designs. This unhappy Correspondence between those that rais'd these Troubles, and several of them that were now call'd upon, as only able to quiet them, disappointed all the peaceable Endeavours of a pious and good King, and even began to shake the very Foundations of the Kingdom. The Thing that was now first, and most violently attack'd, was the Ecclesiastical Government, establish'd by Law. This Hierarchy, as it is agreeable to the Word of God, and warranted by the constant Practices of the Church of Christ, in all Places, and at all Times; so it had, for fourscore Years, reckoning from the Beginning of Queen Elizabeth's Reign, stood both the Glory and the Defence of the Church of England. And, as a learned Gentleman was pleas'd to express his Sense of the Matter^{*}, upon the Account of its Antiquity alone, it must be concluded now to need Repair. But repairing or mending was but a mean Attempt, for the violent Zeal of some others. Wherefore they were for making an utter Destruction of all the Roots and Branches of it, even a total Abolition. That this last Course might be taken, was earnestly desir'd[†] by such as, doubtless, had made a deep Search into the Nature of the Thing, to wit, some Thousands of Tradesmen, in and about the City of London, who were ready also to demand, what they thus requested, at the Doors of the Parliament. And these were soon seconded by five and twenty hundred Kentishmen[‡], who had found, by Experience, as they said in their Petition, Episcopacy to be very dangerous, both to Church and Commonwealth. The Ecclesiastical Government itself being thus struck at, it could not be expected, that the Governors should escape. Accordingly, the chief of these, the Archbishop of Canterbury, was early accused of High-treason; and several of those, who had been justly punished in the Courts wherein he was concerned, for seditious and immoral Practices, were let loose against him, to worry him even to Death.

THE Archbishop, having been ten Weeks in the Custody of Mr. Maxwell, Gentleman Usher of the Black-rod, waiting for the Charge, which was to be brought up against him, was committed to the Tower, March 1, 1640, about which Time, or a little after, Mr. Pocock came to London. And he thought himself under the same Obligation to go and pay his Duty to his Patron, now in this Confinement, as if he had been still one the Height of his former Prosperity, either at his Palace at Lambeth, or his Lodgings in Whitehall. Being admitted to his Presence, doubtless, the vast Difference of Circumstances, which he now beheld, from those he had formerly seen him in, could not but fill his Mind with the just Sense of the Uncertainty of human Greatness, and the Transitoriness of worldly Honour and Power, even when established upon Innocence and Virtue. He now saw a Man, who, besides his high Station in the Church, had been for many Years the Favourite of a great and good Prince; a Man, whose Advice was most followed in Affairs of State, which he still gave, according to his best Wisdom, and with undoubted Integrity; a Man, whose Requests to the Throne, were seldom or never denied; for it was manifest, that he managed no private Interest for himself or his Relations;

tions; but had long devoted all that he had to the publick Good: This Man, Mr. Pocock now saw fallen from that Eminence, on which he stood, become the Object of popular Hatred and Contempt, reproached, accus'd, and shut up in Prison, there to expect the bitter Effects of the Malice of his Enemies, and the Madness of the People.

THE Archbishop receiv'd Mr. Pocock with many Expressions of a very great Esteem, and a most hearty Kindness; he thank'd him for the Pains he had been at, in procuring so many curious Manuscripts for him in the East, and for the several Accounts of Things, which, from Time to Time, he had sent him thence; he told him, that he very well knew, what that Diligence, together with an extraordinary Piety and Learning, deserved from him; that he had firmly purpos'd to make a just Acknowledgment of all, by some considerable Preferment on his Return; and that the Impossibility of doing it, which he was now reduced to, was such an Addition to his other Afflictions, as very sensibly touch'd him. Mr. Pocock, who could not but be much affected with so obliging a Discourse, return'd him Thanks, both for the Favours, he had already conferr'd on him, and for those which he had further design'd for him. And lamenting the unjust Usage, he had met with, and the Imprisonment he now suffer'd, he deliver'd to him a Message relating to both, which Hugo Grotius had charg'd him with, when he wait'd on him at Paris. It was the humble Advice and Request of that learned Man, that his Grace would find out some Way, if possible, to escape out of the Hands he was now in, and pass to some Place beyond the Seas, there to preserve himself for better Times, at least to obtain some present Security from the Malice of his bitter Enemies, and the Rage of a deluded People. This, Mr. Pocock told him, that excellent Person had earnestly press'd him to move his Grace to, as soon as he should be able to have Access to him; and he hop'd the Thing would appear so reasonable to him, that he would neglect no Means or Opportunity that might be offer'd, to put it in Execution.

THO' this was a Course, which had been lately followed by some other great Men, particularly, by the Lord Keeper of the great Seal, and by one of the principal Secretaries of State; the former having withdrawn himself into Holland, the latter into France; the Archbishop, as soon as it was thus propos'd to him, declared his Resolution against it. I am oblig'd, said he, to my good Friend Hugo Grotius, for the Care he has thus express'd of my Safety; but I can, by no Means, be perswaded to comply with the Counsel he hath given me. An Escape, indeed, is feasible enough; yea, 'tis, I believe, the very Thing, which my Enemies desire; for every Day an Opportunity for it is presented to me, a Passage being left free, in all Likelihood, for this Purpose, that I should endeavour to take the Advantage of it. But they shall not be gratified by me, in what they appear to long for; I am almost seventy Years old; and shall I now go about to prolong a miserable Life, by the Trouble and Shame of Flying? And were I willing to be gone, whither should I fly? Should I go into France, or any other Popish Country, it would be to give some seeming Ground to that Charge of Popery, they have endeavour'd, with so much Industry, and so little Reason, to fasten upon me. But if I should get into Holland, I should expose myself to the Insults of those Sectaries there, to whom my Character is odious, and have every Anabaptist come and pull me by the Beard. No, I am resolv'd not to think of Flight; but, continuing where I am, patiently to expect and bear, what a good and a wise Providence hath provided for me, of what Kind soever it shall be.

HAVING thus discharg'd his Duty to his great Patron, Mr. Pocock hasten'd away from the Tumults and Noise of London, to seek for Peace and Rest at Oxford; where he had the Satisfaction to find, that his Arabick Lecture would no longer depend on the Uncertainties of an aged Life, pursu'd too by the most industrious Malice, being now settled to Perpetuity. For the good Archbishop, foreseeing the Storm, that was about to fall upon himself, had lately sent a Grant, to that University, of about a fifth Part of his Lands, lying in Bray, within the County of Berks, for the Maintenance of this Lecture for ever: The other four Parts being likewise settled on the Town of Reading, the Place of his Nativity, for charitable Uses there. The Grant from the Archbishop to the University, of Budd's Pastures, at Bray, aforesaid, for the perpetual Endowment of an Arabick Lecture, bore date June 6, in the 16th of Charles I. 1640, and was registered in Chancery, the 18th of the same Month. The Grant was not direct, but convey'd thro' the Hands of two Trustees, viz. Adam Fortescue and William Dell, both of Lambeth, Esquires. And, I suppose, the Reasons of constituting this Trust was, that the Grant running to the Chancellor, &c. the Archbishop, who was then Chancellor, must otherwise have granted to himself. The Trustees devis'd the Pastures above mentioned, to the University of Oxford, June 13, 1640.

ON the 6th of November following, the munificent Archbishop made another Present of Manuscripts to the University of Oxford; Six of which were Hebrew, Eleven Greek, Thirty Four Arabick, Twenty One Latin, Two Italick, and Two English, besides Five Persick, one of which, written in very large Folio, contained the History of the World, from the Creation, to the End of the Saracenick Empire, in all Eighty One. Together with these he sent a most affectionate Letter, deploring the Iniquity of the Times, and the State of the Church; concluding, with most ardent Prayers for the Peace and Prosperity of that University. This Letter was dated, Nov. 6, just four Days after the first Sitting of the long Parliament, and less than than six Weeks before the Archbishop's Commitment to the Black-rod. This Donation is the more pertinent to our main Story, as it is probable, that most of these Manuscripts had been procured by Mr. Pocock, and his dear Friend, Mr. John Greaves.

MR. Pocock, now at Oxford, applied himself, with as much Chearfulness as those melancholy Times would admit of, not only to the Duties of his Lecture, but to several other Designs, both in Arabick and Rabbinical Learning. And, indeed, it was impossible for him to do otherwise, if he would now answer the Expectation which every Body had of him. His great Abilities were very well known, before he went from England; and it could not but be concluded, that in the many Years he had spent in the East, he had made a vast Improvement in all the Learning of those Countries. Wherefore, upon his coming home, great Matters were expected from him, by the learned Men of this and other Nations. This, in Part, appears from an Epistle, which his old Friend, Gerard Vossius, sent him^a, together with a Present of some Books, lately publish'd by him, as soon as he heard of his Arrival at Oxford; 'I give Thanks unto God, said he, for your safe Return, as upon the private Score of our Friendship, so upon the publick Account, because I well perceive how great Advantages the Republick of Letters, and the Church of God, may receive from you. For if, for more than fifteen Years ago, you could acquit yourself so well, what may we not hope from you now, that Age, and the Industry of so many Years, have much increas'd your Knowledge, and ripen'd your Judgment? Your Return, therefore, I congratulate to yourself, to Oxford, and to all England; yea, and to the whole learned World.'

THAT which was most likely to lessen his Diligence in preparing any Thing for the publick View, was that Diffidence of himself, and his own Labours, which his great Modesty and Humility still suggested to him; whereby he was, upon all Occasions, very prone to fancy, that none of his Performances could be of Value and Usefulness enough, to justify the Publication of them. However, upon the earnest Request of his Friends, and the Representations they made to him of the Services he was capable of, he was contented to proceed, and he now laid the Foundations of several very considerable Works, which, some Years after, were made publick, being ready, as he tells Gerard Vossius, in his Answer to the Letter but now mentioned^b, to put his Hand to any Business, concerning which he should be satisfied, that it would be of the least Benefit to the Commonwealth of Learning.

THIS Year, viz. 1641, a Correspondence began between Mr. Pocock and two learned Men, Jacobus Alting, a Foreigner, then in England, and Mr. John Selden. The latter of these was then preparing for the Press some little Part of Eutychius's Annals, in Latin and Arabick, which he published the Year following, under the Title of Origines Alexandrinæ; and on this Account wanted Mr. Pocock's Assistance in collating, and extracting from Arabick Books at Oxford. The Occasion Mr. Selden had for his Services, then and afterwards, produced a Friendship, that proved of singular Use to him on several urgent Affairs, as will appear in the Course of his Story. He had endeavoured, when in London, to wait on Mr. Selden; but was prevented by the other's constant Employment. But Providence soon supplied him with an Opportunity, which he before sought in vain. The following Year added another very learned Correspondent, to those before mentioned, which was John Henry Hottinger, of Zurich, who, a little before, had seen and known Mr. Pocock in England. He was then employed in translating the Chronicon Samaritanum, which he brought out of Holland, and shewed to Primate Usher here, who then pressed him to render it into Latin. It appears also from Hottinger's Letter, that he was excited to turn the Helvetick Confession into Arabick, by hearing from Hugo Grotius, at Paris, that Mr. Pocock had done the same by his Book, de Veritate Religionis Christianæ; and thereupon, he earnestly begs Directions for that Work.

THE War, which broke out this Year, viz. 1642, interrupted all Correspondence between him and the Learned, both of our own, and other Nations, and also made Oxford itself an improper Place for Study. Its antient Quiet was now lost, and nothing to be heard there, but the Noise of Arms and armed Men. For in the Month of July, the Members of that University, having exposed themselves to the Indignation of the two Houses of Parliament, by advancing all the Money they had in their publick Treasuries, and much out of their own Purfes, for the Service of the King, who was then at York; were obliged, as soon as they understood that the Earl of Essex began to march with an Army, to begin to think of their own Safety. And accordingly, being authorized, as well by a Proclamation against the Rebels, as by particular Messages sent to them from his Majesty, some Hundreds of them immediately put themselves in Arms, and were soon after joined by two Hundred Horse, under the Command of Sir John Byron. About two Months after, these Forces being drawn out for the King's Service in other Parts, some Troops of the Parliament Side, took Possession of Oxford, and there, under the Command of the Lord Say, did what they thought fit; till, in a little Time, his Majesty march'd thither with his Foot, immediately after the Battle at Edge-Hill, and order'd it to be made a Garison, which it continued to be, and also the ordinary Residence of the Court, to the End of the War. The Military State the University was then in, and the Hurry that attended it, suffered Mr. Pocock to make but small Advances in the Designs he had undertaken. And in a short Time, his Mind was diverted to other Matters: For, in the Year 1643, the Rectory of Cbildry, a Living of a very good Value in the County of Berks, becoming vacant, he was presented to it by the President and Fellows of Corpus-Christi College, the Patrons of it. As this was an Evidence of the Esteem, which that learned Society had for this worthy Member; so, doubtless, it could not but be very agreeable to his Inclinations: For Cbildry being about twelve Miles from Oxford, he could conveniently live upon his Parsonage, and perform the several Duties he was oblig'd to there, and yet at the proper Times repair to the University, and read his Lectures. Tho', indeed, at present, there was no Room at all for such Exercises; the Minds of those who were to frequent them, being fill'd with the Thoughts of other Matters, and the publick Schools taken up for Provisions, and Warlike Stores.

S E C T I O N III.

MR. Pocock being now a Country Clergyman, set himself, with his utmost Diligence, to a conscientious Performance of all the Duties of his Cure; labouring for the Edification of those committed to his Charge, with the Zeal and Application of a Man, who thoroughly considered the Value of immortal Souls, and the Account he was to give. He was constant in preaching, performing that Work twice every Lord's Day. And because the Addition of catechizing, which he would not neglect, made this a Burden too heavy to be always borne by himself, he sometimes procured an Assistant from Oxford, to preach in the Afternoon. His Sermons were so contriv'd by him, as to be most useful to the Persons, that were to hear them. For tho' such as he preached in the University, were very elaborate, and full of critical and other Learning; the Discourses he delivered in his Parish, were plain and easy, having nothing in them, which he conceived to be above the Capacities, even of the meanest of his Auditors. He commonly began with an Explanation of the Text he made choice of, rendering the Sense of it as obvious and intelligible, as might be: Then he noted whatever was contained in it, relating to a good Life; and recommended it to his Hearers, with a great Force of spiritual Arguments, and all the Motives, which appeared most likely to prevail with them. And as he carefully avoided the Shews and Ostentation of Learning; so he would not, by any Means, indulge himself in the Practice of those Arts, which at that Time were very common, and much admir'd by ordinary People. Such were Distortions of the Countenance and strange Gestures, a violent and unnatural Way of Speaking, and affected Words and Phrases, which being out of the ordinary Way, were therefore suppos'd to express some-what very mysterious, and, in a high Degree, spiritual. Tho' no Body could be more unwilling than he was to make People uneasy, if it was possible for him to avoid it; yet neither did his natural Temper prevail with him, nor any other Consideration tempt him, to be silent, where Reproof was necessary. With a Courage, therefore, becoming an Ambassador of Jesus Christ, he boldly declar'd against the Sins of the Times; warning those who were under his Care, as against all profane and immoral Practices, so against those Schisms and Divisions, which were now breaking in upon the Church, and those Seditions which aimed at the Subversion of the State. His whole Conversation too was one continued Sermon, powerfully recommending, to all that were acquainted with him, the several Duties of Christianity. For as he was blameless and harmless, and without Rebuke; so his unaffected Piety, his Meekness and Humility, his kind and obliging Behaviour, and great Readiness, upon every Occasion, to do all the good he was capable of, made him shine as a Light in the World.

A MINISTER that thus acquitted himself, one would think, should have met with much Esteem, and all imaginable good Usage from his whole Parish; but the Matter was otherwise; he was one of those excellent Persons, whom the brightest Virture hath not been able to secure from an evil Treatment; yea, that upon account, even of what was highly valuable in them, have been contemn'd, reproach'd and injuriously handled. Some few, indeed, of those under his Care, had a just Sense of his Worth, and paid him all the Respect, that was due to it; but the Behaviour of the greater Number was such, as could not but often much discompose and afflict him. His Care not to amuse his Hearers, with Things which they could not understand, gave some of them Occasion to entertain very contemptible Thoughts of his Learning, and to speak of him accordingly. So that one of his Oxford Friends, as he travel'd through Childry, enquiring, for his Diversion, of some People, who was their Minister? And how they liked him? Receiv'd from them this Answer: Our Parson is one Mr. Pocock, a plain, honest Man; but, Master, said they, he is no Latiner. His avoiding, as he preach'd, that boisterous Action, and those canting Expressions, which were then so very taking with many Lovers of Novelty, was the Reason that not a few consider'd him as a weak Man, whose Discourses could not edify, being dead Morality, having nothing of Power and the Spirit. But his declaring against Divisions, Sedition and Rebellion, was most offensive, and rais'd the greatest Clamour against him. Because of this, such in his Parish, as had been seduc'd into the Measures of them, who were now endeavouring the Overthrow, both of Church and State,

State, were ready, upon every Occasion, to bestow on him the ill Names, then so much in Use, of, A Man addicted to Railing and Bitterness; a Malignant and one Popishly affected. But Disesteem and reproachful Language were not the only Grievances, which this good Man suffered under. That Income, which the Laws of God and Man had made his just Right, and which he always endeavoured to receive, with as much Peace as might be, was thought too much for him, and they studied to lessen it in all the Ways they could: Besides, what they call'd, out-witting him in his Tithes, of the Contributions and great Taxes which were frequently exacted, a Sum much beyond the just Proportion was still allotted to him; and when any Forces were quarter'd in that Parish, as considerable Numbers often were, he was sure to have a double, if not a greater, Share.

THIS Usage could not but seem very strange to a Man, who had been treated with Respect and Civility, by all Sorts of Persons whom he had hitherto conversed with: And it was impossible for him to reflect upon such unsuitable Returns, without a great deal of Disquiet, and very melancholy Thoughts. The barbarous People of Syria and Turky, whom he formerly complain'd of, appeared to him now of much greater Humanity, than many of those, he was engaged to live with. There, his exalted Virtue had won upon Mahometans, and made even Jews and Friers revere him; but these Charnis had, at this Time, a contrary Effect on the Pretenders to Sainthood, and purer Ordinances, at home. And he, who, when at Aleppo, still long'd to be in England, as the most agreeable Place in the World, now consider'd an Abode in the East as a very desirable Blessing. Yea, to such a Degree of Uneasiness did the publick Calamities, and the particular Troubles he was every Day exercis'd with, at length carry him; that he began to form a Design of leaving his native Country for ever, and spending the Remainder of his Days, either at Aleppo or Constantinople: In which Places, from his former Experience, he thought he might promise himself fewer Injuries, and more Quiet and Peace. But upon further Consideration, and a due Use of those Succours, which both Reason and Religion afforded him, he fortified his Mind against the Force of all such Trials, and learned to possess his Soul in Patience. He very well knew, that it is the Part of a good Soldier of Jesus Christ, to endure Hardship, and that he that hath devoted himself to the Work of the Gospel, must be ready in Afflictions and Distresses, by Honour and Dishonour, by evil Report as well as good, to approve himself a Minister of God. He considered too, that his Case was not singular, but such as was common, at that Time, to almost all others of the same Calling, throughout the Nation, who would not humour the People in unreasonable Things, nor descend to unlawful Compliances. And he was very well satisfied, that all the Evil, that comes to pass in the World, is still over-ruled by the Providence of that All-wise God, who, in the moral as well as the natural World, brings Light out of Darkness, and Order out of Confusion, and who will make all Things work together for Good to them that love him. Upon such Reflexions as these, therefore, he resolv'd to stand his Ground, and to persevere in a faithful Discharge of all the Duties he was called to; notwithstanding all the Difficulties that attended it. Having thus laid aside all Thoughts of a Remove, to ease himself of the Cares of Housekeeping, and the Management of a Family, and to have the Comfort of an agreeable Partner, amidst the Troubles he was expos'd to, he began to think of a Wife. And Providence directed him to the Choice of a very prudent and virtuous Gentlewoman, namely, Mary, the Daughter of Thomas Burdett, Esquire, of West-Worlham, in Hampshire; whom he married about the Beginning of the Year 1646, and by whom God was pleas'd to bless him with nine Children, six Sons and three Daughters.

AT the same Time that Mr. Pockock underwent so many Uneasinesses at Childry, his Affairs were in a yet worse Condition at Oxford: Where, tho' he attended his Lecture with as much Diligence, as the present State of the University would admit of, his Salary was wholly detain'd from him. For Archbishop Laud, after almost four Years Imprisonment in the Tower (notwithstanding such a Defence of himself against all the Crimes, with which he was charged, as will be a lasting Monument, both of his Innocence and great Capacity) being put to Death by an Ordinance of Parliament, they that had thus gotten his Life, were for disposing of his Estate, which had been sequestered some Time before; and into the List of that, they took, besides several other Lands given by him to pious, and charitable Uses, Budd's Pastures, in the Parish of Bray, which had been settled by him for this Arabick Lecture. The seizing a Revenue, which had been applied to so excellent a Purpose, was not only a manifest Injustice, but might well be understood to be such a Contempt and Hatred of Learning, as the Authors of it, one would think, should, even for their own Credit in the World, by no Means have consented to: Or, if they had taken Possession of that Estate, by Mistake, they should have been ready, on the first Application to them, to deliver it up again. But the Matter was otherwise; for notwithstanding Mr. Pockock's Endeavours, who took Care to let them understand the true State of the Case, they would not be prevail'd on to discharge it. It appears, from the Copy of one of his Letters, written by him on this Occasion, that he let them know, 'how useful that Sort of Learning is, which the Income of those Lands was design'd to promote, both to Divinity and other commendable Studies; what Reputation it now had in most Universities beyond the Seas, and what large Salaries had been appointed in several of them, for the Encouragement of it.' He also labour'd to make them sensible, 'that, besides the Settlement of the Founder, which was made with all the Formalities the Law requir'd, he had also an equitable Right to what he claim'd. For, as his Continuance at Aleppo, which first recommended him to the Choice of the Archbishop, had been a Thing of Charge and Difficulty to him; so, to qualify himself better for this Employment, he had been at the Hazard of a Voyage to Constantinople, the necessary Expences of which amounted to a Sum sufficient, even for the Purchase of a Revenue for Life, of much greater Value.' But all these Representations were of no Force with the People he had to deal with; and, doubtless, they would not have deliver'd up his Right to him, had not some other Method been thought of by his Friends, whereby to obtain it.

THE learned Mr. John Selden, at that Time, one of the Burgeesses in Parliament for the University of Oxford, had long entertain'd a particular Esteem for Mr. Pocock, and was, as appears above, much obliged to him, having frequently borrowed of him several Manuscripts, and other Books, not to be gotten elsewhere, and also often receiv'd from him Satisfaction in considerable Difficulties, relating to Oriental Learning. Mr. John Greaves, therefore, (who had likewise a large Share in the Friendship of that great Man) being in London, made him acquainted with this Injury that was done, not only to Mr. Pocock, but to Learning itself, and desir'd his Assistance in the Redress of it. No Body could be more ready than Mr. Selden was, to grant this Request. He told him, that he had a due Sense both of the Injustice and Scandal of this Proceeding, and that the Persons concern'd in it, could have no Countenance for it from the Order of Parliament, by which they pretended to act. For the Sequestrations, appointed by it, could only relate to particular Persons, as Seius and Sempronius, to use his own Expressions on that Occasion, and not to Corporations, which was the Case of these Lands. He also promis'd, that he would himself search the Rolls, where the Donation was recorded, and make the best Use of it he could, when he had found it.

WHILE this was transacting for Mr. Pocock in London, his Friends in Oxford were careful also to do him all the Service they were capable of. Dr. Langbaine, the very worthy Provost of Queen's-College, was at the Pains himself of drawing a long Instrument in Latin, wherein the Course taken by the Archbishop, effectually to settle these Lands, was at large, and very particularly recited, and also a formal Grant from that Body inserted, of all the Profits issuing out of them to Mr. Pocock, during the Time that he should continue to be Arabick Lecturer; and this Instrument, being propos'd by him and some others in Congregation, with unanimous Consent had the Seal of the University affixed to it. What was thus done for him by his Friends, was abundantly sufficient to clear his Title to the Satisfaction of all reasonable Men. But lest all this should not be effectual, Mr. Selden, with much Earnestness, recommended the Matter to some of the leading Men of that Time, in whom he had a considerable Interest, and, by their Means, this Salary was at length restor'd to Mr. Pocock, after it had been detain'd from him about three Years. This Restitution was effected about the Middle of the Year 1647. And I have Reason to suppose, that Dr. Langbaine's good Offices, above-mentioned, (to which he was strongly incited by T. Smith, a Fellow of his own College, and a Friend of Mr. Pocock's) was the Foundation of that Friendship, which continued between him and Mr. Pocock for the Remainder of their Lives.

THIS same Year, viz. An. 1647, he and his Family, at Childry, were delivered from a Ruin, that threatened them, by the Diligence and Interest of his excellent Friend, Mr. John Greaves. For Mr. Pocock being consider'd as a Malignant, some of the Forces for the Parliament, which had now carried all before it, grievously oppress'd him by free Quarter, and other Violence; and such a Treatment he was to expect, as often as any Troops should come into those Parts. Hereupon he complains to his Friend Mr. Greaves, by Letter, who, by the Assistance of Dr. Ent, procur'd him a Protection, under the Hand and Seal of my Lord Fairfax, dated at Windsor, Dec. 5, 1647. by which all Officers and Soldiers, are forbid to plunder his House, or take away his Horses, Sheep, or other Cattle or Goods, or to offer Violence to his Person, or the Persons of any of his Family. Constables also, and Quarter-masters, are, by the same Instrument, forbid to quarter upon him above his just and due Proportion. And, to crown this good Office, Mr. Greaves would be at all the Expences, that attended the Procurement of this Protection.

IT was, indeed, a singular good Providence for Mr. Pocock, under the Troubles and Difficulties he met with in these Times, that he was provided with so many useful and active Friends. For, besides his own natural Modesty and Meekness, which disqualified him from stirring effectually in his own Behalf, his long Absence from England, had made him a Stranger, even to the common Remedies against Oppression; and his only Methods, for Redress, were to complain, from Time to Time, to his Friends, of his hard Usage.

BEING delivered out of these Difficulties, he had but very little Time to breathe, before a fresh Occasion was given for the Exercise of his own Patience, and of the Kindness of his Friends. For now the Visitation of the University of Oxford was coming on, which, under the Pretence of Reformation, threatened the utmost Severity to all Persons of that Body, who had manifested any Loyalty to the King, or Zeal for the Church. In the Articles of Oxford, indeed, when that City was delivered up by Sir Thomas Glenham to General Fairfax, express Provision had been made, that all the Members of the University should enjoy their antient

Rights

Rights and Privileges, notwithstanding any Thing done by any of them, relating to the unhappy War between the King and the Parliament. But such Agreements were very weak Bonds to restrain them, who having the Power entirely in their Hands, were now resolv'd both to gratify the Ambition and the Avarice of those that depended on them, and to satisfy their own Revenge. On the first Day of May, therefore, in the Year 1647, an Ordinance of Parliament was made, whereby of twenty four Persons therein named, any five or more had Authority given them to be Visitors of that University, for the Hearing and Determination of all Matters and Causes they should think fit to enquire into, relating to it, or any Members of it: And also twenty Lords and forty nine of the House of Commons, were, at the same Time, appointed to be a standing Committee, for receiving the Reports of those Visitors, and hearing all Appeals, that should be made to them.

OF the Visitors thus nominated, ten had been formerly Members of that University, and most of them, such as had been expell'd, or otherwise punish'd, for Misdemeanours committed in it. The other fourteen were Lawyers, and Country Gentlemen, of known Zeal for the Cause they were carrying on, amongst whom Mr. Prynne was one of the chief. There could be no Doubt at all, but that such as these would be very forward in the Execution of this Power; as, indeed, they were. For a Citation, under the Hands of a sufficient Number of them, dated the 15th of the same Month, was sent to Oxford, commanding both the Proctors, and all Heads of Colleges and Halls, to appear before them in the Convocation-House there, on the fourth Day of the next Month, between the Hours of Nine and Eleven in the Morning. But the Mischief designed, at that Meeting, was delay'd for some Time by the dextrous Management of Dr. Samuel Fell, the Vice-chancellor. For whilst Mr. Harrys, one of the Visitors, was entertaining his Brethren at St. Mary's with Prayers, and a long Sermon for the Occasion, the Hour limited in the Citation was pass'd, and the Vice-chancellor, having gotten a Testimonial of the Attendance of those that had been summon'd, attested on the Place, in due Form, by a public Notary, immediately dismiss'd the Assembly. This Disappointment put the Visitors into so much Confusion, that they attempted nothing more, till, by an additional Ordinance of Parliament, dated the 26th Day of August following, they had new Powers conferred upon them. But then they applied themselves to the Work again, with a great deal of Diligence, and never omitted it, till they had forced out a great Number of the best and most learned Men of the University, and put themselves, and their Friends, in their Places.

WHEN the Violence of these Reformers began to rage at Oxford, Mr. Pocock was on his Parsonage at Childry; and there he still continued, as well by the particular Direction of his Friends, as from his own Judgment and Inclination. He had frequent Accounts sent to him of the Troubles many worthy Men were in, and the Methods made use of to ruin them, and he continually expected a Share in the same Treatment. And tho' he was ready, when Providence should call him to it, not only to throw up his Lecture, but every Thing else that he had, if he could not keep it with a good Conscience; he thought himself, however, under no Obligation to invite and hasten the Danger, by appearing in the University.

THE Visitors, and their Masters of the Committee, having other Employment, no Notice was taken of him for several Months; but at length something extraordinary fell out, which brought him on the Stage. Dr. Morris, the Hebrew Professor at Oxford, died of a Fever, March 27, 1648. The King, who was then a Prisoner in the Isle of Wight, having a full Knowledge of Mr. Pocock's Sufficiency, and being also moved thereto by the Recommendations of Dr. Seldon and Dr. Hammond, nominated him for the Hebrew Lecture, thus vacant, and for the Canonry of Christ-Church annexed to it; but he was not constituted by Patent, the King then not having the great Seal in his Power. About this Time, likewise, Dr. Payne, Canon of the same Church, was turned out, by an Order of the Committee. And on the 7th of April ensuing, the Committee having resolved, that the Matter of the Answer, put in by the Dean of Christ-Church, Dr. Fell, and others the Prebends, whose Hands were subscribed to it, was an high Contempt of Authority of Parliament; and, 'That for an effectual Remedy thereof, the said Dr. Fell, Dean of Christ-Church, and others the Prebends of Christ-Church, who subscribed their Names to the said Answer, be forthwith removed from their said Places.' Then the Order immediately proceeds: 'This Committee being informed, that Dr. Morris, one of the said Prebends, and Hebrew Lecturer of the University, is lately deceased, whose Hand is subscribed to the said Answer, do order that Mr. Pocock be Hebrew Lecturer of the University, in the Place of the said Dr. Morris, deceased, and shall receive all Profits and Dues belonging to the said Place. And further order, that the said Mr. Pocock be, and hereby he is, constituted and established a Collegiate Prebend of Christ-Church, in the Place of Dr. Payne, removed from his Prebend's Place, by a former Order of this Committee. And the said Mr. Pocock shall enjoy and have all the Power, Rights, Emoluments, Rooms, and Lodgings, by any Statute, or Custom, or Right, formerly belonging to the said Dr. Payne.' It might seem a Matter of Difficulty, at this Distance of Time, to give a full Account, how Mr. Pocock, whose Absence from Oxford alone preserved him from a Summons of the Visitors, to take the solemn League and Covenant, and consequently from the Loss of his Arabick Lecture; I say, how he came to meet with such distinguishing Favour at that Time from them, who seemed to have so little Regard, either to Learning or Goodness, in others of his Principles. But it was chiefly to be imputed to the hearty Kindness of an eminent Member of that Committee, namely, his constant Friend, who had been so serviceable to him already, Mr. John Selden. For to him, Mr. Pocock wholly ascrib'd this unexpected Success, in a Letter he sent to him some Time after. And, indeed, as that learned Man found out Means to preserve some few of his particular Friends in Oxford, from the Dangers that then threatened them; so he did all that was possible for him, on behalf of the University in general. This, I find, was gratefully acknowledged by Dr. Langbaine, in a Letter written to him about this Time. Which, as well in Honour to the Memory of so great a Friend, and Patron of Mr. Pocock; as for that it gives so particular an Account of the sad State of the University, and the different Opinions of some great Men in it, at that Juncture, I shall here insert, as it was found amongst the Papers of the Lord Chief Justice Hale, who was one of Mr. Selden's Executors.

‘ Most Honoured Sir,

‘ NOTWITHSTANDING those common Endearments, by which you have purchas'd so great an Interest in this disconsolate University, and those multiplied Favours which you have been pleased to heap upon myself, the meanest of your Servants; I could have been content to hug myself in the tacit Recordation of both, had not that kind Remembrance, which I received from you, by Mr. Palmer, some few Minutes since, seconded by the present Opportunity of safe Conveyance, by Mr. Patrick Yonge, invited, or indeed extorted from me this Acknowledgment; which is no more mine, than the Voice of the Publick, so far as Discretion will permit us to make it publick; that however the Condition of this Place be now so desperate, that Salus ipsa servare non potest; yet are we all abundantly satisfied in your unwearied Care and passionate Endeavours for our Preservation. We know and confess,

‘ Si Pergama Dextrâ

‘ Whether it be our Unworthiness, as it is our Unhappiness, to fall at last, others may better judge; but of this we are confident, that, next under God's, it must be imputed to your extraordinary Providence, that we have stood thus long. You have been the only Belli Mora, and

‘ By your good Arts and prudent Manage, our six Months have been spun into two Years, and it has thus far been verified upon us by your Means, Nec capti potuere Capi. But now the decretory Day is come. Fuimus. That Tempest, which has so long hover'd, has now fallen so heavy upon our Heads, that all our Pilots have forsaken the Helm, and let the Ship drive. The Pro-Vice-chancellors, Proctors, and other Officers and Ministers of the University, have withdrawn themselves. I might add much, but I fear this may be too much of this Kind, as the Sense of the most and best in this Place; who fly so high upon the Point of Loyalty and Privilege, as if they were ambitious of suffering. For myself (and, tho' I have little Correspondence with Particulars, I believe I am not singular) I could be well enough content to sit down with a Confessor's Place, and not envy my Betters the Glory of this Martyrdom. I cannot think, that we are bound, by any Obligation of Law or Conscience, from acknowledging my Lord of Pembroke for our Chancellor. But for the new designed Proctors and Heads of Houses (Christ-Church excepted) we do not see, with Submission be it spoken, why those Colleges, to whom the Right of Election regularly belongs, may not challenge it by Virtue of the Articles, by which the Rights of all, and every of them, is promised to be sav'd. And tho' we know the Practice of former Times is no Rule for the present, nor the Actions of Kings any Laws for Parliaments; yet we cannot choose but observe the Difference heretofore, when, upon Occasion, Princes have sometimes depos'd the Proctors, sometimes preferr'd Heads of Houses to Bishopricks, they always left the Election of their Successors free, according to the respective Statutes of the University and Colleges, and did not otherwise interpose (though it was thought a Point of their Prerogative) than, at most, by Letters of Recommendation, which were many Times not obey'd, and that with Impunity. But whatsoever you please to command, we must obey. And it will, perhaps, not at all offend our most eager Adversaries, if we choose to do it rather by Suffering, than Compliance; which is already the Resolution of a good many, and perhaps his Turn is not far off, who, though he would not be over hasty to offer the Sacrifice of Fools, by a peremptory Opposition to an extraordinary and irresistible Power, so long as nothing is commanded which he conceives, in its own Nature, simply unlawful, yet he hopes, he shall never prostitute his Innocency, to purchase the short Enjoyment of a slight Preferment, which he values for nothing more, than the Opportunity it affords him of Freedom in his ‘ Studies, and thereby (if you shall at any Time do him the Honour to command him) of putting himself in a Capacity to be reputed,

Sir, Your most humble, and most bounden Servant,

Queen’s-College, Oxon,
March 20, 1647-8.

G. LANGBAIN.

As this Letter gave such a melancholy Representation of the present Condition of Affairs in Oxford; so the Transactions that soon followed, in that Place, would require even more tragical Expressions, duly to set them forth. For the Visitors first, and then the Chancellor himself, (who came thither for that Purpose) with a Guard of Musketeers, went from College to College, and breaking open the Doors of several Lodgings, dispossest the rightful Owners with the utmost Violence.

AND now to return to Mr. Pocock: The Committee issued an Order to the Visitors, June the 6th following, to put him in Possession of Dr. Payne’s Lodgings at Christ-Church; which was done accordingly. How he relished the Manner of his Coming into this Preferment, we cannot say with Certainty. But from the Letters of his Friends, at that Time, it should seem as if he had some Scruple on that Head. Mr. John Greaves, in one to him, dated the very Day he was voted in by the Committee, after acquainting him with his Success, adds, ‘ From whence no Envy can fall upon you here, (at Oxford) seeing you displace no Man, and it is undertaken that he shall be satisfied, who is most concerned, without any further Trouble of yours. So that I see, by a wary Carriage, that all Sides may be pleased.’ Dr. Langbaine, in a Letter, May 3, 1648, has the following Expressions: ‘ I perceive—that you are not fully informed concerning your Hebrew Professor’s Place; and, therefore, I take leave to tell you, that however the rest of the new Prebends (for ought I yet hear) have not, nor design to have, any other Security for Settlement, than the Votes of the Committee, yet Mr. Selden intends (and I presume by this Time it is done) to procure an Ordinance for yours. —This Ordinance, I think, will be sufficient, without a Patent under the broad Seal, being, for present, of equal Force, of less Charge, and less obnoxious to Exception from his Majesty; of whose Confirmation, if it shall please God to restore him to his Power and Rights, I think you will have no Cause to make a Question.’ The Ordinance here spoken of by Dr. Langbaine, as certain, to what Cause soever the Disappointment was owing, never was obtained; and, I have undoubted Authority for saying, that Mr. Pocock held his Preferment at Christ-Church by no other Title, from the ruling Powers of that Time, save from a Vote of the Committee.

BUT tho’ these Arguments and Suggestions of his Friends, prevail’d on him to accept the Hebrew Professorship; yet he was much dissatisfied, that he had not the Canonry along with it, which King Charles had annexed thereto, and which his Predecessor, Dr. Morris, enjoyed in that Manner. It is highly probable, the Committee were ignorant of any such Annexation, and voted Mr. Pocock into Dr. Payne’s Prebend, for no other Reason, but because it had been longest vacant; the Doctor having been turned out by a Vote, which some Time preceded that for removing Dean Fell, and the rest that subscribed to the Answer put in by him; of which Number Dr. Morris, the Hebrew Professor, was one. However, finding that he was voted not only into the Place, but also into the Lodgings of Dr. Payne, before the Committee’s Order to the Visitors for putting him in Possession of those Lodgings was issued, he complained to his Friends, above, of the Injury thereby done to him, and the Professorship. For, in a Letter from Mr. Greaves of the 11th of May, 1648, I find these Words: ‘ As concerning your Lodgings, and the Injury offered to you by the Visitors, I mentioned it to the Primate and Mr. Patrick Yonge. Both of them will acquaint Mr. Selden with it.’ But in that, and the two following Months, nothing more was done in this Business, thro’ the Jealousies of those Times. But in August, Mr. Selden assured Dr. Langbaine, that he could find nothing to that Affair in the Rolls, and that some, who were most active in the then Changes, did expressly deny any such Annexation. However, he promised his best Assistance, but could not assure him of Success. About the same Time Mr. Greaves, often waiting on Mr. Rous, Secretary to the Committee, prevailed with him, as he tells Mr. Pocock, in a Letter of August 2, ‘ That nothing should be done to his Prejudice for the future; but [with Relation to what was past] all the Answer he could get was, that the Committee must observe their own Orders.’ All this did not discourage Mr. Pocock, and his Friends, from prosecuting a Reparation of the Injury done to the Hebrew Professorship, by disuniting it from its proper Canonry. For, upon an Intimation from Mr. Greaves, that Mr. Selden wanted to see a Copy of the Grant of the Canonry to the Hebrew Professorship, and especially whether that individual Place be annexed to it; adding, if so, he (Mr. Selden) doubts not but Things may be ordered yet, if there be so much as the Name of Justice left; I say, upon this Intimation Dr. Langbaine, in a Letter of Nov. 30, this same Year, mentions, that the Charter concerning his Prebend, was sent up by the Bedel to Mr. Selden. But all this availed nothing. And, therefore, after a Year more spent in vain Endeavours to get the Annexation avowed, and the proper Lodgings of the annexed Canonry restored to himself, as Hebrew Professor, he, upon Friday, the last Day of August, 1649, read and entered a Protestation for saving the Rights of his Professorship, ship, before Dr. Reynolds, Dean of Christ-Church, and then Vice-chancellor of the University, as also in Presence of Ralph Button, Prebendary of that Church, and Ralph Austen, and lastly of John French, Notary Publick and Register of the University: In which he set forth, ' That the late King, in the 6th Year of his Reign, had given and granted to John Morris, ' B. D. and then Hebrew Professor, a Canonry or Prebend in the Cathedral of Christ-Church, ' to be held by him as long as he should continue Hebrew Professor, and Lecturer of the University of Oxford, and no longer; with all the Houses, Mansions, Profits, &c. any Way ' belonging, or hereafter to belong, to the said Canonry or Prebend. And by the said Letters ' Patents, he further granted to the Vice-chancellor, Masters, and Scholars of the University of Oxford, and their Successors, that, for the future, and in Perpetuity, that whenever, by ' the Death, Resignation, Deprivation, &c. of the said John Morris, the said Prebend should ' any Way become void, that then, and so from Time to Time, the said Canonry, with its ' aforesaid Appurtenances, should come to every Hebrew Professor, and Lecturer for the ' Time being, and should not, in the Interim, be granted to any other. And whereas, upon ' the natural Death of the said John Morris, the Canonry aforesaid was become void, he, ' Edward Pocock, by the Appointment and Decree of the honourable Committee, for regulating the University of Oxford, was declar'd publick Professor, and Lecturer of Hebrew, in the said University of Oxford, in the Room of the said John Morris. That ' whereas, by a very late Act, for abrogating Cathedral Churches, it was, amongst other ' Things, provided, that the said Act, nor any Thing in it contained, should in any ' wise extend to the Foundation of Christ-Church in Oxford, or to the Profits or Emoluments of any publick Professor, or Lecturer, in either University; he, the said Edward Pocock, Hebrew Professor, and Lecturer in the said University of Oxford, did therefore ' (with due Reverence) openly and in Writing protest, that by his Acceptance of any other ' Houses and Mansions, at Christ-Church, aforesaid, he did not intend any Prejudice should ' be done to his Right, Title, or Interest, or to that of his Successors, the Hebrew Professors ' at Oxford, or of the Chancellor, Masters, and Scholars of the said University, to the ' Houses and Mansions in Christ-Church, lately in Possession of John Morris, Hebrew Professor, or to any other Profits, &c. So that (notwithstanding any Acceptance of mine for ' the Time) my Right, and that of my Successors, and that of the Chancellor, Masters, and ' Scholars of the said University of Oxford, and their Successors (if any Right there be) to all ' and singular of these, may be preserved safe and unhurt, and remain so at present, and to all ' future Times; according to the Force, Form, and Effect of the Letters Patents, Resolution and Act, aforesaid.'

I THOUGHT it proper to insert the Substance of this Protestation, that the World may see how clear, and how important a Right Mr. Pocock, and his Friends, had been thus long contesting for, and the shameful Injustice of those he had to deal withal. The Right in Question appears to have been founded on a Grant of the King's, that was within his unquestionable Prerogative, and further guarded by a Clause in an Act, which had very lately passed both Houses. So that by baffling so strong a Claim, the Committee demonstrated, that whilst they thought the King subject to his own Laws, they would always be at Liberty to contradict, not only his Appointments, but their own unrepeal'd Ordinances. And doubtless Mr. Pocock had Reason to stir in this Affair, not so much on Account of the different Goodness of the Lodgings, belonging to the one or the other Canonry, as lest his utter Acquiescence, in accepting a Canonry, which had never been annexed to the Hebrew Professorship, should weaken his and his Successors Title to that which had. But still the Honesty and Spirit of the good Man, on this Occasion, appears to greater Advantage, when one considers, that, thro' the whole Course of this Affair, he, in other Respects, lay perpetually at the Mercy of those whom he was teasing to do him Justice, and against whose arbitrary Proceedings, the above Protestation was formed. For from his first being voted into the Professorship and Canonry, by the Committee, he plainly foresaw, that as Things then went, he was not long to expect any Advantage from that Favour, without such Compliances as he could, by no Means, yield to. That which he had, therefore, chiefly to depend on, was Absence from Oxford till better Times, for which it pleas'd God he had a while too just an Excuse, being visited with a great Sickness, which kept him a long Time very weak. When, therefore, upon the Coming of the Chancellor, he received a Message from one of the Visitors, who pretended to be very much his Friend, inviting him to appear, as soon as he could, upon his Canonry, at Christ-Church, he was so far from any Thought of going thither, that he would not so much as write an Answer; and the Care of those in Oxford, who wished his Welfare, made this Neglect pass indifferently well, on the Score of his Indisposition.

BUT as the Excuse of Sickness could not continue always, so in no long Time, his Presence in Oxford was often requir'd in another Manner: For the next Month it was decreed by the Visitors, That all Lecturers and Professors should come and perform their several Duties in the University, which, they said, had been neglected for three Terms now last pass'd. A little after they made another Order, That whosoever claim'd any Place, either in the University or any College, should, within fifteen Days, come and discharge their Duties there, and also to submit themselves to the Visitation. And, in a short Time, they decreed again, that, whosoever came to Oxford, ford, upon their being summon'd thither, and yet did not appear before the Visitors, should be considered as guilty of Contempt. It is manifest, that such Orders as these, were directly leveled at Mr. Pocock, and some others in the like Circumstances. And what Arts he could find out to avoid the Force of them I cannot tell. And yet a very worthy Person^d, who was at the Pains to search the Visitation-Book, in the publick Library, at Oxford, assured me, that he could meet with no Account there of any Appearance before the Visitors, made at any Time by Mr. Pocock. The greatest Light I have been able to get into this Matter, has been from some Letters sent to him, during these Difficulties, by Mr. John Greaves; whose Advice to him, upon these Occasions, was, so to order his Affairs in a prudential and honest Way, as neither to provoke the Visitors, nor to give them any Advantage, by appearing before them. And this too he tells him, in one of his Letters, was not only his own Sense, but likewise that of Mr. Selden, whom he had consulted on his Behalf, namely, that he ought to make it his utmost Endeavour, to keep out of the Reach of their Quarter-Staff, to use Mr. Selden's own Expression, which would, he said, strike down all before it; and against which, there was no Ward, but suffering or complying. A hard Choice, adds Mr. Greaves, either to be martyred, or to approve of their wicked and sacrilegious Courses; but surely, continues he, the former is to be taken, which, after some Patience, will be crowned with a just Reward. However, to put off, as long as might be, so great a Hardship, he directs him, not to go to Oxford at all, if it were possible to avoid it. But if his Affairs should absolutely require him to go thither, as he thought they would, to make but very little Stay, and when oblig'd to lie there a Night, not to let his Lodging be known, for fear he should receive a Summons to appear. Moreover, he puts him in Mind of consulting with his good Friends, Dr. Sheldon and Dr. Hammond, what he had best do, who would both give him faithful Advice. And in another Letter, after these two excellent Men were driven from Oxford, he recommends to him the Counsel and Direction of Dr. Langbaine, of whose Friendship, as well as Skill in such Affairs, he had the greatest Assurance.

BUT notwithstanding all the Expedients, which either his Friends could recommend to him, or he could think of, it was not possible for him to keep himself wholly out of Danger. For I find Mr. Greaves at one Time giving him Notice, that his Name had been return'd to the Committee, among those, that condemn'd their Authority. Moreover he told him, in another Letter, that upon discoursing with Mr. Selden, he found, indeed, the same Constancy of Affection in him, but withal great complaining of such Injustice and Shuffling of Businesses, as made him weary of striving against the Stream, tho' he despaired not totally of doing him good.

AND, upon this Occasion, I cannot but again do what Justice I am able, to the Memory of this Mr. John Greaves, by saying something further of that extraordinary Degree of Friendship, he manifested, at this Time, to Mr. Pocock. For, besides what has been already mentioned, in several of his Letters, which he wrote to him about these Matters, he not only assur'd him of his utmost Endeavours to serve him, but also told him, that he was much more concern'd for his Preservation than his own, and should be better pleas'd if he could obtain it. And the Event was, in some Sort, according to his Desire. For whereas Mr. Greaves had been an Instrument of keeping Mr. Pocock's Affairs in some tolerable Condition in Oxford, he himself was banished thence, by a Decree of the Visitors, Nov. 9, 1648, and so lost both his Fellowship at Merton-College, and his Place as Astronomy Professor in that University. Not that he seems to have been actually deprived of the latter, till near a Year after. For I find him, in a Letter of the 23d of August, 1649, complaining to Mr. Pocock, as of a fresh Grievance, that Mr. Rous told him the Committee had voted him out of his Lecture, for not appearing, and Contempt. It was then so lately transacted, that Mr. Greaves had not, as yet, seen the Order, but was to see it the Day after. Indeed, to add some-what more of this worthy Person, out of these Letters to Mr. Pocock, since the Face of Things had been so much chang'd in Oxford, he seem'd to have but little Inclination to spend any of his Time in it for the future. For, some Months before this Sentence against him, giving Mr. Pocock an Account of his Design to go thither from London, where he had now been for a good While, he told him, that, 'He was resolv'd to do nothing, but what stood with a good Conscience. ' Yet, adds he, Tully somewhere, (as I remember) mislikes Os & Frontem novæ Academiæ. ' And I am certain I shall do the same.' In another, of May 17, of the same Year, he tells Mr. Pocock, 'He was then going into Kent, to his good Friend, Mr. Marsham, not far from Rochester. Who, adds he, hath been very importunate, admitting of no Excuse, that 'I must make his House and Library, who hath a fair one, mine own. It will be this Fortnight e'er I return, and it may be shall afterwards live with him, if I see, at my coming to Oxford, the same Confusion which I hear, and which is likely, in Probability, to continue.' Several Months after, going a second Time to this Mr. Marsham's (afterward Sir John Marsham, a very learned Gentleman, who had dedicated a Latin Treatise of Chronology to him, and now again invited him to make use of his House and Library) he so far despair'd of any future Encouragement to Learning and Ingenuity in Oxford, that he order'd Mr. Pocock to send up his Will, with the Keeping of which he had intrusted him, that he might blot out thence the Gift of his Mathematical Instruments to that University, which had cost him, he said, more than a Hundred Pounds. And a Conveniency not falling out presently for transmitting it, he was so earnest upon the Matter, that, in another Letter soon after, he desired Mr. Pocock, to open his Will, and strike out that Part of it. But several Years after his Death, when the University, on the Return of King Charles II. was delivered from her Captivity, and became again what she was before; his Brother, Mr. Nicholas Greaves, afterwards Dean of Dro-more in Ireland, and another Brother, Mr. Thomas Greaves, formerly mentioned, dispos'd of these Instruments, according to the first Design of their dead Brother; and they are now in the Museum Savilianum, at Oxford.

MR. Pocock found Means of his Friends to pass thro' the Dangers already mentioned, without being oppress'd by them. However, a greater Difficulty began to appear, Nov. 28, 1648. For then, among some other Orders obtain'd by the Visitors, from the Committee of Parliament, one was, that they should strictly require of all Members of the University, the taking the solemn League and Covenant, and the Negative Oath. In their first Commission, indeed, they had been directed to enquire after all Persons who had refus'd, or neglected the Taking those Oaths; but the University thereupon immediately, with a Courage truly Christian, published their unanswerable Reasons against the Lawfulness of doing it, which were solemnly voted in Convocation. And, I do not find, that it had been requir'd of any of those turn'd out before November, 1648. They being commonly dismiss'd upon other Pretences. But now these Reformers were resolv'd upon a general Imposition of those Oaths in Oxford, which they well knew would effectually purge out all the Remains of what they call'd Malignancy. This Matter gave him fresh Disquiet, and set his Friends again upon seeking out Means to preserve him. But the great Disorder the Nation was in about that Time, soon took off the Minds of the Visitors, from going on with that Design, and opened a new Scene of Affairs, in which, at length, he was to fall. For about this Time, the Officers of the Army took Matters out of the Hands of the Parliament; and, to all their former Oppressions and Rapine, added the Murder of the King. An Act, considered in all its Circumstances, so prodigiously wicked and barbarous, that no Age or Country, since the Creation, that we know of, had ever afforded a Precedent for it. Hear the honest, pious, and affecting Sense of the so oft mention'd and excellent Mr. John Greaves, on that sad Occasion, in a Letter to Mr. Pocock.

' O! My good Friend, my good Friend! Never was there Sorrow like our Sorrow!
' What a perpetual Infamy will stick on our Religion and Nation! And, if God be ' not more merciful than Men, what a Deluge of Miseries will flow in upon us? Ex-
' cuse me now, if I am not able to write to you, and to answer your Queries.—
' O Lord God, if it be thy blessed Will, have Mercy upon us, not according to our ' Merits, but thy Mercies, and remove this great Sin, and thy Judgments, from the ' Nation.'

Your most affectionate and afflicted Friend,

J. GREAVES.

THE Original Letter still testifies the sorrowful Disposition of the Writer, and the many Blots, especially in the latter Part of it, evidence that he wrote on Paper, for the most Part bathed in Tears.

NOT content with this transcendent Villany, they also abolished the Upper, or House of Lords. After which, they and their Instruments, at Westminster, pass'd what they call'd an Act for subscribing an Engagement, whereby every Man should promise to be true and faithful to the Government then established, without a King, and House of Lords. This new Test was first impos'd at Christ-Church, Nov. 30, 1649. Soon after which, Endeavours were used in Oxford, to prevent the Ruin of many honest and useful Men, who, it was well known, would never subscribe to it. To which Purpose, Dr. Langbaine, in a Letter to Mr. Pocock, of Dec. 15, in the same Year, informs him, ' That the Day before, among other Matters, a Petition was agreed on, and sent in the Name of the University, to the Committee for Regulation, &c. promising that they will live peaceably under the present Government, and submit to all lawful Commands, and desiring that this may be accepted instead of Subscription to the Engagement. This Day, adds he, Dr. Stanton, and Proctor Maudit, are gone up with it, and (if they come soon enough) it is to be presented to Morrow.' Upon this, he consulted his faithful Friend Mr. Greaves, who, in his Answer, of the 8th of the follow-

' Vita Joannis Gravii, p. 43. ' Vide Catalog. Manuscriptor. Angl. pt. I. p. 302. ' Herein Mr. Smith follows Anth. Wood's Hist. and Antiqu. of Univ. of Oxf. l. i. p. 413. But Dr. Tim. Halton, in Answer to an Inquiry upon this Subject, seems, in Part, to contradict this Account. He writes thus: ' The Visitors of the University of Oxon, appointed by Parliament, never had the Opportunity of pressing the Covenant upon any Members of the said University, nor was any one removed, or expelled for not taking of it. In their Commission, An. 1647, I think the Clause of tendering the Covenant to all Persons was inserted. But that Commission was vacated. And in the next Commission granted, An. 1648, the Clause was omitted by the Interest of Mr. Selden.' Perhaps the Truth of the Case is this: By Mr. Wood's Account, (ubi supra) the second Commission was clandestinely obtained, only six or seven of the Committee being present. Probably, therefore, Mr. Selden, one of the absent Members, upon hearing what had been done, might procure either a Revocation of the second Commission, or an Order that the Clause in it, which related to the solemn League, should not be put in Execution.

ing February, delivers himself thus: 'I wish I were able to direct you. If only Quietness be required by the Subscription, considering your Profession, I know not what can be objected against it.' Mr. Pocock then intended a speedy Journey to London, to which his Friend, in the same Letter, answers, 'That he feared it would cast him beyond the 20th of that Month, and that then what may be the Danger, God only knows.' The 20th Day of February, 1649, was the Term appointed, by an Act, which passed the 2d of January preceding, at or before which, whosoever did not subscribe the Engagement, was to be returned to the Committee, in order to their being removed from their Places in the University. By another Act, which passed February 23, 1649, the Time for taking the Engagement, was prolonged a Month, viz. to the 20th of March following, and the Return to be made thereof, April 10. And as the Expedient, offered, as above, by the University, instead of subscribing the Engagement, was rejected by the Committee; so it is probable, that on, or before the latest Time prefix'd, Mr. Pocock either appeared, and absolutely refused to subscribe, or else, that he lapsed the Time in Absence, and was returned accordingly. From the Resolution, which passed against him in the Committee, the 24th of October following, it should seem probable, that the latter was really the Case. For the Words of the Resolution are, not, that he refused to take and subscribe, but, that he hath not taken and subscribed the Engagement prescribed by the Act. This is certain, that on the 20th of February, above mentioned, Mr. Pocock was gone for London, and shortly expected to return, as appears from a Letter of that very Date to Mrs. Pocock, from Mr. Sparkes of Corpus-Christi, in which he says, 'There had been a Conference between some Parliament Men and divers Ministers in London, of which the Conclusion was, that they were to expect no Favour, unless they did subscribe.' But notwithstanding this, Dr. Langbaine, and Mr. Greaves, used all their Endeavours to save Mr. Pocock, and others of the University, from the Ruin, that threatened them, for not having subscribed the Engagement. The former writes thus to him, April 5, 1650, 'I have made as many Friends for you as for any Man; the General doth enquire after you, of every one that comes from Oxford, of your Welfare. We have studied a pretty Diversion for a Month; we shall hereby gain this half Year's Rent. We have sent an Express to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, who is coming over, to desire him to intercede for the University.' I cannot find, that any Thing was effected by this last Expedient, nor that any Thing more was done in the Affair, till the 21st of June following, when an Order was passed in the House, 'That the Committee for regulating the Universities, should examine what Officers, Masters, Fellows, &c. did neglect, or refuse to take the Engagement, pursuant to the late Act for that Purpose; and should have Power to displace them, and place other able and fit Persons in their Room.' It is probable, that some still severer Resolution, concerning the University, was at this Time expected. For, in Answer to a Letter of Mr. Pocock's, in which he desired Information about the Truth of such a Report, Mr. Selden writes to him, Aug. 26, 'That he was afraid some such Thing would pass concerning the University; and he doubted it would not be possible to exempt any Man from it.' He adds, 'But if I can, in that or any Thing else, do what may be advantageous to you, I shall and will use my utmost Endeavours.' Sept. 6, of the same Year, Mr. Greaves writes thus: 'I have often conferr'd with our noble Friend (who shewed me your Letter, and much pitied your Case) we both could think of no better Course, than to put off your Business, and to gain Time. Many Things in the mean While may happen. It is believ'd (continues he) which you may keep to yourself, that Engagers, of what Quality soever, will be removed out of the Universities. I would therefore advise you, not to quit your Possession of your Living. For the Committee here cannot eject you thence.' His Friends laboured, to the last, for his Preservation. Dr. Langbaine put Mr. Selden in Mind of the irreparable Loss the University would sustain in the Removal of Mr. Pocock. And Mr. Selden himself, in a kind Letter he wrote to him, had assured him of his utmost Affection and Service, telling him, 'That these were no more than what his excellent Merit, and the many Advantages he had receiv'd from him, highly deserv'd.' But all their Endeavours could defer the fatal Vote of the Committee against Mr. Pocock no longer than the 24th of October; at which Time, the two following Resolutions passed.

1. 'THAT it does appear to this Committee, that Edward Pocock, Collegiate Prebend of Christ-Church, hath not taken and subscribed the Engagement prescribed by the Act.

2. 'THAT the Committee will proceed on this Day Fortnight to nominate another, to supply the Place of Mr. Edward Pocock, Collegiate Prebend of Christ-Church.'

ACCORDINGLY, the 7th of the following Month, the Committee resolved,

'THAT Mr. Peter French be Collegiate Prebend of Christ-Church, in the Place of Mr. Pocock.'

AND accordingly a special Order of the said Committee, for placing the said Peter French in the Place of the said Mr. Pocock, issued, reciting, 'That the Place of the said Mr. Pocock, became void, for not taking and subscribing the Engagement.'

CONSIDERING the Person put into Mr. Pocock's Canonry, it was no Wonder, that all the Interest of his Friends to keep him in, proved without Effect. For this Mr. French had married a Sister of Oliver Cromwell, and therefore a Vacancy must be made to provide for him.

^a This was the Prolongation of the Term for taking the Engagement.

HIS refusing the Engagement, which thus cost him his Prebend, did not presently affect his other Preferments, in Oxford. But in no long Time (probably about the Beginning of December) the Committee resolving, that all Non-Engagers should be turned out of the University, he was also to quit both his Lectures. This was a Thing he had Reason to expect as unavoidable. And that he looked for no other Treatment, appears from a Letter of his, dated, Nov. 30, to George Hornius, a learned Professor of History in the University of Guel-dres. In which we see him declare his present Condition, and his Apprehensions for the future, together with the honest and prudent Maxims, by which he had hitherto conducted himself, and conformably to which, he religiously purposed to behave in all Times to come. 'My Affairs, says he, are reduced to such a Crisis, that, unless I meddle in Things; wherein I am resolved never to intermeddle [meaning the Engagement] I shall be turned out of all Professorships in the University, or rather, am already [in Effect] turned out. I have learnt, and made it the unalterable Principle of my Soul, to keep Peace, as far as in me lies, with all Men; to pay due Reverence and Obedience to the higher Powers, and to avoid all Things, that are foreign to my Profession or Studies; but to do any Thing, that may ever so little molest the Quiet of my Conscience, would be more grievous, than the Loss not only of my Fortunes, but even of my Life. But please, Sir, to be assured, that I never followed these Studies with mercenary Views; and, therefore, when it shall please God (as I trust in his endless Bounty that it will) to vouchsafe me a safe and obscure Retirement, I will, with greater Alacrity than ever, apply myself to these Studies, and promote them with my best Endeavours.' Who can read these golden Lines, without secretly wishing, that every Votary to Religion and Learning, was endowed with a good Portion of that Spirit, which animated this excellent Man? As inattentive as the present Age is to Principles, and a Zeal for Literature, a few such Examples would revive the Credit of both, by making them no longer considered as the Scaffolding of Ambition, but as the Dictates of a disinterested Love of Truth, and of Mankind.

IN a little Time after this, the expected Blow was struck. And a particular Vote passed, as it should seem, to deprive Mr. Pocock of both his Lectures, or however to turn him out of the University; which in Effect was the same Thing. When this Vote passed we cannot precisely say. But it must have been some Time in December, 1650, and probably, about the Middle of that Month. The News of this coming to Oxford, many there were so sensible of the Damage the University would undergo, by the turning out a Person, whose Learning was so very useful and ornamental to it, that, without his Request or Knowledge, they drew up a Petition to the Committee for his Continuance; in the Form following.

TO the Right Honourable the Committee of Parliament for regulating the Universities.

THE Humble Petition of several, the Governors of Houses, Publick Officers, Masters of Arts, and other Graduates, and Students of the University of Oxford,

SH EWETH,

THAT your Petitioners conceiving Mr. Edward Pocock (late Prebend of Christ-Church) to be a Man of a very ingenuous and peaceable Conversation, excellently learned in the Oriental Languages; and considering, that there is no Power or Trust of Government going along with the Hebrew and Arabick Lectures, in this University; That the Stipend of both is but a very small Maintenance, and (should they be put into several Hands) no way competent for a learned Man; That he is able (above any we have heard of) to discharge them both, as having travelled abroad, and been trained up, for many Years, in the midst of those Tongues and Nations; That he hath been very useful here, and a great Ornament to this University, where we understand he desires still, in all peaceable Manner, to continue to serve this State, and his own Country, in this Employment:

WE therefore humbly pray, that out of that Zeal you bear to the Advancement of Learning (this Part especially, so useful in itself, and so generally this Day promoted in these Western Nations) and as an Act of your Favour and Clemency, you will be pleased to suspend the Execution of the late Vote, as to the Arabick Lecture, at least, till such Time as you shall be provided of some other Person, who in Regard of his Abilities, shall be thought fit to succeed in that Place with Satisfaction to the University.

And your Petitioners shall ever pray.

 Besides

Besides these, were subscribed the Names of thirty eight Masters of Arts, and Bachelors of Law. The Reader will observe, that among the principal Subscribers, there were but two of the old Stamp, viz. Dr. Hood, Rector of Lincoln College, and Dr. Langbaine of Queen's; the rest being, I think, except the two Proctors, Intruders into the Places of ejected Loyalists. Nor was it to be wondered at, that so many new Men should join in this Petition; considering how great a Reproach it would be upon their Friends, the Regulators, and, in some Sort, upon themselves, to remove a Man of such Eminence for Learning and Piety from such Places, as no Body was found sufficiently qualified to supply. Indeed, some Endeavours had been made use of to prevent this Reproach, by procuring a proper Successor to Mr. Pocock; but they prov'd ineffectual. It appears from a Letter, written about this Time, by one of his Oxford Friends, that Manasseh Ben Israel had been desired to send over a learned Jew of his Acquaintance, in Holland; but that Jew, being lately turn'd Christian, was more inclin'd to accept of an Offer he had from some Protestants in France, and Manasseh, being offended at his Conversion, would not concern himself any farther with him. Christianus Ravius also, who came into England about two Years before, in hopes that the Godly Parliament, as he call'd it, in a Letter to Mr. Pocock, would do great Things for him, was long encouraged, by the Committee, to expect their Favour. And, indeed, as Mr. Greaves gave Account of the Matter, he often seem'd not unwilling to accept the Preferments of one, that, as has been observed already, was formerly very kind and helpful to him. But the Representations that were made to Ravius, by several of Mr. Pocock's Friends in London, particularly by Mr. Selden, in whom Ravius placed great Confidence, and by Archbishop Usher (who had given this Man a Salary¹ of twenty four Pounds a Year, for the Encouragement of his Studies, while he was in the East) with-held him, I believe, from being guilty of a Thing so infamous and ungrateful. Possibly also the Committee itself might have seen so much into Ravius's Indiscretions, as to think he would, notwithstanding his Knowledge of the Languages, do no Credit, in the Main, to their Nomination. For, as he set out at first for the East, without the Caution which common Prudence would have suggested, so he seems all along to have acted after a weak and ridiculous Manner. Mr. John Greaves, in a Letter to Mr. Pocock, about the Year 1645 or 1646, discovers the Notion they both had of him, and supplies us with a pleasant Instance of his injudicious and trifling Conduct. 'I send you, says he, these Papers (which I have lately receiv'd from Mr. Ravius) for your Perusal; I have not been so merry since these sad Distractions, as upon reading of these; and how much Mirth, think you, shall I have, when he shall bless the World with the rest, as he promises? If I have laught (yet with some kind of Pity of the Man) at his Persian, how much more will you smile at his Persian and Arabick? A little before, I receiv'd a Letter from him, by the Hands of an honourable Friend of yours, in which he writ, that he had dedicated a Book to me; the first Noise of it almost put me into a cold Sweat, but after that I found it was dedicated to no lefst han six Score, besides myself, and that you and your Friend were in the Number, I recovered myself, and grew warm again. He is now at Leyden, where, when I see him, I shall give him the best Counsel I can, and advise him to make his Follies less publick.' Upon the Whole, no Body being found, of any tolerable Abilities, for the Discharge of the Arabick and Hebrew Lectures, the Committee for regulating the Universities, upon the Petition before mentioned, with so many favourite Hands to it, and, doubtless, strongly seconded by Mr. Selden, was contented to suspend the Execution of their Vote against Mr. Pocock. I cannot certainly fix the Date of that Petition, but conclude, that it was in the Month of December. For Mr. Samuel Clarke, Dec. 30, answered one of Mr. Pocock's, which acquainted him with the Petition, and the Hopes of Success therefrom, tho' he had heard of both before from another Hand. 'I was very glad, says that learned Person, of the News, both on behalf of the University, that now they begin to be sensible of their Loss, when they suffer themselves to be deprived of their worthiest Members, and something too on your Behalf, that you have some Hopes left of preserving a Plank out of this your Shipwreck.' To conclude this Affair, Mr. Pocock enjoy'd both these Places without any Disturbance, that I can meet with any Account of, taking a Chamber in Baliol-College, for his Residence, when oblig'd to be in Oxford.

THO' the Troubles he had thus been in for several Years together, were a sufficient Employment for his Thoughts, they did not discourage him, however, from going on, at the same Time, with a learned Work, which was published at Oxford in the latter End of the Year 1649. This was his Specimen Historiæ Arabum, containing a short Discourse, in Arabick, with his Latin Translation of it, and his large and very useful Notes on it. The Discourse itself is taken out of the general History of Gregorius Abul-Farajius, being his Introduction to his ninth Dynasty (for into ten Dynasties that Author divided his Work) where, being about to treat of the Empire of the Saracens, or Arabians, he gives a compendious Account of that People before Mahomet, as also of that Impostor himself, and the new Religion introduc'd by him, and of the several Sects into which it was divided. And Mr. Pocock's Notes on this Discourse are a Collection of a great Variety of Things, relating to those Matters, out of more than an hundred Arabick Manuscripts, a Catalogue of which he adds in the End of his Book.

To give a brief Account of some of the chief Things contained in these Notes: Having shewn in them, for what Reasons those People were called Arabians and Saracens, he first sets down some of the most considerable Matters, that were to be met with concerning their most antient Tribes; and then proceeding to those Times, the History of which is of greater Certainty, he notes the several Kingdoms, into which they had been divided; mentioning the Kings in each that were any way famous, and the particular Transactions, for which they were remarkable. Coming to treat of the Customs both of those Arabians, which led a wandering Life, moving from Place to Place, as Opportunities of Pasturage or Rapine invited them, and of those who had settled Habitations in Villages and Towns, he begins with a pretty large Account of their Gods, and idolatrous Worship, particularly of their Caaba, or Temple at Mecca, of the black Stone in one of the Corners of it, which had so much Veneration, and of some other Things taken afterwards by Mahomet, as these two were, into his new Religion. And then he proceeds to the Learning they had amongst them in those Days, which was chiefly made up of Skill in their own Language, Poetry, Oratory, and some Knowledge of the Stars. Under these last Heads he treats of the Dialect of Hamyar, long since lost, which he guesses, from a few Words of it, yet remaining, to have had a much nearer Agreement with the Hebrew Language, at least with Syriack, than the Dialect of the Korasbites, which still continues. He shews the vast Extent of this Tongue, which is, indeed, to be wonder'd at, since Letters were but of very late Use amongst them; being, as he observes, first invented by Moramir, the Son of Morra, a few Years before Mahomet. But the Preservation of it, as also of their antient History, he believes to be the Effect of their Poetry. For it was a Custom amongst them, for many Ages, to throw all remarkable Things into Verses, which being carefully learnt, supplied the Place of Books. Of their Oratory, he shews they had a great Opinion, and, indeed, notwithstanding their Want of Letters, it was not contemptible. For some of them, by much Practice, would arrive at such a Way of making Speeches, on any Occasion of Moment, as was very prevailing with the People. But as for their Skill in the Stars, he observes, that it was not for any Ends of useful Knowledge, but some superstitious and foolish Purposes. For, as the Chaldeans introduc'd a Way of divining by the Planets, so the Arabians and Indians pretended to do the like by the fixed Stars.

THE Things already mentioned, and more which are omitted, relate to the Arabians in their State of Ignorance; for so they call the Times before Mahomet. Mr. Pocock's next Work, in these Notes, is, to give some Account of that Impostor, whose true Name was Mohammed, and of the mighty Change which he made in the Opinions and Affairs of that People. Keeping, therefore, to the Text of Abul-Farajius, he from thence takes Occasion to speak of the feigned Prophecy concerning his Birth; the Genealogy from Ishmael; the Time when he was born; the Death of Abdollah his Father; his Marriage with Chadijab, and the Speech of Abu Taleb his Uncle, on that Occasion; his Flight from Mecca to Medina; his changing the Kelbab, or directing the Face in Prayer from Jerusalem to the Caaba; the Institution of the Fast in the Month Ramadan; his Sickness, Death and Burial. Having thus considered the principal Passages of Mahomet's Life, and remark'd some of those Things which are said concerning his many Wives, and his Daughter Phatema, he shews how some of his Followers have attempted to justify the new Religion he established, both from the Testimony of Holy Scripture, and Pretences to several Miracles, especially that, which the false Prophet himself would have to be esteemed the greatest Miracle of all, the inimitable Elegancy of his Alcoran. He explains the Nature of that School Divinity, which hath been in great Request amongst them, as also of that Knowledge or Skill in determining Controversies about Right and Wrong, which gives the highest Reputation of Learning to them, that arrive at Perfection in it, and hath some Resemblance, he says, to the Study amongst us of the Civil and Canon Laws. After a short View of the chief Points of their Religion, which have been subject to Controversy, he hath a great deal concerning the most famous of their many Sects. For, according to a pretended Prophecy of Mahomet, they reckon up no less than Seventy Three. And from the many Instances he produces, of the Opinions held by the most considerable of these, in Opposition to one another, it is manifest, that the Disputes about the Divine Attributes, Predetermination, God's Decrees, and some other Points, have been managed with the same Warmth, and indeed Nicety, among them, as they have been among some Christians. But that the Mahometan Faith might be known, amidst the different Sentiments of the several Parties, he sets down, out of Al-Gazalius, a long Confession of that which is held for Orthodox, in the Original Arabick, with his own Latin Translation of it. He gives particular Accounts of the four Persons of greatest Fame amongst them, for Knowledge in their Laws, each of them giving Name to a distinct Sect, or School, of those that study them; he shews what their Affonnab or Tradition is, and the Authority it is of amongst them. He explains the five fundamental Duties, which they are especially obliged to, being Cleanliness in several Parts of their Bodies, and Cloathing, Prayers, Alms, Fasting, and going in Pilgrimage to Mecca. And under this last Duty of Pilgrimage, he mentions those Rites of it, which were requir'd, they say, as Instances of their Obedience, without having in them any moral Goodness; such as their running seven Times between Safa and Marwab; their going as often round the Caaba, and their throwing Stones into the Valley of Mena. He speaks of their Observation of Friday, and of that Rest they think themselves obliged to on it; as also of Circumcision, as it is us'd among them. Finally, he explains several antient Customs of the Arabians, forbidden by Mahomet, as unworthy the Religion he established, tho' he retained many that are not less ridiculous.

AND as he has thus given, in these Notes, a large Account of the true Opinions of the Mahometans; so he has taken Care, upon proper Occasions, to do them Justice, by vindicating them from such Things, as have been fasten'd on them, without sufficient Ground; as particularly that Charge of Idolatri, brought against them by Eutbymius, and some other Greek Writers; and also those Stories, that are current in these Western Parts, of the Expectation they are under, of the Return of Mahomet; of his Body's being put into an Iron Chest, and suspended by a Loadstone; and of the Dove, that was taught by him to fly to his Ear.

BESIDES the Things already observ'd, he has, in these Notes, many critical Remarks, of great Use to those that study the Arab Tongue: And he has also taken Occasion to insert, in several Places, some curious Things, which the Author he explain'd, did not directly lead him to. Thus he gives a Description of Mecca, out of Sbarifol Edressi; he shews what the Superstition of the antient Sabii was, which, as Maimonides observes, had spread itself over the greatest Part of the World. He gives an Account of the Magi, who were very numerous, not only in Persia, and India, but in Arabia too, thinking it probable, that those were of this last Country, who came into Judea to worship our Saviour. He has a short Discourse out of an Arabian Physician, concerning the Power of some Kinds of Food, to change the Temper and Disposition of those that eat them. He also considers the State of Learning amongst the latter Arabians, as it had been advanc'd, first by Abu Jaafar Almanzor, and afterwards by Almamun, and some following Emperors. And he seems to agree with Sir Henry Savil, in the Opinion he quotes him for, that the Progress made by them in ingenious Studies, was so great, that they hardly came behind the Greeks themselves.

THIS Book he dedicated to his great Patron, Mr. Selden, who had so much oblig'd him; not, indeed, by an Epistle, for that Purpose, but by a Declaration at the End of the Preface, that the following Work was design'd by him, to be a Token of his Observance and Gratitude. And this Way he chose, as he told him in a private Letter, in Compliance with the Custom of Arabian Writers, who have no other Way of Dedication, that ever he could observe amongst them: And an Instance he gave in Kamus, a famous Arabick Dictionary, which was dedicated in this Manner, by the Author of it, to the Honour of Ismael, a King of those Times, wherein he wrote. Mr. Selden, upon reading the Book, was, I find, extremely pleas'd with it: And what Reception it met with, amongst other learned Men, is manifest from the frequent Use hath been made of it, and the great Things have been said of it. It was, indeed, generally consider'd by them, as a convincing Proof, of what Mr. Pocock asserts in the Preface to it, that the Arab Tongue contains such Riches, in every Kind of Learning, as have not yet been discovered to the Western Parts of the World: And that this Work was not of the Nature of those Discourses, the Novelty of which entertains for a little Time, and then they are laid by and forgotten, appears by the general Esteem it still has, now, after so many Years, and the Commendations that are constantly given it^k, by almost all that are any way conversant in Oriental Learning.

SOON after he had finish'd this Work, he began to prepare another very useful Book for the Press. And also, in the Year 1652, by the Importunity of Mr. Selden, he began to undertake the Translation of a large Historical Discourse; and in the very same Year began to lend his Hand to one of the noblest Designs that ever was executed for the Advancement of Religion and Learning, the Polyglott Bible; but he received great, and long Interruptions in all these glorious Projects, by new Troubles that beset him, before he had finished any one of them. And tho' these took their Rise a considerable Time after he embarked in the Designs above-mentioned; yet to prevent frequent Breaks in the Thread of our Narrative, it seems best to give the Detail of those Vexations here at once.

HE had already lost the profitable Part of his Preferment in the University, retaining only that, the Advantages of which did not equal the Burden; and now the utmost Endeavours were made use of, to deprive him also of his Benefice at Childry. Indeed, tho' all that he had, both in the University and the Country, before his Canonry was taken from him, was no extraordinary Encouragement for a Person of his uncommon Merit, whose Studies too occasioned great Expence, and whose Family began to be numerous; the State of Affairs, at that Time, would in no wise suffer him to hope, that he should be able to keep the Whole. At the Beginning, therefore, of his Concern with the Visitors, I find he had entertained Thoughts of lessening the Envy of his Preferments, by resigning his Parsonage, hoping, by that Means, to secure the Enjoyment of what he had in Oxford. But the Representations made to him by Mr. John Greaves, and some other of his Friends, then in London, prevailed with him to lay aside that Design. For it was manifest to them, that a Man of his Principles, whatever he should part with, would be still considered, as one that was fit to lose more, even till he should be utterly ruin'd and undone. And in no long Time after, he was fully convinc'd of the Truth of what his Friends then suggested. For the Loss of his Canonry at Christ-Church, was so far from satisfying the Men of the Times, that it gave them Encouragement to hope, that his good Parsonage would now also become an easy Prey.

THAT he might be dispossest'd of this, some ill People of his Parish were employed to present an Information against him, to the Commissioners appointed by Oliver Cromwell, for ejecting of *ignorant, scandalous, insufficient and negligent Ministers*¹. One that knows nothing of the real Design of that new Law, would very much wonder, how it could be possible for those that acted by it, to bring in Question a Man of such eminent Piety, Learning and Diligence. Dr. Brian Walton, then writing to Mr. Pocock concerning the great Work at that Time under his Direction, says, 'I have heard lately (which I should wonder at, if any Thing in these Times were to be wondered at) that some malicious Persons trouble you upon the Ordinance for ejecting of Ministers. If it be true, adds he, I hope God will deliver you from unreasonable and absurd Men.' But a great Part of the Commissioners having Notions of Things very different from those of other People, they readily admitted the nine following Articles, as a Charge against him, which were sign'd by Thomas Busb, and one Fisher.

1. THAT he had frequently made use of the Idolatrous Common-Prayer Book, as he performed Divine Service.

2. THAT he was disaffected to the present Power.

3. THAT he had no Regard to Thanksgiving-Days, and those of Humiliation, appointed by Parliament; but, on the contrary, had often prayed for the Destruction of it.

4. THAT a certain Person, who preached for him, declar'd in the Pulpit, when he was present, that there were some in the Nation, who had pull'd down the King, to make themselves Steps to climb higher.

5. THAT he, and several that officiated for him, did rail at Professors, in their Sermons.

6. THAT he had been negligent in examining those that came to the Lord's Table.

7. THAT he had countenanced the Profanation of the Lord's Day.

8. THAT he had refus'd to suffer some godly Men to preach in his Pulpit. And,

9. THAT he had not read the Ordinance for the Observation of the Sabbath.

BEING summoned to give in his Answers to the Particulars of this Accusation, he appear'd at Abington, the Place appointed for it, and very submissively delivered to the Commissioners, his Defence against every Article. The Sum of which was this: First, as to an Idolatrous Common-Prayer Book, he declar'd, that he knew no such Thing: But if they meant that which was once established as the Liturgy of the Church of England, it seem'd strange to him, he said, to term that Idolatrous, and thereby to accuse of Idolatry, all the Protestants since the Reformation. Of that Liturgy too, he denied that he had made any Use, contrary to the late Act for taking it away. The second and third Articles, he said, contain'd Things that were false; he having discovered no Dissatisfaction under the present Government, since it was in being; never prayed for the Destruction of any, and taken due Care for publick Service in his Church, on those Days, appointed by Authority, for Thanksgiving and Humiliation. As for those Words in the fourth Article, pretended to have been spoken in his Pulpit, he had examined, he said, some of the most constant Hearers of Sermons in his Parish, and they could remember no such Passage: But if any Thing of that Kind had been deliver'd there, he that spoke it, he thought, was accountable for it, and not he. Of the Railing, mentioned in the fifth Article, he might boldly assert, he said, that no Pulpit in the whole Nation had been more free from that Imputation, than his; he had never spoken against any Thing in that Place, but Sin; but he understood, indeed, that he had been accus'd, on that Account, as guilty: For, having preached about just and upright Dealing, soon after Thomas Busb, one of these Informers, had fraudulently remov'd a Land-mark on some of his Ground, a great Way from its Place, the said Busb had censur'd him for venting his Malice in the Pulpit, tho', at the same Time, when he thus preach'd, he knew nothing of that Encroachment; his Servant having not yet acquainted him with it. He might, he said too, be, perhaps, in like Manner, offensive in some other of his Sermons; for having often preached against Lewdness and Whoredom, the same Person might call it Railing, as knowing what was publicly objected to him, by a certain Woman, of his lewd Behaviour towards her. And the other Informer might, for the like Reason, be as much offended also at some of his Discourses against Profaneness and Drunkenness. As to the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, it was well known, he said, by all that frequented his Church, to which his Accusers never came, that before it was celebrated, the Doctrine of it was in the plainest Manner duly opened; People warn'd of the Duty and Danger, and earnestly exhorted to look to their Preparations; and that some, whom he thought unfit, were put back. Any Profanation of the Lord's Day, he told them, he was so far from countenancing, that, according to his Power, he had laboured to prevent it. It was known, he said, how often he had call'd on the People of his Parish, at least, to send their Children and their Servants to be catechiz'd; how often he had sent the Clerk out of the Church, after their Children, and even gone himself to them. And that the Officers were to be blamed for not doing that by their Authority, which he could not by his Persuasions. He added too, that he had been inform'd, by Persons of good Credit, that the Children of the Informer, Thomas Busb, had been chiefly guilty of such Profanation; that on the last Lord's Day, since this Complaint was made, a Son of the said Busb had made a Noise in Time of reading the Scriptures, to the Disturbance of the Congregation; and that the other Accusant, being Church-Warden, had been complain'd to of People's playing on that Day, and yet would take no Care to restrain them. As for his prohibiting godly Men to preach in his Church, he own'd, indeed, that he had once refus'd a Man, whom the Informer Busb had brought thither for that Purpose, preaching at the same Time himself. And this, he said, he would neither deny nor be ashamed of, when the Thing should be examined by them, to whom such Matters belong'd. Finally, the last Article, about the Ordinance for the Observation of the Lord's Day, he declar'd to be false, it being well known, he said, that he had read it. And then having assur'd them, that the Answer he had thus made to the several Things he had been charg'd with, was true, he desired the Commissioners, that they would be pleas'd to question him on such Things alone, as were proper for their Cognisance, according to their Commission, leaving the other to such Courts, as they belonged to; and also, that they would make the Persons, who, as it was pretended, should come and witness against him, well to be advis'd of, and to understand, what they were to swear to.

AFTER this Answer had been put in, it was concluded, by several of Mr. Pockock's Friends, that the Prosecution against him would cease. But they were mistaken in the Matter: For on Feb. 12, 1654, seven or eight Witnesses appear'd before the Commissioners at Abington, to prove the several Articles against him.

To make out the first Article, several of them depos'd, that he had us'd Part of the Common-Prayer; for he commonly, they said, began Divine Service with these Words, Almighty and most merciful Father. One of them added, that he had made use of a Part of it at a Burial. Another, that, on Easter-Day last, he had administred the Sacrament in the old Way. And a third, that a little after those Words, Almighty and most merciful Father, he had said, Praise ye the Lord. A fourth charg'd him with saying the whole Confession. And a fifth, with repeating the Absolution, or the Substance of it.

FOR the Proof of the second Article, two or three of them testified, that some Persons whom he had entertain'd, and some that officiated for him, had been disaffected to the present Power. And as for Mr. Pockock himself, one of them declar'd, that about the Time of Naseby Fight, he prayed for the shattering and destroying of those, that rose up in Arms against the King, and that he had never heard him pray for the Parliament, or any of their Forces. Another swore, that tho' he could not remember the particular Expressions, he was very well satisfied, that Mr. Pockock did rail at the Government; for which Reason, he had long with-drawn himself from bearing him. And another Zealot depos'd, that upon a Fast-Day, appointed about the Beginning of the War, he had prayed, that the Lord would scatter, discomfit, and destroy all those that rose up against his Majesty; which was the Cause, he said, that he then forsook his Ministry, having no Freedom, or Comfort, to bear him afterward.

TO the third Article, about Humiliation and Thanksgiving-Days, appointed by the Parliament, several of them testified, that he was commonly absent on them; and that it was a Kind of Proverb in the Parish, at such Times, That now Mr. Pockock was either sick or at Oxford. Some of them also added, that he, and those that officiated for him on such Days, said so little of the Nature of them, that when the Service was over, the People knew nothing of the Matter.

OF the Words in the fourth Article, said to be spoken in Mr. Pockock's Pulpit, no Testimony was given, by more than one Person; and he could neither name the Man that spake them, nor assign the Time when.

AS for railing against Professors, the Charge in the fifth Article, one of them testified, that one Mr. Yeels, as he preach'd for Mr. Pockock, about four Years before, was guilty of it; because he warn'd them, as this Deponent said, not to come into the Yards of such as did not come to the publick Ministry. Another depos'd, that one Mr. Hall had rail'd much against Professors, and the People of the Nation, for not helping the King out of his Bonds: As also, that he had these Words in one of his Sermons: Mark these Fellows: They have Bibles on their Tables, but Whips behind their Doors; they lead silly Women captive, who are still learning, yet never attain to Knowledge of the Truth. However, most of them declar'd, that they could not charge Mr. Pockock himself in this Matter. Only one of them said, that he had given Hints to that Purpose; and another, that he had call'd Professors, Schismatics, Separatists, and Deceivers; meaning, as this Deponent apprehended, such as did not come to hear him.

TO the sixth Article, about his not examining People before the Sacrament, several depos'd, that they never knew him practise it. One of them, notwithstanding, acknowledged, that one Person had been put back. But then this Deponent and another declar'd, that he had admitted such as were Railers against Professors, calling them Roundheads, and saying they would cut their Throats.

ABOUT his countenancing the Profanation of the Lord's Day, in the seventh Article, some of them declar'd, they could not assert any such Thing; others said, that he had not reprov'd those that were guilty of it. But one of them could not but confess the contrary, and that when People were playing in the Church-yard, Mr. Pocock had gone forth to call them in to Catechism.

THAT he had deny'd to some godly Men the Liberty of preaching in his Pulpit, according to the eighth Article, they endeavour'd to make out, by instancing in one Mr. Pendarves, to whom Mr. Pocock would not give Leave, a wandering Anabaptist Preacher, Author of a Book call'd, Arrows against Babylon^m. They also nam'd one Mr. Steed; but he was not, as some of them acknowledg'd, refus'd by Mr. Pocock, who was absent, but by those who had the Care of his Affairs at Childry, when this Steed came to preach there.

THE ninth and last Article, that he had not read the Ordinance for the Observation of the Sabbath, appear'd to be perfectly groundless; all that either of them could say about it being, that, four or five Years before, the Book had been carried to Mr. Pocock in the midst of Divine Service, and that he thereupon said, it should have been brought to him at home, and that he could not then tell whether he should read it or no.

THIS is the Sum of what those zealous and forward Witnesses depos'd against Mr. Pocock, after a diligent Inquiry into every Passage of his Life. And amongst the Things they thus testified, as some were really to his Honour, in the Opinion of all good Men; so others were much misrepresented, and others notoriously false. The same Witnesses too being, on his Demand, examin'd, according to Custom, on some Interrogatories on his Behalf, notwithstanding all their Malice, and the little Regard they had for Truth, could not but own, that for his Life and Conversation, they had nothing to charge him with. And one of the most spiteful of them all was even forced to declare, that he believed him to be as civil a Man, as went upon the Ground. But Innocence and Goodness are not a sufficient Fence against the Rage of evil Men; some of these Witnesses, therefore, having made such Steps towards his Ruin, took what further Measures they could, thoroughly to effect it; and, for that Purpose, soon after, they presented a Paper to the Commissioners, a true Copy of which I shall here add. For tho' such a Mixture of Ignorance, Malice, and Enthusiasm, may prove an Exercise of the Reader's Patience, it will give him, however, some Idea of the sad Fruits of those wretched Times, and of the Insults which the best of Men were then expos'd to.

AN Answer to the reproachful Declaration, put into the Court of Godly Commissioners, by Mr. Pocock, at Abington, with a Proposal of our Desires to be granted by the Commissioners.

FIRST, He doth declare the godly Actions of those Magistrates, in former Days, compelling the Common-Prayer to be us'd, to draw the Nation from that gross Idolatry they were then under. But it had been a more glorious Work, if they had proved faithful to Jesus Christ, if they had thrown down the Traditions of Men, Rudiments of the idolatrous World, which is not after Christ the Head of the Church, as it hath pleas'd God our Magistrates have done at this Time, being found in the Mass-Book. And that it was a literal Service, in the Room of spiritual Service, which is only acceptable to the Father; and such a Worship, and such Worshipers, that offer up spiritual Sacrifices, which are acceptable to the Lord Jesus Christ. Therefore it was voted down five Years since, being manifest it was the great Idol of the Nation, and not divine, but merely human. And it is manifest in the holy Scriptures, to set up their Posts by the Lords, is Idolatry. His Highness, with his Counsel, hath ordained this Court, therefore, to remove from their Place all such Ministers, as shall at any Time make use of this Service, after January last was Twelve-month.

SECONDLY, He hath reproach'd those that have testified their Knowledge of him, from good Experience they have had of him, ever since he came to Childry; to render them and their Testimony to this Court ridiculous and odious. But it is manifest Satan had Instruments in his Hand, to reproach Jesus Christ, who is the only Way, the Truth, and the Life; and by the learned Clergy accounted a Deceiver, and us'd all Means possible to delude the World after his Suffering, that he rose not again the third Day; altho' the Almighty Hand was signally seen, in striking their strict Watch they set as dead Men, and rowl'd the Stone from the Sepulchre, and rais'd him up by his Almighty Power the third Day, according to the Scripture. Yet after they knew the Truth, they gave the Soldiers double Money, to report he was stolen away, and the World believed the Report, but they could not deceive the Elect by it. If Satan, that old Enemy, can reproach the Head, 'tis no Marvel if he raise all Manner of Reproaches on his poor contemptible Servants, whom the Lord Jesus hath chosen out of the World; yet we humbly conceive it our Duty, with all the People of God, both to the Lord Jesus Christ, to our godly Magistrates, and to this Court, to give in our Knowledge, and Testimony, of any Truth we know against publick Ministers, who, from our Experience, are disaffected to the Reformation the Lord hath wrought, ‘ wrought, with thier Disaffection to the Reformers, and also their Envy to all those that are ‘ made willing, by the Day of God’s Power, to be reformed. And to this End also, which ‘ is not the least, that the common Enemy may not still be encouraged and strengthened ‘ against his Highness, his Counsel, and Army; whom the Lord hath the only Instruments

 ‘ in his Hands to subdue the common Enemy in the three Nations, and a Wall of Defence
 ‘ to preserve the Godly, from the Fury and Rage of the malicious, wicked World, which ‘ knows not them, because they know not him, who alone is their Prince and Saviour, whose ‘ Voice they know and follow, and know not the Voice of Strangers; therefore they hate ‘ them the more. And farther, we could answer all the Particulars cast on us; had we his ‘ Copy, and could declare what Persons Satan made use of in the Business; we could tell ‘ you of all those that stand for him, how they are affected, and speak Truth from good Ex‘ perience, and of himself also; but we are made to hate Reviling for Reviling, and would ‘ have been silent at this Time, had it been our own Cause, and not troubled the Court; but ‘ we conceive it a Duty incumbent upon us from the Lord, being a Work he hath wrought, to ‘ reform the Nation, according to Truth and Righteousness, which he labours to darken, by ‘ reproaching us to this Court: Yet, we are not ashamed of our Testimony and good Affec‘ tion to the Work of the Lord, committed to this Court, which we trust they will perform
 ‘ with Zeal and Faithfulness, in Truth and Righteousness, to the Glory of God, and the re‘ forming those weighty Things that concerns their Trust, and Well-being of the Nation.
 ‘ Also we intreat this Court, to give us the same Liberty as he had, to cross-examine their ‘ Witnesses, as he did ours, and himself and Witnesses exempt, the Court, in Time of Ex‘ amination, calling in one by one, the Door being kept close, as was for us, that one may ‘ not hear the other’s Testimony, that Truth may not go in Contempt, and Falshood take ‘ place; which is our Desires, and had rather any of our Tongues should cleave to the Roof ‘ of our Mouths, than maintain any Falshood or witness Lies. But for fear of Greatness, or ‘ Favour, or the like, divers Persons, of the forwardest Actors, hath dissented with divers ‘ others, who engaged to clear the Depositions more fully, withdraws; seeing us in great ‘ Contempt, and under Threatenings; and others will not come in, altho’ summon’d with ‘ your Warrants, which have declared, that his own Child, last Spring, was baptiz’d with the ‘ Common-Prayer, with Godfathers and Godmothers, in the Presence of four or five Mi‘ nisters; and the Communion administered the last Summer, as it was twenty Years ago.
 ‘ And his Curate, Mr. Wketstone, could not content himself to make use of it at home, but ‘ also at a neighbouring Town, and was indicted at the Assizes for it; the Grand Jury found
 ‘ the Bill against him, and should have paid five Pounds to the Poor could he be taken, and ‘ he had been taken, had not his House sheltered him. Thus ’tis clear, still they labour to ‘ uphold that which God hath thrown down; but it is the Desires of our Souls, according to ‘ that good Prayer he left his Disciples for a Direction, that his Kingdom may come, and his
 ‘ Will be done on Earth, as it is in Heaven, to the Glory of the great God, and our Lord ‘ Jesus Christ, to whom be Praise and Glory for ever and ever, and all Nations come to the ‘ Knowledge of the Truth, that they may be saved, and all Anti-christian Ways destroyed,
 ‘ that are not found in the Law and Testimony, which is our Desires.’

It may be proper here to observe, from some scattered Memorandums of Mr. Pocock’s, that the two first of these subscribing Professors, Brookes and Bush, had been used to deny and detain from him Corn Tithes. And there is yet extant a Bond, all of it written in Mr. Pocock’s own Hand, dated, Nov. 10, 1647, in which the said Bush, together with one Alexander Filmore, both of the Parish of Childry, do under their Hands and Seals, bind themselves to pay unto Mr. Pocock, their Rector, the Harvest following, nine Sheaves of Wheat, four Cocks of Barley, a Cock and an Half of Beans, and one Cock of blue Pease; all which they had detained the Harvest last past.

Thus, in Return to Mr. Pocock’s Forbearance towards Bush, after he had detained Part of his Tithes, did that ungrateful Man, on the first Opportunity that offered, endeavour to deprive him of the Whole.

I do not find that Mr. Pocock took any other Notice of the Answer above rehearsed, than only to procure an attested Copy of it, from which, that which is here inserted hath been transcrib’d; but to their Depositions against him, he delivered to the Commissioners, in a little Time, a full Answer in Writing, introducing it with these humble Desires, which, as he told them, he crav’d Leave to offer to them.

1. ‘ THAT what was formerly given in by him, by way of Answer, might be review’d and consider’d.

2. ‘ THAT such Things as concern’d other Persons, were they true or false, might not be charg’d upon him.

3. ‘ THAT the Testimonies of the Witnesses produced against him, might not be extended beyond the Letter of the Ordinance; it being a known and undoubted Rule, that no penal Laws are to be extended beyond the strict Letter of them. And tho’ such as are appointed appointed Judges may, upon some Occasions, as is usual, dispense with the Rigour of such Laws; yet they ought not, upon any Occasion, to exceed or go beyond the Letter of them.

4. 'THAT where the Witnesses produc'd against him should be found to contradict themselves, or one another, their Testimony might not be admitted as Evidence against him.

5. 'THAT the Witnesses to be examin'd for him, according to what was allow'd by the Ordinance, might be impartially and indifferently heard, without Prejudice; and their Evidence taken on his Behalf be balanced with the Testimony of his Accusers: It being the Duty of righteous Judges, not in any Case, so far to incline to the Parties accusing, as if it were their Desire and Business, to find the Party accused guilty; but to admit them to an equal Plea, and if there be any Favour to be shew'd, it ought to be in the Behalf of the Person accused.'

IN the Answer itself he was very particular, making his Defence under each Article, against every Thing that had been sworn, by the several Witnesses against him. It will be a Work too tedious to give an Account of the Whole. Omitting therefore his Replies to those Parts of their Testimony, which were either of no Consequence, or wholly false, I will only take Notice of what he said to such as had some Ground of Truth, and were intended to render him a scandalous Minister, according to the Meaning of the Ordinance. And these now were the Things they testified concerning his using the Common-Prayer, his Disaffection to the Government, and what they call'd, his railing against Professors.

THE Use of the Common-Prayer, was, by this new Law, declar'd sufficient to render a Minister scandalous; and Mr. Pocock, notwithstanding the Prohibition, always paid a great deal of Regard to that excellent Model of true Devotion; for as he constantly read the Psalms, and the Chapters; so the several Prayers he made use of were, as to the Matter of them, agreeable to the Liturgy, and often too, he took in some of the very Words of it. But having still govern'd himself, with all the Prudence and Caution, which were necessary in such dangerous Times; he was able, before any indifferent Judges, to avoid the Force of the Accusations brought against him. For the Defence of himself, from the several Depositions relating to this Article, he took all the Advantage he could of the Words of the Ordinance, by which a publick and frequent Use of the Common-Prayer Book, since a certain Day, were only prohibited, shewing, that if most of the Things he had been charged with, by the Witnesses, were allowed to be true, they would not yet, by the Letter of that Ordinance, at all affect him. He declar'd the Falshood of several Particulars of the Testimony against him, which he was ready, he said, fully to prove by other Witnesses, both for Number and Quality, much more creditable. He made it appear, that some of his Accusers had manifestly contradicted, both themselves and one another. And he noted the gross Ignorance of others, who, neither understood the Nature of an Oath, nor what they swore to. For, it was known, he said, that one of the Witnesses, on her Return home, had told some of her Neighbours, that she had expected to be put to swear some great Oath, but that she did not swear at all, only took a Book into her Hand. And they might remember, he added, that the Witness, who had charged him with administering the Sacrament, at Easter, after the old Way, being ask'd, Why he thought it the old Way? Gave this Reason, because he made a Prayer before, and a Prayer after, and gave the Bread and Wine to the People. And also, being further ask'd, Whether those Prayers were the same Form with those in the Common-Prayer? He said, Yes, for ought he knew; for he talk'd in them of Peter, of Paul, and John.

DISAFFECTION to the Government then in Being, was also by the same Act made exceeding scandalous, and indeed a Man of Mr. Pocock's Principles could not be heartily free from it. However, as formerly in his Prayers for the Prosperity of the King, while that good Prince stood in need of them, he had not used any harsh or unseemly Expressions; so since the new established Tyranny, he had taken a due Care, upon all Occasions, to carry himself inoffensively; and this Wariness, now qualified him for a sufficient Defence. In this Article, as well as in the former, he took hold of the Words of the Act, which only declar'd them guilty in this Matter, who discover'd their Disaffection, by writing, preaching, or otherwise publishing. He observ'd to them, that the Things relating to other Persons, were they indeed true, could not, with any Justice, be put on his Account. And as for those Words, which were alledg'd against himself, if, indeed, spoken by him, the Deponents, he said, had confess'd, that it was many Years ago; at the Beginning of the Wars, and about the Time of Naseby Fight, and so they could not reflect on the present Power, which was not then in Being; and if in themselves at that Time criminal, yet they had been discharg'd by the Act of Indemnity.

THE other scandalous Practice, in the Sense of this Law, was, what they call'd Railing at Professors, that is, a speaking plainly of the Sins of Schism, Division, and the like, which many, in those Times, who pretended highly to Godliness, were manifestly guilty of: Such Reproof, upon proper Occasions, he had not neglected; but still what he spake, was in a very grave and serious Way; for, as often as he expos'd the Errors of those disorderly People, he did it in the softest Words, designing, if it were possible, not to anger, but reform them. And under this Article, therefore, his Defence was very easy. For, whereas all that he

he had been expressly charg'd with, was the Speaking, as he preach'd, of Schismatics, Separatists, and Deceivers, he suppos'd, he said, that it could not be deny'd, that there might be just and necessary Cause for the Use of such Words; and he hop'd, that the Misapprehension of those who might have applied them wrong, would not be fastened on him as a Crime.

BUT tho' his Answer, to all the Depositions against him, was thus full and clear, and had all the Marks of Truth, that could possibly be expected; they would not, however, ease him of the Trouble of bringing Witnesses for his Justification. A considerable Number, therefore, appear'd for him before these Commissioners at Wantage, March 27, 1655. Amongst whom were four of the same Name, viz. John Fettiplace, of Childry, Esquire, Charles Fettiplace, of Up. Lambourn, Esquire, Edmund Fettiplace and George Fettiplace, Gentlemen, whom I could not but thus particularly mention, in Honour to a worthy Family, that in Times of great Difficulty, afforded so many Persons, who were not afraid to protect Learning and Goodness, so unjustly persecuted. By the Testimony of these Witnesses, who were sworn and severally examined upon all the Articles against him, not only the Malice and Falshood of his Accusers were sufficiently manifest; but his peaceable Behaviour, his christian Temper, and unblameable Conversation, were made evident, beyond Exception. Several of them declar'd, that upon an intimate Acquaintance with him, for many Years, they had always found him not only meek, friendly, and obliging, but also a very religious and godly Man, of an upright Life and Conversation; a constant Reprover of Vice and Sin, and an Encourager of Holiness. And some of them added, that they verily believ'd, that in the whole Country, wherein he dwelt, there could not be a Person of a fairer Character, and more unblemished Reputation.

AND thus, at length, notwithstanding all the Endeavours of his zealous Adversaries to oppress him, the Charge that had been manag'd against him fell to the Ground; it being impossible for them to fasten any Thing scandalous upon him, even according to their own new Sense of that Word. Very unwilling, however, they were, that the good Parsonage, which they thought themselves sure of the Disposal of, should continue still in his Hands, and therefore made choice of another Method whereby to dispossess him of it. As these Commissioners were, by the Act that established them, to determine what was scandalous in Clergymen; so, in Conjunction with several Ministers named in it, they were made the Judges too of Ignorance and Insufficiency^a; and now, tho' that former Power had not serv'd their Purpose, they were willing to try whether this other might not prove more successful. There was nothing, indeed, in the Articles, at first exhibited against him, that led them to this Attempt; but the Depositions of some of those forward Witnesses, that swore to them, afforded some Foundation for it. For one of them had declar'd, that he believ'd Mr. Pocock to be destitute of the Spirit, tho' he preach'd saving Truths according to the Letter; and another had depos'd, that he sometimes preached pretty well, but at other Times not so well; and that his Deadness, and Dullness drove People from hearing him. But this new Danger, which he was expos'd to, fill'd several learned Men, of much Fame and Eminence, at that Time in Oxford, with a great deal of Indignation; and they resolv'd to go to the Place, where the Commissioners were to meet, and expostulate with them about it. In the Number of those that went, were Dr. Ward, Dr. Wilkins, Dr. Wallis, and Dr. Owen; and they all labour'd, with much Earnestness, to convince those Men of the strange Absurdity of what they were undertaking: Particularly Dr. Owen, who endeavour'd, with some Warmth, to make them sensible of the infinite Contempt and Reproach which would certainly fall upon them, when it should be said, that they had turn'd out a Man for Insufficiency, whom all the Learned, not of England only, but of all Europe, so justly admir'd for his vast Knowledge, and extraordinary Accomplishments: And being himself one of the Commissioners appointed by that Act, he added, that he was now come to deliver himself, as well as he could, from a Share in such Disgrace, by protesting against a Proceeding so strangely foolish, and unjust. The Commissioners, being very much mortified at the Remonstrances of so many eminent Men, especially of Dr. Owen, in whom they had a particular Confidence, thought it best for them wholly to put an End to the Matter, and so discharg'd Mr. Pocock from any further Attendance. And, indeed, he had been sufficiently tired with it; this Persecution, which lasted for many Months, being the most grievous to him of all that he had undergone. It made him, as he declar'd to the World some Time after^b, utterly incapable of Study, it being impossible for him, when he attempted it, duely to remember what he had to do, or to apply himself to it with any Attention. And, doubtless, the Characters of the Persons, under whom he suffered, added not a little to the Weight of his Sufferings; being such as hated Learning, out of Zeal for Religion, and with large Pretences to Godliness laboured to undermine the true Supports of it. A Sort of Men, as he himself describes them^c, absurd and unreasonable, and the Pest of the Age in which they liv'd. Indeed, in those Times of Disorder and Confusion, amongst other strange Opinions, which found an easy Entertainment with great Numbers of People, the Contempt and even Hatred of Learning prevail'd to a very great Degree. About the Year 1650, Mr. Pocock had complain'd^d, in the Book he then publish'd, of a Sort of Men who boldly declared, all the Kinds of it to be injurious to Religion; and, therefore, that it ought to be wholly banish'd from all Christian Commonwealths: Particularly, that it was sufficient for every one to be acquainted with his Mother-Tongue alone, and that the Time that was employed in obtaining the Knowledge of other Languages, was utterly lost; so that, as he observ'd, the very Way which Julian the Apostate made choice of, for the Destruction of Christianity, was thought the only Means of promoting it: And how much the same Opinion obtain'd in the University of Oxford itself, in a few Years after this, amongst some who had made themselves considerable Men there, appears from a Letter of Dr. Langbaine to Mr. Selden, the inserting Part whereof, may not, perhaps, be unacceptable. After he had given in it, his Sense of an antient Greek Custom, in Answer to a Letter he had receiv'd from that learned Man, he went on in this Manner:

' — 'Tis true, the Problem might suit very well for the Fire-side, in a Winter Night; but I am sorry I have Occasion to say, that I fear we must be forc'd, e'er long, to bid good Night to our Noctes Atticæ. I was not so much troubled to hear of that Fellow, who lately in London maintain'd in Publick, that Learning is a Sin, as to see some Men (who would be accounted none of the meanest amongst ourselves, here at home) under Pretence of Piety, go about to banish it in the University. I cannot make any better Construction of a late Order made by those, whom we call Visitors, upon Occasion of an Election last Week, at All-Souls College, to this Effect: That, for the future, no Scholar be chosen into any Place in any College, unless he bring a Testimony, under the Hands of four Persons, at the least, (not Electors) known to these Visitors to be truly godly Men, that he who stands for such a Place is himself truly godly. By arrogating to themselves this Power, they sit Judges of all Mens Consciences, and have rejected some, against whom they had no other Exceptions (being certified by such to whom their Conversations were best known, to be unblameable and stably elected, after due Examination and Approbation of their Sufficiency by that Society) merely upon this Account, that the Persons, who testified in their Behalf, are not known to these Visitors, to be regenerate. I intend, God willing, e'er long, to have an Election in our College, and have profess'd, that I will not submit to this Order; how I shall speed in it, I do not pretend to foresee; but if I be baffled, I shall hardly be silent. Sir, excuse this Passion of,

Qu. Coll. Oxon,
Nov. 8, 1653.

Your most humble Servant,
GER. LANGBAINE.

UPON the Head of Mr. Pocock's Troubles I shall only add, that one of the Commissioners, who voted for acquitting him, Mr. Strowde, of Ruscomb in Berkshire, had Occasion for his Testimony, after the King's Restoration, to secure a considerable Interest of his, then in Question, which was readily, and, I believe, effectually obtained. That Gentleman desiring the Renewal of a Lease belonging to one Mr. Chappel, as Prebendary of Sarum, was refused, mainly because he was represented to be a Phanatick. Hereupon Dr. Owen, who in the self-same Affair had been very active and serviceable to Mr. Pocock, writes to him, desiring, 'That, if he remembered who the Man in former Time hath appeared for, and manifested a Respect unto Worth, Learning, and the Ministry, he would be pleas'd to make it a Ground of interceding with Mr. Chappel, by his Letter, that he may obtain that lawful Favour of the Renewal of his Lease, which an honest Man may justly expect.' Mr. Pocock was, doubtless, glad of this Opportunity, to discharge a Debt of Gratitude to Mr. Strowde, and Dr. Owen, at the same Time; and, therefore, wrote immediately to Mr. Chappel, tho' then altogether a Stranger to him, excusing the Liberty he took, on the Score of Gratitude, which obliged him, at the Desire of Friends, to attest what he knew concerning Mr. Strowde, a Suitor to him for the Renewal of a Lease: 'It seems, adds he, he is represented to you as a Phanatick. I am a greater Stranger to him, than to be much acquainted with his Opinions. Only thus much: When I was vehemently persecuted by Phanatics, in the Time of their Power, and their chief Accusations being my Conformity to the Church of England, I found him a Friend against them, and one who joined, with others, under his Hand and Seal to acquit me out of that Court; so that they could not have their Will against me. Out of which Respect, I could not but in Gratitude acknowledge the Favour then done me, and my Desire of doing him any good Office. If at your Hands he may find that Favour of being receiv'd as your Tenant, I shall be very glad, and think myself Partaker of your Courtesy, &c.' We have Reason to believe, that this Interposition had the Effect desired, and this Event may serve as an useful Admonition, at all Times, to Men in Power, still to temper their Zeal for the ruling Interest, with Equity and Benevolence, towards Men of Worth and Modesty, whose Hap it is to differ from them in Religion and Politicks, remembering, that every Exercise of so commendable a Moderation, may lay up in Store for them signal good Offices, against the Time, when an unexpected Vicissitude shall lay them at the Mercy of those they have oblig'd.

I MUST now return back again to the Year 1650, to pick up some Things that occur'd between that Time, and the Troubles above related, and which were designedly postpon'd, that that those remarkable Events might neither interrupt, nor receive Interruption from, the orderly Course of the History in Hand.

THE only remarkable Thing in this Year, hitherto untouched, is, that towards the latter End of it, Mr. Pocock began his Design of translating Maimonides's Porta Mosi; of which more hereafter. The Year following, Mr. Abraham Wheelock, Arabick Professor at Cambridge, was preparing his Edition of the Perfick Gospels, being the first of the Kind, with a Latin Translation and Notes; for the perfecting of which Mr. Pocock lent him a Manuscript Copy so good, that Mr. Wheelock, in a Letter to him, professes, that had it not been for his Fear of oppressing his Amanuensis, he would, upon Sight thereof, have begun his Work again. On this Occasion, Mr. Wheelock relates something very surprizing. His Amanuensis's Name was Austin, a Fellow of King's-College in Cambridge. 'This young Man, says he, in the Space of two Months Time, not knowing a Letter in Arabick, or Perfick, at the Beginning, sent a Letter to me in Norfolk of peculiar Passages. So that, of his Age, I never met with the like; and his indefatigable Pains, and Honesty, or Ingenuity, exceed, if possible, his Capacity.' But much happier had it been for himself, and the World, if this extraordinary Person had gone on more leisurely in his Oriental Studies. For his excessive Application to them, ended in Distraction and Death, Ann. 1654, just as he was designed to go on with the Impression of Mr. Wheelock's Perfick Gospels, who lived only to see it carried on to the 6th or 7th Verse of the 18th Chap. of St. Matthew.

IN the following Year, 1652, Mr. Selden, in a Letter, April 14, mentions to Mr. Pocock, that he had written to Dr. Langbaine, touching a Preparative for an Edition Arabico-Latin of Eutychius Alexandrinus, as a Thing that would be acceptable to that Part of the World, which cares for Books; adding, that whatever was necessary to it, he would readily defray. 'I beseech you, continues he, advise with him about it, and give us your Direction and Assistance.' Mr. Selden went no further at this Time; but the 11th of the next Month, broke the Design wholly to him, begging him, that he would translate Eutychius, and promising him, upon his Credit, that it should be advantageous to him in some other Way, as that the Time would not be mispent. Mr. Selden very much feared, that Mr. Pocock, for want of Time, and perhaps for other Reasons, would appear disinclin'd to the Work, and seems overjoy'd at the Receipt of his Letter, the 18th of the same Month, wherein he promised a Compliance. But of this also, more shall be said in due Time. This Year was further famous, in the History of Learning, for the first Appearance of a Design which did infinite Honour to our Church and Nation, as well as Service to Letters and Religion in general; I mean the Edition of the Polyglott Bible. A Work wherein, from the Beginning, scarce a Step was taken till communicated to Mr. Pocock, and without whose Assistance, it must have wanted much of that Perfection, which gives it a just Preference to every other Work of that Kind. But intending a particular Account of this noble Work, when we arrive at the Æra of its Publication, I shall speak no more of it at present.

BUT fruitful as this Year was in giving Birth to learned Designs, and in employing learned Heads, it proved fatal to a most excellent Scholar, and exemplary Christian, Mr. John Greaves, Mr. Pocock's most intimate and generous Friend. Some Time in August, he and Dr. Langbaine made a Journey to Cambridge, by way of London; which, perhaps, was the last Interview between him and Mr. Greaves. For in October following, he died in London. And no sooner was Mr. Pocock returned home, but himself was seized with a Fit of Sickness, which, if it did not owe its Rise to the Loss of his Friend, was probably much increas'd thereby.

NOTHING else, except his Troubles before the Committee already spoken of, happened worthy of Notice, either to Mr. Pocock, or his Friends, till the latter End of November 1654, when the learned Mr. Selden departed this Life. Of which Event, Dr. Langbaine gave him Notice, from London, in the following Letter, dated, London, Dec. 2, 1654.

'I came here only Time enough to see and speak with our good Friend, Mr. Selden, who died on Thursday Night, about eight o'Clock. He told me on Wednesday (then very weak) in the Hearing of one of his Executors, Mr. Heywood, how he had disposed of his Impression of Eutychius, to you, and myself, (and so he did by a Codicil made to his Will, in June 1653,) I mentioned to him, that he had often spoken of intended Notes; and upon that he gave Order, that all Letters or Notes concerning that Author, should be delivered to us. All other Papers of his own Hand, he had before peremptorily commanded to be burned. Yesterday I had the Sight of so much of his Will, as concerns the University. He has given to our publick Library all his Manuscripts of the Oriental Tongues, and Greek (not otherwise particularly disposed of) and all his Rabbinical and Talmudical Books, which are not there already, or not of the same Editions. These to be taken out of his Library by you and myself. Item, All his Marbles, Statues, Heads, and Greek Pieces, to be conveyed to Oxford, at the Charge of his Executors, and there placed on the Walls of the Library. The Executors are Justice Hales, Mr. Vaughan, Mr. Heywood, and Mr. Jeux; who desire that you would speedily repair hither, to view and select what belongs to the University, before

‘ before his Library be otherwise meddled with. And to that Purpose, I have writ to the ‘ Vice-chancellor and Mr. Barlow, to send up the most perfect Catalogue of the publick Li‘ brary, for our Direction, and the Executors Satisfaction. To their Discretion he hath left
 ‘ all the Remainder of his Books, not otherwise particularly bequeath’d, either to be divided ‘ among themselves, or to be sent to the University, or some College or Colleges, as they ‘ shall think fit. In the same Box, with his Will, he hath left a short Paper of Inscription
 ‘ for his Monument. He is to be buried in the Temple; but when, I cannot tell, &c.’
 I should have observed, that some Time in the Year 1654, the famous Golius, Arabick Professor of Leyden, published his long expected Arabick Lexicon. He had been twice sent into the East for his greater Improvement in that Language, and, perhaps, was the only Person of that Age, who equall’d Mr. Pocock in that Part of Learning. Golius himself confessed, that Mr. Pocock had, in this Respect, no Superior; as appears by his presenting him with a Copy of his Lexicon, thus inscrib’d: Virtute atque Doctrinâ eximio ac præclaro Viro, D^{no}. Edv.
Pocock, Literaturæ Orientalis Peritia, nulli secundo. In Return for which, Mr. Pocock sent him a just Elogium on his Performance, and a Present of his Specimen Hist. Arab. for which, on the 1st of October, he received Golius’s Thanks, and Commendations, to a high Degree, which probably came to his Hand much about the Time that his Sufficiency was called in Question, before the Berkshire Committee. And sure, there was something odd and whimsical in the Circumstances and Situation of the good Man, to be one Day caref’d by the greatest Scholars in Europe, and set up as an Oracle for resolving Difficulties in the abstrusest Parts of Learning, and the next, perhaps, convened to answer the Articles exhibited against him, by his illiterate Parishioners of Childry, for Ignorance and Insufficiency.

HIS Troubles, from this Sort of Men, being, at length, got over, he return’d again to his Studies, and in the same Year, 1655, he published his Porta Moses, being six prefatory Discourses of Moses Maimonides, which in the Original were Arabick, but according to the general Usage of the Jews, who have written in that Language, express’d in Hebrew Cha- raeters, together with his own Latin Translation of them, and a very large Appendix of Mis- cellaneous Notes. It was printed at Oxford, and as his Specimen Historiæ Arabum, and a small Piece of his Friend, Mr. John Greaves, were the two first Pieces, that came from the Arabick Press of that Place; so this Porta Moses was the first Fruits of the Hebrew Press there, the Letters of it having been, on the Request of Dr. Langbaine, founded at the Charge of the University, upon the Assurance he gave, that something of Mr. Pocock’s should be speedily printed with them. Maimonides was a Person of a vast Reputation for Learning, not only amongst his own People, but the Mahometans too; and, indeed, by the best Judges, is held to be one, who, of all the Writers of that Sort, is least guilty of Trifling: Wherefore Mr. Po- cock could not but think the publishing these Tracts (wherein an Account is given, in a very clear Method, of the History and Nature of the Talmud, and the Jewish Faith and Discipline) would be very acceptable to learned Men; especially, considering that they had never yet been printed in the Original Arabick, but only in a Hebrew Translation of them, made from imperfect Copies; whereas the Manuscripts he now made use of, were very good, and some of them, as he imagined, the very Originals, written by the Author’s own Hand. But besides the Usefulness of these Tracts, considered in themselves, he was encouraged to the Publication of them in the Manner before mentioned, on another View; namely, that according to his Duty as a Professor, he might promote the Advantage of those, who should addict themselves to the Study of Arabick, and Rabbinical Learning. For there being many Jewish Manuscripts of good Account, written thus in the Arab Tongue, but with Hebrew Letters; he was willing to assist them with this Specimen of that Way of Writing, which, as he declares in the Preface, contain’d much more of the Kind, than had ever yet been printed.

BUT of what Account soever these Tracts of Moses Maimonides are, the Miscellaneous Notes, which Mr. Pocock added to them, as they exceed them in Length, so doubtless they do also in Usefulness. In which his chief Design is to shew, by many Instances, how much the Knowledge of Arabick, and Rabbinical Learning, will contribute towards the finding out the genuine Sense of many difficult Places of Holy Scripture. In the four first Chapters of these Notes, he largely considers and explains several Texts of the New Testament, which, being cited from the Old, for the most Part, according to the Version of the Septuagint, seem to be very different from the Original Hebrew. And as he gives very learned Accounts of the true Meaning of them; so he proves, that there is no sufficient Reason to conclude from those seeming Differences, that the antient Hebrew Copies, made use of by the Seventy Inter- preters, had, as some learned Men have thought, other Readings in those Places, than what are still extant. The Design of the 5th Chapter is, to prove, from the Custom among the Jews, of whitening the Graves of their Dead, to prevent being polluted by them, that the Sepulchers appearing beautiful, to which our Blessed Saviour compares the Scribes and Pharisees, Matt.
xxiii. 27. are the same with the Graves that appear not, to which they are also likened by him, Luke xi. 44. So giving a clear Sense of those two Places of Scripture, which to those who do not consider that Custom, are hard to be understood. In the 6th Chapter, which is very ‘ Viz. Heb. viii. 9. from Jer. xxxi. 32. Rom. ix. 33. and x. 11. and 1 Pet. ii. 6. from Isa. xxviii. 16. Matt.

 ii. 6. from Mic. v. 2. Acts xiii. 41. from Hab. i. v. Heb. x. 38. from Hab. ii. 4. &c.

very long, he gives a large Account of the several Opinions of the Jews concerning the Resurrection of the Dead; and being mov'd thereto by the Resemblance he had observ'd between these Opinions, and those of the Followers of Mahomet, in the next Chapter he recites from the most learned Writers of that Sect, the Sentiments of those People about the same Matter. In the 8th Chapter, he shews the Reason, why the modern Jews, who commonly so superstitiously adhere to the Doctrines of their Fore-fathers, do yet differ from them in their Exposition of the second Psalm, which was generally understood, by their ancient Writers, to be a Prophecy concerning the Messiah; namely, that by these Means they might be the better able to answer the Arguments of Christians. Upon this Occasion, by the Help of two Manuscript Copies of the Commentaries of Kimchi on the latter Prophets, he restores several Passages relating to the Christians, which, in the printed Copies of that Work, are now left out. And afterwards he vindicates that Prophecy concerning the Messiah, at Jer. xxxi. 22. which Calvin, in his Explication of it, so readily gave up to the Adversaries of Christianity. Finally, his Business in the 9th and last Chapter is, to give an Account, from the Jewish Writers, of those Traditions of their Elders concerning Washings and Vows, for which our Saviour, Mark vii. 11. reprov'd the Scribes and Pharisees; whereby he brings a great deal of Light to several obscure Passages of Holy Scripture.

THE excellent Learning and Usefulness of this Performance drew upon Mr. Pocock, from all Quarters, great and just Commendations. From abroad, Matthias Pasor, a Professor at Groningen, and his first Arabick Master at Oxford, expressed his Thanks, and the great Pleasure he had, in reading his learned Attempts to reconcile the Septuagint Version, which is confirmed by the Apostle, to the Hebrew Text. Alting, another Professor, of the same University, having received Mr. Pocock's Book, as a Present from Dr. Reynolds, with whom he formerly liv'd in England, acknowledges, in a Letter to the Author himself, with whom he oft corresponded, the exquisite Learning of this Work. At home, his old Friend, the very learned Mr. Thomas Greaves, expresses himself to be so delighted with his Book and learned Notes, that he knew not how to be thankful enough. Sir Kenelm Digby also, to whom a Copy had been presented by the Author's Direction, writes thus to him. 'It joyeth me much to see, that one of our Nation, in these unquiet Times (which Condition is the greatest Enemy to Learning) hath given a Piece to the World, that may be the Envy of the learnedest Ages following.'

I HAVE only to add farther concerning this Book, that the Index to the Text of Maimonides was compiled by Mr. Henry Chapman, who, in a Letter to Mr. Pocock, dated Jan. 3, 1653, offered to do the same for the Miscellaneous Notes, and probably his Offer was accepted. I am sorry, that it is not in my Power to acquaint the World with any Thing more concerning this learned Gentleman, than that his Letter was dated from Battersey.

EARLY this Year, 1655, Mr. Pocock laboured under a severe Disease at Ghildrey, as we learn from two Letters of Dr. Langbaine's to him, the one dated in January, the other in March; and of whatever Kind it was, it seems to have continued upon him more or less, till the Middle of the Summer following; after which Dr. Walton writes to him, expressing his Joy for the Recovery of his Health.

THE Year following, i. e. 1656, affords but little material relating to our Subject, except it be, that then Mr. Pocock entertained some Thoughts of publishing Rabbi Tanchum's Expositions on the Old Testament. He was, as our Author himself informs us, in the Preface to the Commentary on Micah, an Hierosolymitan Jew. 'He wrote Notes, continues he, in the Arabick Language, on the whole Old Testament, (as himself declares) tho' I have not had the Happiness to see them on divers of the Books thereof. On the Prophets (all but Isaiah) I have. When he lived, I know not; only it appears, that he was after the Time of Moses Maimonides, whom he often cites, and follows in many Things.' What hindered the Execution of this Design, we cannot say; but, most probably, it was the Want of due Encouragement. It must be confessed, that at this Time, there were two very great Works going forward, that of the English Polyglott, already mentioned, and Bee's Edition of the Critici Sacri; so that there was less Reason to expect the Assistance, which so great a Work would require. The learned Mr. Boncle, then Fellow of Eaton-College, though deeply engaged in a great Variety of Business, generously offered to correct two Books after the Press, desiring that Leviticus might be one of them. He further proposed to get some Bookseller in London to undertake the Printing of Rabbi Tanchum, tho' he then apprehended, that the two Works above-mentioned, neither of them as then finished, would prove an Obstruction to his Wishes. The Miscarriage of this Design, to whatever Cause it was owing, was no small Damage to sacred Literature. For, if we may guess by the noble Use our Author made of Rabbi Tanchum's Commentaries, their Publication might have been attended with Advantages equal, or rather superior to what have been received from any other Rabbinical Writings. Besides, for ought that appears, Mr. Pocock was the only Person in Europe, that possessed any MSS. of Rabbi Tanchum. The learned Jews were surprized to hear of this, and many other fine Things of like Kind, in the Hands of Mr. Pocock, which were otherwise utterly unknown to them; as Manasseh Ben Israel himself professed to Mr. Boncle. But notwithstanding all this, neither then, nor at any Time after, had he an Opportunity of communicating these Oriental Treasures to the learned World; but they lie in the Archives of the Bodleian Library, till better Times shall produce a Patron, that will give them Light and Liberty.

AND now we are arrived at the Year 1657, in which the English Polyglott Edition of the Bible was sent into the World: A Work it was of such immense Cost and Labour, as would have deterred most Men from undertaking it, in the quietest Times, and under the most prosperous Circumstances. But, to the immortal Honour of our English Church and Nation, it was carried on and perfected at a Season, when sober Religion and sound Learning were discouraged and depressed by the greatest Enemy to both, a rampant Enthusiasm. The loyal and episcopal Clergy being all dispossessed of their Preferments, or, at least, having lost the most profitable of them, could only contribute to this Work by their Credit, their Pains and Erudition; all which were employed therein, to a Degree that almost exceeds Belief.

WHEN such a Design was carrying on, in which Oriental Learning was to make its utmost Efforts, one might naturally suppose, that the Undertaker would crave the Assistance of Mr. Pocock, who, besides his superior Knowledge in the Eastern Languages, was able to supply valuable MSS. relating to most of the Oriental Versions of the Bible. But our Author, ever attentive to the Interests of Religion and Learning, prevented all Application: For he no sooner heard, that such a Design was on Foot, but he offered his Advice upon it, by Dr. Aspwell, to Dr. *Brian Walton, who was the first Promoter, the chief Compiler, and the sole Editor of the Polyglott Bible. From that Time Dr. Walton and Mr. Thorndike†, his Second in the Work, maintained a frequent Correspondence with Mr. Pocock, giving him a punctual Account, how it proceeded, asking his Advice in almost every Step they took, and desiring all proper Assistance from him. By Means of these Letters, most of which are still extant, we are happily able to inform the World of some Particulars relating to that most noble Edition of the Bible, which might otherwise be lost, or forgotten. For which Reason, and also on account of the Share our Author had in the Work, I shall here lay together such Notices concerning it, and the learned Promoters of it, as have fallen in my Way, heartily wishing I could have gratified myself and the Reader with more Particulars about an Affair, which made the Clergy and Church of England appear glorious under their greatest Distress.

DR. Brian Walton, having in the long Rebellion lost all his Preferments for his Adherence to Monarchy and Episcopacy, had for some Years spent Part of his Time in collecting and adjusting proper Materials for a Polyglott Bible. And after communicating his Intentions to, and taking the Advice of most of the English Bishops then living, in the Year 1652, having already

* This most worthy Person, Brian Walton, was born in Cleiveland, Yorkshire, A. D. 1600, was matriculated in the University of Cambridge, July 4, 1616, being then a Sizar of Magdalen-College: But removed from thence to Peter-House, where he was admitted a Sizar, Dec. 4, 1618, under Mr. Blake: And in that College he commenced Bachelor of Arts, An. 1619, Master of Arts, An. 1623, and Doctor of Divinity, An. 1639. He was Prebendary of St. Paul's, but dispossessed of that, and all his other Preferments, for his Loyalty and Orthodoxy. At the Restoration, he was made Bishop of Chester; but did not long enjoy that Advancement; his excessive Labours having probably hastened his End; for he died in Aldersgate-street, in the Year 1661, Nov. 29, and on the 5th of the following Month, was, with great Honours and Solemnity, buried in the Cathedral of St. Paul's, opposite to the Lord Hatton's Monument. The Bishop of London performed the Funeral Service, and his Corpse was attended by the Earls of Derby and Bridgewater, besides several more of the Nobility, as also by the greatest Number of the Bishops in their Rochets, and by the Deans and Prebendaries of many Cathedral Churches, together with a Multitude of learned Clergymen, from Sadlers-Hall to the Place of Interment.

Besides compiling the Polyglott Bible, and writing large and very learned Prolegomena to it, he published a Defence of it against Dr. Owen, and another excellent Latin Treatise introductory to the Reading of the Oriental Tongues.

He was also very well skill'd in the Common Law of the Realm, especially so far as it relates to the Patrimonies and Liberties of the Church: This eminently appears from a little Book written in Defence of the Tythes within the City of London, according to the Proportion of two Shillings and nine Pence the Pound Rent.

† Mr. Herbert Thorndike, by some Expressions in his Will, is conceiv'd to have been a Native of Scamlesby, in the County of Lincoln: He was admitted of Trinity-College in Cambridge, and as Member of that Society, matriculated Dec. 18, 1613, where he took his Bachelor's Degree, An. 1616, and became Master of Arts in 1620; he was made junior Fellow of that College 1618, middle Fellow, An. 1620, and senior Fellow in the Year 1639; he was constituted likewise one of the University Preachers in 1631: He underwent the common Fate of those Clergy, who adhered to the King and the Church in the long Rebellion, being deprived of all his Preferments. At the Restoration, he recovered his Fellowship and Prebend of Westminster, between which two, he spent the Remainder of his Time in Retirement, Devotion and Study, and dying in good old Age, July 13, 1672, at Westminster, was buried, by his own Order, in the Way from his Lodgings to the Church, without any Solemnity, save of the ordinary Service. He ordered these Words to be put upon his Grave-Stone.

Hic jacet Corpus Herberti Thorndike, Præbendarii hujus Ecclesiæ, qui vivus veram Reformatæ Ecclesiæ Rationem ac Modum Precibusque Studiisque prosequabatur. Tu, Lector, Requiem ei & beatam in Christo Resurrectionem precare.

In the Year 1663, a Mandate, the Original whereof is yet extant in the Archives of the University of Cambridge, dated April 14, 1663, was sent down to that University, to confer the Degree of Doctor of Divinity on him, and Barn. Oley, A. M. which Honour, tho' freely offered, they both declined: But it was more for the Honour of Mr. Thorndike that, April 15, 1663, a Grace pass the House to this Effect.

Cum Herbertus Thorndike, S. Trin. Coll. Socius, & Westmonast. Ecclesiæ Præbendarius, ad nullos in S. Theol. Gradus de Industria hæcenus aspiraverit, ne Vicemagistri vel Decani superioris onus, in prædicto Collegio, subire per Leges necesse haberet: Placeat vobis ut annum jam quintum supra sexagesimum agens, Missionem impetret, & concessa in posterum ab omni munere Academico vacatione (in quantum per Statuta fieri possit) quasi Rude donatus, Locum inter Doctores in Exedris novissimum obtineat.

already obtained private Subscriptions to the Value of near 4000 Pounds, he published printed Proposals, with a Letter annexed to them, both which are here subjoined.

Worthy SIR,

‘ IT cannot be unknown to you, what great Benefit the Church of God hath reaped by the Care of learned Men in publishing the Holy Scriptures according to the best Copies in the Original, and other learned Tongues, with the most ancient and approved Translations, which have been of great Authority and Use. And altho’ among others, those famous Editions of the Complutense, Antwerp, and the late Paris Bibles be justly had in high Esteem and Veneration; yet, without any Derogation from the just Praise of the Publishers, it may be truly said, that much may be added to make the Editions more compleat and useful, by the Diligence of others, and yet the Price very much lessened, whereby they may become more common, and fit for private Libraries. To this End, there is a Description of a more perfect Edition than any hitherto extant (as we conceive) drawn up with a Specimen thereof, which, as it hath been approved by the most judicious and learned Men of this Church, so, in regard the Charge will exceed the Ability of a private Purse, it hath been thought fit to desire the Assistance of such noble and publick-spirited Persons, as are able to advance Moneys towards the Printing, who may receive Copies according to the Sums by them expended. Wherein, as diverse Persons of Worth have already subscribed and promised considerable Sums, amounting to above half the Charge; so it is hoped, that others, to whom it shall be offered, will be ready, both by their own Examples, according to their Abilities, and by stirring up such well-affected Persons, as they are acquainted with, to further a Work so much tending to the Glory of God, the publick Good of Religion and Learning, and the Honour of our Nation. To this Purpose also Propositions, which with the said Description, and a Form of Subscription, are herewith sent you; to which you are desired, out of your Zeal to the publick Good, to procure what Subscriptions you can. The Form you see is conditional, and ties no Man to the Payment of any Thing, till the full Sum be subscribed, and Care shall be taken to secure the Copies to the Subscribers, in such a Way, as, by the Advice of Counsel on the Behalf of the Subscribers, shall be thought reasonable and just. There are divers employed to this End in divers Parts of the Land, and so hopeful a Progress is made, that we doubt not within a few Months, but that there will be good Encouragement to go on, and to prepare for the Work; for we cannot believe any Gentleman will be backward to advance so noble a Work, considering, that all shall be put in the Hands of a Person of known Worth and Integrity, and shall be paid by the Subscribers only by Degrees, as the Work goes on, and that they shall receive Copies of a greater Value than what is laid out. It is desired, that the several Subscriptions may be returned by the First of April next, if it may be, or otherwise as soon as conveniently, to Dr. Walton, at Dr. William Fuller’s House, in St. Giles, Cripplegate, Church-Yard; to whom, you may likewise direct your Letters, if there shall be any other Occasion to send to us: We need not say to those, who aim at the publick Good, that the Work will recompence the Pains of all that shall promote it; of which, yet, we are very confident. Thus, hoping you will use your best Endeavours to advance so pious a Design, and that the Author of those sacred Volumes will bless your Pains and ours with answerable Success, we commit you to his Keeping, and rest

‘ To our worthy Friend Mr. John Carter, Minister of God’s Word in Norwich, by him to be communicated to Mr. Lovering and Mr. Sherman.

‘ PROPOSITIONS concerning the Printing of the Bible, in the Original, and other learned Languages.

‘ WHEREAS the former Editions, tho’ less perfect, and not so fit for Use, have been printed at the publick Charge of Princes and great Persons; and the Charge of this Work will exceed the Ability of an ordinary Person; whereupon divers Persons of Worth have expressed their Readiness to join in the Charge of the Impression: And it is hoped, that others, who wish well to Learning and Religion, will assist in a Work so much tending to the publick Good, and Honour of the Church of England and of the Nation, and so free from Interests of all Parties; especially considering, that as the Edition will be much better than any formerly made, so the Price will be much less.

‘ THEREFORE, for the securing of all such as shall promote so good a Work, either by free Gift, or advancing of Moneys to be repaid by Copies; and for the encouraging of such as shall solicit and stir up others to contribute, these Propositions are offered, which shall, God willing, be performed.

1. 'THAT whatsoever Moneys shall be raised, shall be paid into the Hands of William Humble, Esq; Treasurer for this Purpose, who will be accountable for the Moneys received, and will give Receipts to every one, that shall pay in any Money, whereby they may be assured, that the same shall be employed no otherwise, than for the Use intended, and not issued out, but by Warrant of Persons mentioned. The like Assurance shall be given under the Hand of the Publisher, and upon Security of the Impression, which shall be put in the Hands of some Persons interested, residing in London, for receiving Copies proportionable to the Sums so paid, as soon as the Work shall be finished, or otherwise, as the several Volumes shall be printed.
2. 'THE Treasurer shall not issue any Moneys, but by Warrant under the Hands of the Lord Primate of Armagh, Dr. William Fuller, Dr. Brune Ryves, Dr. Samuel Baker, Mr. Richard Drake, B. D. or two of them, whereof the Lord Primate or Dr. Fuller to be one, and shall give Account every six Months to four Persons appointed by those that advance, to receive the Accounts of all Moneys received or issued out, which shall be showed to all Persons interested, who shall desire the same.
3. 'THOSE that by free Gift, or otherwise, shall in any considerable Manner further the Work, besides Copies to be given them, shall be acknowledged as Patrons or Promoters of so noble a Work.
4. 'THOSE that shall collect and raise any Sum by the free Contribution of Persons well affected, shall, for every 10 Pounds, have one Copy; and if any lesser Sum of 40 Shillings, or upwards, be so raised by any at present, if the said Sum be made up 10 Pounds by equal Payments in four six Months next following, he shall have one perfect Copy, and so according to that Proportion, for any greater Sum.
5. 'THOSE that shall advance any Sum out of their own Estate, shall, for every 10 Pounds have one Copy, and for 50 Pounds six Copies, and so for any greater Sum; and the Money so advanced shall, for the Ease and Security of the Advancer, be paid thus: Only a fifth Part in Hand, and the rest in four six Months, and at every six Months Payment, Account shall be given of the Moneys formerly paid, and of the Progress of the Work, and then they may also receive such Volumes, as shall be finished, according to the Number of Copies due to them, if they please, they paying another fifth Part towards the Printing of the next Volume.
6. 'THE Persons to be employed in preparing of Copies, correcting the Press, overseeing the managing of the Work, &c.—till all be finished, shall be Dr. Stokes, Mr. Whelocke, Mr. Thorndike, Mr. Edw. Pocock, Mr. Greaves, Mr. Vicars, Mr. Thomas Smith, together with Dr. Walton, and some other to assist in Prosecution of Business, &c.—And if any of them shall happen to dye, or be otherwise hindered, some other shall be nominated with Approbation of the rest, for carrying on the Work, wherein the Advice of the Lord Primate, Mr. Selden, Dr. Sheldon, Dr. Saunderson, Dr. Sterne, Dr. Hammond, and other learned Men, who have approved the Work, shall be desired, &c.—
7. 'THE Work shall not be begun, till there be enough paid in to finish the first Volume, viz. the Pentateuch, viz. about 1500 Pounds; nor the other Volumes, till a proportionable Sum for each be brought in, viz. about 1200 Pounds.
8. 'IT is desired, that the first Payment of Moneys to be advanced, may be at or before the first of Feb. 1652, and if it shall appear, that there is enough to print the first Volume, viz. the Pentateuch, the Work shall be begun, as soon as Things needful shall be prepared, which is hoped will be within 3 Months then next following, and within 3 Years after it is hoped the whole Work will be perfected, (two Presses being kept at Work.)
9. 'WHATEVER shall be further reasonably devised or propounded for the better managing and carrying on of the Work, and securing of all Persons interested, shall be willingly assented to.

Mr. Pocock had heard something of this noble Undertaking early in this Year, and probably had written to Mr. Selden for Information about the Nature of it, and the Hands that would be employed in it: Whether he then offered his Assistance, if Need were, I cannot certainly learn, but think it not improbable, that he did; for in a Letter from Mr. Selden to our Author, which bears Date in February 1652, he writes thus: 'It seems not yet, that there is any such naming of Men for that Employment; divers are, in Discourse, talked of; and there be, I doubt, but a few fit: How to have it proceed without you, I know not; but I know too, that it must be a great Diversion to your excellent Studies, and a turning them to an illiberal Attendance. Whatsoever you wish in it, I shall, as far as I have Opportunity, second.' Mr. Selden seems to have apprehended, that the Editor of this great Work would call for Mr. Pocock's Help in correcting the Arabick, as it came from the Press: Nor was he mistaken. For on the 28th of the following July, Dr. Walton writes to him, desiring to know, 'Whether his Occasions would permit him to assist, if the Impression went on, either by correcting the Arabick, the Proofs being weekly transmitted, or

‘ by comparing of Copies, or otherwise.’ But Mr. Pocock had too much Work upon his Hands to undertake the Correction of the Arabick from the Pres. He had, at Mr. Selden’s most earnest Solicitation, already begun to translate the Arabick Annals of Eutychius into Latin. Besides which, he was busy with Maimonides’s Porta Moysi, and consequently had but little Time to spare for a new and laborious Employment. He consented, however, to collate the Arabick Pentateuch, with two Copies of Saadias’s Translation, the one a Manuscript, the other printed in the Constantinopolitan Bibles, noting the Differences of each. And he also drew up a Preface concerning the Arabick Versions of that Part of the Bible, and the Reason of the various Readings in them; which Preface, together with the various Readings themselves, are published in the Appendix to the Polyglott Bible.

It seems, from Dr. Walton’s Letter abovementioned, that Mr. Pocock’s Advice related to every Part of this Design, not excepting the Apparatus or Prolegomena, and the Appendix, all which Considerations the Doctor assures him he had weighed, and should, to his Power, follow. The particular Directions are but few of them come to our Knowledge: I find, however, that he had informed Dr. Walton about one very necessary Point, viz. the Antiquity and Authority of the Arabick Version, as it stands in Michael de Jay’s Heptaglott, or Paris Edition of the Bible in seven Languages. ‘ He conceived, as he tells Mr. Pocock, ‘ that the Editor of this Work had followed that Arabick Version, which the French Embassador brought out of the East, which Scionita and Efronita were then translating into ‘ Latin, and which Erpenius says, is elegans & antiqua; but Mr. Pocock convinced him, ‘ that the Arabick, in Jay’s Edition, was no other than the Version of Saadias, which is ‘ printed in the Constantinopolitan Bible.’

THE Doctor desired further, to know what Copies, or ancient Manuscripts of Oriental Versions, were in the publick Library at Oxford, or in Mr. Pocock’s own private Collection: What the former produced, I know not; but from the latter came a very good Supply: As, first, the Gospels in Persian, which had never before been printed, were now published wholly from a Copy that was sent in by him, being a Manuscript above 300 Years old, of a Translation made from the Syriack, and therefore prefer’d to Mr. Wheelocke’s, which was of later Date, and only a Version from the Greek: Of this, that learned Gentleman was so sensible, while he was preparing his Edition of the Persian Gospels, that, upon the Lent of Mr. Pocock’s Copy, he declared in a Letter to him, that had it not been for his Fear of oppressing his Amanuensis, he would, upon Sight thereof, have begun his Work again.

2dly, His Syriack Manuscript of the whole Old Testament, and two other Manuscripts of the Psalms in the same Language; the Supply of this was the most seasonable, because one of Primate Usher’s Syriack Copies of the Pentateuch was in the Hands of Dr. Boote, then in France; who, soon after the Beginning of this Work, died there: So that if ever this Manuscript was recovered, it came too late for the Service of the Polyglott Edition. And tho’ the Lord Primate’s other Copy is declared by Mr. Thorndike to be more trusty than Mr. Pocock’s, yet he owns it was sometimes to be helped thereby: And with respect to that Part which corresponds with the second Tome, Dr. Walton professes, that they found his Copy to be more exactly written, than my Lord Primate’s, and therefore more useful.

3dly, An Æthiopick Manuscript of the Psalter, which Dr. Walton pronounces to be so exactly written, that they made it a Rule whereby to correct the Faults of the two printed Copies.

BUT to return to Dr. Walton’s first Letter to our Author upon this Subject. He acquaints him, that ‘ the Council of State, before whom, some having Relation to them, ‘ brought this Business, hoping they would have born the Charge out of the Publick, have ‘ lately given their Approbation and Recommendation of the Work, with Hopes of advancing 1000 Pounds to begin the Work; which, if they do, (adds he) I hope to get the ‘ rest advanced by private Hands, who will take Satisfaction in Copies.’ That the Council of State advanced the Sum here mentioned, or any Part thereof, I much question; because I find no more Mention of it in Dr. Walton’s Letters, and chiefly because not the least Notice is taken by him of any pecuniary Gift, in his Preface to the Polyglott Bible. It must, however, be confessed, to the Honour of that usurping Government, that they granted an Exemption from Duty to all the Paper, which was imported for the Use of that Edition. This Favour is owned by Dr. Walton in the Preface afore-mentioned, where, among other Benefactors to the Work, they are mentioned, Quorum Favore Chartam à Vætigalibus immunem habuimus. But that this high Piece of Service to Religion and Learning was the Act of the grand Usurper, Cromwell himself, I come to the Knowledge of, thro’ the Goodness of a Reverend and Learned Gentleman, who imparted to me a Copy of Dr. Castle’s Petition to the Protector for the like Indulgence to the Publication of his Heptaglott Lexicon; the Matter of which Petition, after a Preamble setting forth the Usefulness of that Lexicon, and in particular its Subserviency to the better Understanding of the Polyglott Bible, is as follows.

‘ Mr. Baker, of St. John’s College in Cambridge, who likewise was pleas’d to impart to me the Memoirs I have given of the Cambridge Writers, that were eminently concerned in the Polyglott Edition of the Bible.

‘MAY it please your Highness, for the Countenance and Encouragement of your Petitioners, that they may the better be enabled to accomplish the Undertaking, according to Expectation, to vouchsafe them the like Favour and Privilege, that your Highness hath formerly granted to the Publishers of that famous Work, (viz. the Polyglott Bible) and others, who were printing some Commentaries in relation thereunto, (viz. Bee's Critici Majores) that your Petitioners may have the Import of five Thousand Reams of Royal Paper, Excise and Custom free.’

WHO or what induced Cromwell to shew so much Munificence, we know not, but surely the Act was good and laudable; especially, considering that the Design thus encouraged, was conducted by a Set of Episcopal Divines, most of whom were known Enemies to his Administration, and the rest rather passive under the Usurpation, than Approvers of it. It may be too invidious to enquire, how it comes to pass, that this commendable Example has been so seldom followed by succeeding Governments, that were legal, and in other Respects gracious. But great Men in general are very apt to forget, that their Power extends no farther than their own Times, and that the Sons of Art are the Men, who must show them to Posterity. What, therefore, our Saviour said of Charity to Prophets, may, with proper Alterations, be applied to every Encourager of Learning. A Patron of Scholars shall have a Scholar's Reward; Justice and Gratitude will oblige them to transmit to Futurity, such signal Benefactions, with all due Advantage, tho' the Authors of them were otherwise the vilest of Men.

BESIDES this Favour from the Protector, large private Promises, and Subscriptions of Money, were made early in this Year, 1653, towards the Work. When the Proposals were sent abroad, viz. March 1, 1653, 4000 Pounds are affirmed to have been subscribed, which Sum was more than doubled in about two Months Time: For in a Letter from Mr. Thomas Greaves, dated the 4th of May following, he acquaints Mr. Pocock, ‘that Dr. Walton had assured him, that 9000 Pounds had then been promised, and that much more was likely to be added, and that he hoped within three Months to begin the Printing thereof.’ But it was the latter End of September, if not the Beginning of October, before the Impression of the first Tome, containing the Pentateuch, was entered upon: One Reason of this Delay was, that the Arabick Letters were not ready, and the Hebrew Types were mending; some Defects having been observed therein by Mr. Pocock; besides which, many of the Subscribers failed the Editor, neither advancing their first Payment, nor one Farthing afterwards; and he was too circumspect to begin till 1500 Pounds were paid in, to defray the Charges of the first Tome, according to the 7th Article of the Proposals. After which the Undertakers proceeded chearfully with the Work.

THE first Discouragement they met with, was the Death of Mr. *Abraham Wheelocke, the first Professor of the Arabick and Saxon Tongues in the University of Cambridge, which happened just before the first Tome was committed to the Press; so that they had not the least Use of him in that Work; his Province was, jointly with Mr. Castle†, to correct the Syriack and Arabick at the Press; but his Room was filled by Mr. Hyde, at the Recommendation of Mr. Pocock, who was desired by Dr. Walton to procure a fit Person for that Work.

By

* Abraham Wheelocke was born at Loppington, in Shropshire, (of which County likewise was his Patron and Founder, Sir Thomas Adams) and admitted of Trinity-College in Cambridge: There he became Bachelor of Arts, An. 1614; Master of Arts, An. 1618, and was admitted Fellow of Clare-Hall the Year following; he was made one of the University Preachers, An. 1623, and commenced Bachelor of Divinity in the Year 1625; he was Minister of St. Sepulchre's Church in Cambridge from the Year 1622 to the Year 1642.

About the same Time, (viz. 1622) he read the Arabick Lecture for Mr. (afterwards Sir Thomas) Adams, tho' it was not then settled; he receiving for the same 40 Pounds per Annum, remitted to him by quarterly Payments.

He read also the Saxon Lecture for Sir Henry Spelman, for which he received an annual Stipend, not settled, but voluntary; together with this, he gave Mr. Wheelocke the Vicarage of Middleton, in Norfolk, worth 50 Pounds per Annum, which was intended to be augmented out of the appropriate Parsonage, and to be the Ground of his intended Foundation, if Sir Henry's Death, which happened October 1, 1641, had not prevented it.

Multiplicity of Business probably shortened this learned Man's Days; for he died at London, whilst he was printing his Persian Gospels, in the Month of September 1653. I need only add, that after Sir Henry Spelman's Death, his Son, and upon his Death, his Grandson, continued to pay the Stipend of 20 Pounds per Annum for reading the Saxon Lecture at Cambridge, so long as Mr. Wheelocke lived.

† Edmund Castle, or Castell, was born at East-Hatley, in the County of Cambridge, being a younger Son of Robert Castell, of East-Hatley, Esq; He was matriculated a Pensioner (of Emmanuel-College, Cambridge) July 5, 1621; became Art. Bac. of the same College, 1624; Art. Mag. 1628; Theol. Bac. 1635, and S. T. P. by the King's Letters, An. 1660.

According to Mr. Newcourt, he was Vicar of Hatfield-Peverell, in Essex, which he resigned, An. 1638, and Rector of Wodeham-Walter, in the same County, which he also resigned, An. 1670, and was made Prebendary of Canterbury, An. 1667, by the King, to whom, two Years after, he dedicated his great Work, viz. Lexicon Heptaglotton, and says of himself in his Epistle Dedicatory: Mihi vero in Molendino hoc per tot annorum infra indefinenter occupato, dies ille tanquam festus & otiosus visus est, in quo tam Bibliis Polyglottis, quam Lexicis hisce promovendis, sexdecim aut octodecim horas dietim non insudavi. An Account almost incredible, had it not come from a Man of great Veracity, as well as Modesty. He farther assures that Prince, that in the Work then presented to him, he had entirely spent both a competent patrimonial Fortune, and all that he had been able to acquire himself, who was then in the 63d Year of his Age.

Together

By the 30th of October this Year, Mr. Pocock sent back to Dr. Walton, the first Sheet of the Pentateuch, with his own various Readings upon it, of which the Doctor owns the Receipt in a Letter, dated the first of the following December, and acknowledges them to be very useful. In the Close of the same Letter, he adds, 'I have some Hopes from a Friend at Rome, to get the Armenian Bible, and the Coptick Pentateuch and New Testament, which are in the Vatican, transcribed; which, if it can be had in any reasonable Time, may be added to these we have, and may make the last Tome.' That these Pieces did not come in Time, is certain, because they are not extant in the present Polyglott; and whether they ever came at all, I have not been able to learn.

ABOUT this Time, Mr. Pocock wrote to Dr. Walton and Mr. Thorndike, or both, upon two Points of Importance, relating to the Edition in Hand: The first was, a Proposal to have his own Copy of the Syriack Gospels, of another Translation, printed together with that of the Paris Edition; the other concerned the Latin of the Arabick Version, its Uncorrectness, and a Motion to have it mended. In answer to the former of these, Dr. Walton replies, Feb. 22, 1653, 'Your Syriack Gospels may be of Use for the various Readings, especially in the most material Places; but my Lord Primate thinks it not necessary to print both the Translations at large: If they be of any Antiquity, of which none can better judge than yourself, they will be the more acceptable: If the Difference from the other Translation be not great, they may be printed at the End of every Column, as we have done with Tecla's and the Roman Septuagint.' The Truth of the Case was, that two Syriack Translations of the Gospels would have increased the Expence of the Work, which, without any Addition to the first Design, was like to fall very heavy; and this Mr. Thorndike, in Effect, says in a Letter to Mr. Pocock, dated only two Days after Dr. Walton's; 'I have conferred, (says he) with my Lord Primate and Dr. Walton about your Motion of the other Syriack in the Gospels, as, perhaps, Dr. Walton may write to you about it hereafter, upon Consideration of the Charge which lies upon him, and makes a Difference in the Business.' Notwithstanding all which, Dr. Walton, two Years after, offered, that if Mr. Pocock's Syriack Gospels should, in his own Judgment, be fit to be translated, and joined with the other Translation, he would publish it with the rest in the New Testament; but, after the Intimation above given by Mr. Thorndike, our Author had too much Candour and Modesty to press the Matter any further. And thus it fell out, that no Manner of Use was made of Mr. Pocock's Syriack Gospels in the Polyglott, they not having been so much as collated for various Readings. The other Motion for mending the Latin of the Arabick Version was certainly of much more Importance, and a Proposal truly worthy of Mr. Pocock's sound Judgment and good Sense. For the Latin of an Arabick Version could be of no Service, but to such as were ignorant of that copious Language, and so long as it was incorrect, must often greatly deceive them; and accordingly in Fact, if we may believe Pere Simon, the Latin of the Arabick and other Eastern Versions led Mr. Pool, in his Synopsis, into frequent and grievous Mistakes. To this last Proposal, only Mr. Thorndike made a Reply, which inclines me to think, that Mr. Pocock mentioned it only to Mr. Thorndike, who seems never to have imparted it to Dr. Walton, for Reasons, which I think evidently appear in his Letter to Mr. Pocock on this Subject, in which he says:

'As to the Latin of the Arabick, I conceive the like might be said of the Syriack; but I do not hear you advise, that any Thing be done to rectify it; that is a Work that would be profitable, but troublesome; and I know not how plausible in another Man's Work: And truly I am of Advice, that the Business of this Work is, rather to settle the Originals, resting contented with giving the Translations anciently printed; it would be too much to undertake to do that, for all, which were fit to be done, in Time.'

TRUE it is, that the Motion was made too late; otherwise the complying with it would have been highly serviceable to the World; particularly, had the Latin of the Oriental Versions of the New Testament been exact and literal, it would let us into the Reading of those ancient Copies, from which those Versions were made, of which, by Reason of its present Laxness and Inaccuracy, no certain Judgment can be formed, but by such as competently understand the Originals. The same Advantage would have arisen from a true and servile Latin Version of such Eastern Translations of the Old Testament, as were made from the Septuagint, towards ascertaining the ancient Readings of it: But such is the Infelicity of all human Counsels and Undertakings, that those which seem nearest to Perfection, appear still capable

Together with the Prebend, the King gave him a Dispensation of Absence, in order to attend his Arabick Lecture at Cambridge; where he became the first settled Arabick Lecturer, by an Instrument under the Hand of Sir Tho. Adams, the Founder, dated June 20, 1666, after a 13 Years Vacancy of that Lecture, which, during Mr. Wheeloocke's Life, had been voluntary only. His Lectures were heard at first with great Applause, but, in a few Years, were so much neglected, that, being then easy, and disposed to be pleasant, he put up this Affix upon the School-Gates; Arabicæ Linguae Prælector cras ibit in Desertum. During this Period he was a Member of St. John's-College, being admitted there October 27, 1671:

He died at Higham-Gobyon, in Bedfordshire, An. 1685, whereof he was then Rector, where he lies buried, with a modest Epitaph.

capable of Improvement, and no sooner is one Defect supplied, but others immediately discover themselves.

IN the Year 1654, Dr. Walton acquaints Mr. Pocock, that after the Text of the Pentateuch should be printed off, which, he supposes, would be about Bartholomew-Tide, they had some Thoughts (if all Things could be got ready in Time) of printing the New Testament next, 'both because it is the principal Part, and would give Satisfaction to the most: So, adds he, Erpenius did with his Arabick, and so I perceive they did by the Parisian; that so, if any Thing should intervene, the chief Parts of the Bible might be first done. He concludes: 'By your next, I pray you let me have your Opinion.' What Mr. Pocock's Judgment was, concerning this Point, no where appears; but soon after Dr. Walton saw Cause to alter his Purpose, as he afterwards writes to our Author. 'I find, says he, tho' much desired by many, this is so much distast'd by Mr. Selden, and some others, whose Judgments I value, that, I think, we shall go on now with the other Books in Order, and the rather, because I find I shall hardly get all Things ready for the New Testament in so short a Time.'

AND now they were preparing for the second Tome of the Polyglott Bible, which contains the Historical Books; at which Time, Dr. Walton was put upon a fruitless Inquiry after the Chaldee Paraphrase upon the Cbronicles, which Ravius affirmed he had seen in the Bodleian Library at Oxford; but he was soon convinced, that Ravius was mistaken, there being no such Targum at Oxford, 'nor, adds he, in Cambridge, tho' some of Erpenius's Books be there.' However, it appeared afterwards, that they were both in an Error, as to this Targum on the Cbronicles; Ravius, in affirming he had seen it at Oxford, and Dr. Walton, in supposing it was not at Cambridge, where Mr. Samuel Clarke afterwards found, and transcribed it; of which more in its proper Place. In October this Year, the first Tome was finished, maugre the malicious Surmises of some envious and disaffected Persons, of whom Dr. Walton complains. It seems, the Zealots of those Days, not contented with getting into the warm Places of the ejected Clergy, envied them, even while they were starving in the Cause of Religion and Loyalty: They had effectually excluded them from serving God, and promoting his Holy Truths, as Churchmen, and they were uneasy at their glorious Efforts to do this, as Scholars.

IN July, 1655, they entered on the third Volume of the Bible, which contained the Writings of David, Solomon, and the Prophets, and finished the second Tome before the End of that Month; from which Time, we are unable to give a particular Detail of the Progress of this great Work, or to say any more, than that it was entirely finished towards the Close of the Year 1657, and that on the 12th of May 1658, Dr. Walton sent Mr. Pocock the remaining Parts of the Polyglott Bible, which he had not before presented him withal, as also those Manuscripts and Books, which he had lent them, except the Æthiopic Psalter, which Mr. Castle desired either to buy, or borrow.

AND thus, in about four Years, was finished the English Polyglott Bible, the Glory of that Age, and of the English Church and Nation, a Work vastly exceeding all former Attempts of that Kind, and that came so near Perfection, as to discourage all future ones. One would therefore think, that, at home at least, it should have been well entertained by all, that had any Regard for Religion and Learning; and yet, no sooner was it published, than some principal Men among the prevailing Party were very much offended at it; fearing, perhaps, the Indignation of Foreigners against them, for having, with little Merit, and against all Law and Title, taken the Places of such Prodigies for Learning and Industry, as Dr. Walton, Mr. Pocock, and Mr. Thorndike, &c.

AMONGST these was Dr. Owen, who, the next Year, together with a Latin Tract against the Quakers, I know not by what Rules of Congruity, was pleased to publish one in English against the Polyglott Bible: Many Things injurious to the Reformation, and even to Christianity itself, he pretended to discover in it, especially in the Prolegomena and Appendix; and, accordingly, made no small Outcry against it: But how far Envy engaged him to meddle with Things above his Knowledge, how frequently he contradicted himself, and really fell into those Crimes, which he only fancied others to be guilty of; and particularly, how he misrepresented and misapplied some Things asserted by Mr. Pocock, in his Preface to the Arabick various Readings before-mentioned, was, in a short Time, unanswerably shewn by Dr. Walton, in a Discourse he published for that Purpose^a. Indeed, it is not easy to conceive, how sad the Case was of the true Sons of the Church of England in those Times. As a great Variety of Means were made use of to oppress and ruin them, so they were treated with all Kinds of Calumny and Reviling; yea, those very Performances, which were of the greatest Service to the Church of God, and will be Monuments of their Piety and Zeal for Divine Truth, as long as the World shall last, their unreasonable Persecutors were not ashamed to charge with a Design to promote Atheism or Popery. A much later and more learned Person has censured Mr. Pocock, for something in his Preface to the Arabick various Readings, so oft mentioned, viz. Abbe Renaudot: He (Hist. Patriarch. Alexandr. p. 77, & sequ.) charges Abulfeda with Ignorance, in not knowing that the Old Testament had been translated lated into Arabick [in his Time] which, adds he, deceived the learned Pocock, when he grounded his Conjecture, as to the Antiquity of the Arabick Version, on his Testimony. But that learned Person appears herein to have committed a double Mistake: For, first, Abulfeda, in the Place referred to by Renaudot, says nothing of the Antiquity of the Arabick Version, but only that the Version into that Language had not then been written in Arabick Characters. 2dly, Even in this Mr. Pocock does not follow Abulfeda, declaring, in that very Preface, that he would not rashly affirm, what the other did, that the said Version was at that Time first put into a Saracenick Dress, since Aben Ezra asserts of Saadias himself, that he turned the Law into the Ismaelitick Tongue and Character. But this Saadias died above 300 Years before the Time of Abulfeda.

THE Pleasure Mr. Pocock received from seeing so useful a Work, and in which himself had so great a Share, brought to a happy Conclusion, was sadly abated towards the End of the same Year, by the Death of Dr. Gerard Langbaine, the very learned and ingenious Provost of Queen's-College in Oxford. Our Author, in very moving Terms, laments this Loss to himself and the Publick, writing thus to Ludovicus Forgius, Doctor of Physick at Sau-mur. Oxonium tristi admodum nuntio ad Funus Amici (vel si quod sanctius Nomen est) charissimi Gerardi Langbani, magni Academiae nostrae Luminis & in quo Res Literaria irreparabilem passa est Jaetura, Rure evocatus, literas a te ——— accepi. Indeed, the Loss Mr. Pocock sustained, by the Death of this excellent Man, was very great: For, by his Prudence, Activity, and Interest, he had been supported and encouraged throughout those difficult Times, which, without such Assistance, must have overwhelmed a Man so little practised in the Affairs of the World, as our Author. And as he greatly needed such Friends, so the good Providence of God still supplied him with them, from Time to Time, till the Restoration brought Peace and Settlement, and ordinary Prudence was sufficient to secure an honest Man from Violence and Vexation. The Polyglott was scarce finished, before two other Projects appeared, that were Grafts upon that noble Undertaking, and carried on by some learned Assistants to it. The first was, an additional or seventh Tome of the Polyglott Bible, containing many Pieces not taken into the former six; among which was, Mr. Pocock's Syriack Gospels, of a different Translation, from that followed by Dr. Walton: This was finished, but, for what Reason I know not, never published, and is, by the Oxford Historian, reckoned among Mr. Samuel Clark's Works, with this Title, Septimum Biblicarum Polyglotton Volumen, cum Versionibus antiquissimis, non Chaldaicâ tantum, sed Syriacis, Æthiopicis, Copticis, Arabicis, Persicis contextum. The other was a Lexicon to the Oriental Languages of the Polyglott Edition, known by the Name of the Heptaglott Lexicon, carried on chiefly by the very learned and indefatigable Dr. Castel, and published by him several Years after. In both these learned Designs Mr. Pocock's Assistance was desired, and readily granted.

IT has been already observed, Page 35, that, in the Year 1652, Mr. Pocock, at the Importunity of Mr. Selden, began the Translation of a large historical Discourse, viz. the Annals of Eutychius, Melchite Patriarch of Alexandria, out of Arabick into Latin, which Translation was published, together with the Original, in two Volumes, at Oxford, in the Year 1658. And tho' this had been considered by learned Men abroad, as a very useful Work, and as such, was recommended to Erpenius, by Isaac Casaubon, with all imaginable Earnestness; yet, Mr. Pocock declares in the Preface, that it was not undertaken by him from his own Inclination; but upon the Persuasion and Importunity of Mr. Selden. Doubtless, he did in no Sort affect that Cause, for the Sake of which Mr. Selden was so fond of Eutychius, and therefore was unwilling to give any seeming Ground for being thought a Partner in it. That learned Man, having been censured by the High Commission for some offensive Passages in his History of Titus, became not a little displeased with some Bishops of the Church of England: And tho' afterwards, for several Years, he met with a great deal of Respect from them, on account of his very great Learning, yet the Resentment of that former Usage lay deep in his Mind, and was at length sufficiently discovered by him, as he found an Opportunity for it. For in the Year 1642, to bear down Episcopacy, which was then sinking in this Nation, he published, what he would have to be thought, a mighty Argument against it; namely, the Account which this Eutychius gives of the Church of Alexandria, during the three first Centuries: But tho' Mr. Selden, in a large Preface to that Paragraph of Eutychius, and a larger Commentary upon it, did all he could to make it serve his Design, it hath been fully proved to be in no Sort sufficient for it. Abraham Echellensis, a learned Maronite, in a Book for this Purpose, published some Time after at Rome, shewed, among other Things, that Mr. Selden was no fair Translator of Eutychius's Arabick, and appealed to Mr. Pocock and Mr. John Greaves for the Truth of what he asserted: But, supposing the Translation just; that the whole Passage is a perfect Fable, hath been abundantly made out by several learned Men. It was no wonder therefore, that a Man of Mr. Pocock's Temper and Principles should need the most importunate Persuasions to translate and publish a Book, which Mr. Selden had made such Use of: However, by performing that Work, he hath been very far from doing any Diservice to the Cause of Episcopacy: For, as he hath put that Paragraph in a truer Light^f; so, by his Latin Version of the whole Book, he has enabled those, who before could be no Judges of the Matter, fully to perceive, how little Credit is due to an Author, who, as Mr. Pocock declares in the Preface to him^g, has many fabulous Things relating to ancient History, and gives us absurd Accounts of the Transactions in the Western Parts of the World, as our Writers commonly do in those of the Eastern. Mr. Selden, indeed, speaks very magnificently of this Arabian; he esteems him, he says, as an Egyptian Bede,^h and makes no Doubt at all, but that his Annals were for the most Part taken out of the Archives of the Church of Alexandria: But that learned Man did not consider what another Arabian Writerⁱ (whose History Mr. Pocock afterward translated and published) hath made manifest, namely, that in the tenth Age, wherein Eutychius lived, there were no Archives of that Church; for when that City was taken by the Saracens, many Years before in the Reign of Sultan Omar, his General, Amrus Ebnol As, by a particular Order from his Master, commanded all the Books and Writings in it to be sent to the Baths, as Fuel for heating them, where they were all consumed. Indeed, he that hath read these Annals of Eutychius, cannot but be fully sensible, how ignorant he was of the Antiquities of his own Church. No-body was more famous within the Time, which the Paragraph published by Mr. Selden relates to, than Origen: Now this Man, who lived in the former Part of the third Century, Eutychius thrusts down to the Middle of the sixth, makes a Bishop of him; and brings him to the Council of Constantinople, called by the Emperor Justinian, to be there condemned^k. Of what Use, therefore, soever these Annals may be, either in some chronological Points^l, about which other Writers are silent or defective, or in the historical Account he gives of the Persians, and other Oriental Nations, it is certain, his bare Authority cannot be sufficient in any Matter to overthrow the general Consent of the Greek and Latin Fathers, and Church Historians.

THIS Edition of Eutychius was carried on at the sole Charge of Mr. Selden, as appears by several Letters sent to him by Dr. Langbaine, in one of which the Doctor, upon Mr. Pocock's disliking one of the Characters of the Arabick Font at Oxford, desiring him to procure, at London, a new Punchion and Matrice, with five or six Pounds of Letter, thus pleasantly addressed him in the Words of the Friar in Chaucer, who begged Money for compleating their Cloyster,

Now help Thomas, for him that harrow'd Hell,
Or else mote we all our Books sell.

But what puts it more out of Dispute, that the Impression of Eutychius was entirely made at Mr. Selden's Expence, is, that, by a Codicil made to his Will the Year before his Death, he bequeathed it as his sole Property to Dr. Langbaine and Mr. Pocock.

IN Justice, therefore, to Mr. Selden's Memory, who died three or four Years before this Book was published, his Picture was put before it, and the following Words, on Dr. Langbaine's Request, were added in the Title Page, Illustriss. Joanne Seldeno τῷ μακαρίτῃ Chorago: And tho' nothing more was meant by them, than that Mr. Selden was at the Expence of this chargeable Work, the Choragus in the Play being, as a very learned Man^m hath observed on this Occasion, the Person who was at the Charges of exhibiting the Scenesⁿ; yet it hath given some Ground to several Persons (and particularly to the Compiler of the Catalogue of printed Books in the Bodleian Library published in the Year 1674) to imagine, that Mr. Selden began this Translation, and that Mr. Pocock only finished it; whereas, the former never translated any other Part of Eutychius, than that short Paragraph already mentioned, which he published many Years before, and which Mr. Pocock hath corrected. To this Mistake concerning the Translation, it may not be improper to add another about the Author himself: His Name, at first, was Said Ibn Batrick, which, when he was made Patriarch, he changed into that of Eutychius, as expressive in the Greek Language of what he was called in Arabick^o: And this Greek Name, I believe, was that which gave Occasion to Dr. Heylyn, in his Life of Archbishop Laud, to mention this Eutychius, as a Greek Writer^p. The Doctor is followed in this Error by Mr. Ant. Wood, in the Account he gives of Mr. Selden's Life, where he also falls into some others; for, in the Catalogue of Mr. Selden's Works, having

mentioned Verſio & Commentarius ad Eutyebii Eccleſiæ Alexandrinæ Origines, Lond. 1642, he goes on ſaying, To which are added, the ſaid Eutyebius's Annals, with Comments thereon, by Edw. Pocock, of C. G. Coll. Oxon.

NOTHING else, particularly relating to our Author, occurs to us, till March 1652, when, the ſecluded Members of the Houſe of Commons being reſtored to their Seats in Parliament, had appointed a Committee to conſider of Dr. Reynolds (afterwards Biſhop of Norwich) his Reſtitution to the Deanery of Chriſt-Church, from whence he was removed, for not taking the Ingagement; Dr. Wallis, the ever-memorable Savilian Profeſſor at Oxford, hearing this, and that Dr. Mills's Caſe removed from a Canonry in that Church on the ſame Account, lay alſo before the ſame Committee, and thinking Mr. Pocock's Caſe, who loſt his Canonry on the like Score, fairer than either of theirs was, recommended it to Major Fincher, probably a Member of that Parliament. This he did unknown to our Author, who was then at Chil-drey, and whom, in that Exigence, he had not Time to conſult: And becauſe Dr. Wallis's Representation of Mr. Pocock's Caſe contains many Facts worthy of the curious Reader's Notice, I ſhall give it in the Doctor's own Words.

THE Diſpoſal of the Deanery and Canonſhip in Chriſt-Church were heretofore reputed to belong to the King, who did accordingly from Time to Time diſpoſe of them. In the Time of King James, he did, by his Charter, annex one of the Canonſhips to the Divinity Profeſſor, and his Succeſſors for ever; and King Charles another of them to the Hebrew Profeſſor, and a third to the Univerſity Orator, which were accordingly enjoyed. Upon the Death of Dr. Morrice, Hebrew Profeſſor, the Committee of both Houſes (who did then manage the Affairs of the Univerſity) did put Mr. Pocock into his Place and Canonſhip, who did accordingly enjoy it for ſome Time; till, for reſuſing to ſubſcribe the Ingagement, he was (at the ſame Time with Dr. Reynolds and Dr. Mills) put out of his Canonſhip; but remained (as ſtill he doth) Hebrew Profeſſor. Upon the Death of Dr. French, (who was put into his Place) the Ingagement being before that Time taken off, it was thought, that Mr. Pocock's Right did again revive, and that he ſhould be reſtored to that Canonſhip, as Hebrew Profeſſor for the Time being, there being now no Bar in the Way. And while there were Motions in the Univerſity to petition for it, Dr. Owen (then Vice-chancellor, and in Favour with the Protector) undertook to manage that Buſineſs himſelf; and went up to London about it. But thereupon, inſtead of Mr. Pocock, Mr. Pointer was put into that Place by the Protector, who was ſuppoſed to have no Power to diſpoſe of it to any other Perſon, than the Hebrew Profeſſor for the Time being: And beſide this, by an Act of the Parliament before the laſt Interruption, all Grants of the Protector were made void, and therefore this among the reſt: And before that Act they were yet preſumed ſo weak, that Dr. Wilkins and others got new Grants (to the Places which the Protector had beſtowed on them) from the Parliament, and the like was endeavoured for Mr. Pointer, but could not be obtained; ſo that, upon the whole Matter, there ſeems very little to be ſaid, why Mr. Pocock ſhould not be reſtored. That which is to be done in order to it, is, that a Motion be made in the Houſe, for this Buſineſs to be referred to the ſame Committee with that of Dr. Reynolds, and that (if Need be) Summons be ſent to Mr. Pointer to appear, if he have any Thing to ſay, why Mr. Pocock ſhould not be reſtored. This Letter was dated March 6, 1652.

WHETHER the Houſe would have hearkened to this Remonſtrance or no, there was not Time to judge: For in ten Days after the Date of Dr. Wallis's Letter, this long Parliament paſſed an Act for its own Diſſolution, and for calling a new one, to meet on the 26th of the following Month. They met accordingly; and God having now ſufficiently tried the Faith and Patience of his ſuffering Church of England, was pleaſed to put it into the Hearts of this Convention to invite the King to his Throne. And thus, by a Turn of Providence, never enough to be adored and acknowledged, our ancient Conſtitution was reſtored to us, at a Time too, when that Bleſſing was thought very diſtant, if not utterly deſpaired of.

SECTION IV.

THE Year 1660 was auspicious to Mr. Pocock on more Accounts than one: For I find him congratulated by a Friend at this Time, upon his Recovery from a Fit of Sickneſs, which he calls the Prodrome to the publick Reſtauration. In the Month of June he attended the Vice-chancellor, when he waited on the King to preſent him with the Oxford Verſes on that happy Occaſion; nor was it long before our Author, among other oppreſſed Loyalists, felt the Benefit of that national Deliverance: For the Canonry of Chriſt-Church annexed to the Hebrew Lecture at Oxford, by King Charles the Firſt, and from which he had now been removed, for Refuſal of the Ingagement, about ten Years, was reſtored to him; the Intruder having been turned out by the Delegates, appointed to viſit that Univerſity, versity, presently after the Restoration. It has been already said, that Mr. Pocock, on the Death of Dr. Morris, was, upon the Recommendation of Dr. Shelden and Dr. Hammond, nominated to the Hebrew Lecture, and the Canonry thereto annexed, by King Charles the First, then (1648) a Prisoner in the Isle of Wight, but that he was not constituted by Patent, the King not having the Great Seal then in his Power: But Dr. Shelden, then Dean of the Chapel Royal, and soon after Bishop of London, took Care to have that Defect supplied the very Month after the King's Return: For this Purpose, Letters Patents were granted (bearing Date June 20, An. Duodec. Car. 2ndi) constituting Mr. Pocock Hebrew Professor, and Canon of Christ-Church, by Virtue whereof, he was solemnly installed on the 27th of the Month following. The Difficulties also that formerly attended Degrees, being now removed by the late happy Change, he took that of Doctor of Divinity on the 20th Day of September, in the same Year.

It has already been observed, that Mr. Pocock, tho' he succeeded Dr. Morris in the Hebrew Lecture at Oxford, by Order of the Committee of Parliament, was not promoted to his Canonry, which had been annexed to that Lecture, but to the Canonry of Dr. Payne, who, together with Dr. Fell, the Dean of Christ-Church, and some others of the Prebendaries, was removed by the said Committee, for a pretended high Contempt of the Authority of Parliament. By these Means it came to pass, that Mr. Pocock was forced to accept of another House or Mansion, and not that which belonged to the Canonry, that had been annexed to the Hebrew Lecture by King Charles the First. It has been related likewise, how he and his Friends laboured to get him Admission to his proper House and Canonry, and, upon Failure of Success, how he entered his Protest, with a Salvo to the Rights of the Hebrew Professorship. I need not repeat the little Regard that was paid, in those Times, to Royal Grants, nor how the same Committee afterwards deprived him of his Canonry, while they suffered him to retain the Lecture, to which a Canonry had been inseparably annexed. And tho' at the Restoration, as hath been already said, he was again installed a Canon of that Church, he had yet the Mortification to see another in Possession of those Lodgings, which belonged to his Predecessor in the Hebrew Professorship, Dr. Morris. The Intruder at this Time was John Mills, Doctor of Law, and then Member of the House of Commons: This Dr. Mills, tho' most evidently a Lay-man, had been Canon of Christ-Church, and was removed thence at the same Time with Dr. Reynolds and Mr. Pocock, and on the same Pretence; namely, for refusing the Ingagement. At the Restoration he got Possession of Dr. Morris's House, and detained it from Mr. (now Dr.) Pocock, in Right of his Pretension to the Canonry, out of which he had formerly been ejected. In order to the Recovery of these Lodgings, the University of Oxford joined with Dr. Pocock in a Petition to the Delegates, appointed by the King, soon after his Return, to visit that University, for a Hearing before them, or before any of the Judges, to whom their Honours might think fit to refer the Consideration of it. The Result of this Affair was, that the Delegates first removed Dr. Mills from the Canonry for which he was unqualified, and put Dr. Pocock into the Lodgings proper to the Stall that was annexed to the Hebrew Professorship, and into which he was put, by Virtue of the Letters Patents he had so lately obtained.

AND now the remaining Part of Dr. Pocock's Life being of one Tenor or Way, spent in Study, and doing Good, without those Travels or Sufferings, which have so much lengthened this Discourse, what we have further to do, will, for the most Part be, to give some Account of those other Books he published, according to the Order of Time in which they were printed, and then, to lay those Things together, which may serve to give some imperfect Idea of his very great Worth:

IN this Year 1660, he printed his Arabick Version of Hugo Grotius's Treatise concerning the Truth of the Christian Religion: That excellent Book, which deservedly met with the highest Applause from learned Men, had been already translated into several Languages, particularly English, Dutch, French, Swedish and Greek; but in no Tongue could it be thought more useful, than in the Arabick, being a Language understood, not only in the Ottoman Empire, but in Persia, Tartary, and all those Parts of India and Africa, where Mahometism has prevailed. Among the Professors of that Superstition, doubtless there are some well-meaning People, who would entertain favourable Thoughts of Christianity, were they sufficiently made acquainted with the Reasonableness and Excellency of it. The Conversion of such, Dr. Pocock had in View, when he first resolved upon this Work; and not only that, but the Instruction and better Establishment of the Christians, that are very numerous in some of those Countries, who, by Reason of the Bondage they are under, know but little of the holy Religion they profess, and the Evidence on which it is built; and therefore, to mend their worldly Condition, are too often tempted into Apostasy. And to make this Translation more fit for these Purposes, he took the Liberty, which the learned Author allowed him (in

^a Mr. Ant. Wood, in his Hist. & Antiq. of the Univ. of Oxford, accounts for the whole Matter: He acquaints us, that Dr. Mills was put into the Canonry of Dr. Morris, the Hebrew Professor, by the Committee of the two Houses, who probably had no Scruples about the Legality of a Lay-Canon of Christ-Church. Being, therefore, restored by the long Parliament, just before they dissolved themselves, to that Canonry, which he afterwards lost, by refusing the Ingagement, he came again of course into the Lodgings belonging to it.

a Visit he made to him at Paris, when he returned the last Time out of the East) of making such Alterations, as he thought necessary: Grotius's Introduction being only an Account addressed on a particular Occasion to Hieron. Bignonius, of a Work of the like Nature, which he had formerly published in Dutch, and also containing in it, some Expressions relating to the Mahometans, which in the Entrance might, perhaps, discourage those People from perusing the Book, Dr. Pocock thought fit to leave out, and instead thereof, he inserted a Preface entirely new. In this Preface he proposes the Design of the whole Treatise, which was, he says, to enquire concerning the true Worship of God, and the Arguments of its Truth; shews the vast Importance of such Researches; prays for the Divine Illumination, which is necessary to render them effectual. He gives some Account of the Persons to whom this Work would be especially serviceable, which are not only those, who are mistaken in religious Matters, but such also to whom God, in his Mercy, hath shewn the Way of Truth, who, if of competent Understandings, might be furnished by it, with proper Weapons to conquer Error; but, if of meaner Capacities, would yet be enabled, by the Perusal of it, to continue steadfast, resisting the Assaults of those, who should labour to pervert them. Moreover, he shews of what Kind the Arguments made use of in it, are; namely, such as, being collected from the Books both of ancient and modern Authors, who have written on this Subject, are sure and convincing, and also easy to be understood. Besides this new Preface, he also made several Changes in the 6th Book, wherein the Author applies himself to the Confutation of Mahometism, amending some Things, and leaving out others, both in the 5th and 10th Sections of it, and particularly the pretended Miracle of the Flying of the Dove to Mahomet's Ear, as having no Foundation, either in the Writings or Opinions of his Followers: About which, when he discoursed with Grotius, that learned Man freely acknowledged his taking the Story only from our own Writers, especially from Scaliger, in his Notes on Manilius.

THIS Version, as I have formerly shewn, Dr. Pocock had intended to publish many Years before, and the Reason of his delaying it so very long, undoubtedly was, the Cost of Printing it: For the Copies of it being not for Sale, but charitable Uses, a Sum was required for this, much beyond his own Ability: But this Difficulty was now removed by the generous Offer of the Honourable Robert Boyle, Esq; that great Promoter of all useful Knowledge, both Divine and Human, who, as soon as he understood this Design of Dr. Pocock, assured him, that he would bear the whole Charge of it. Indeed, that pious and learned Gentleman, on whom God had bestowed a double Blessing, a plentiful Estate, and therewith a Heart to use it well, never omitted any Opportunity, that presented itself, of doing Service to the Interests of true Religion. At his Cost, the Irish New Testament was reprinted, and he was chiefly at the Expence also of reprinting the Old. Upon his Desire, and by his Encouragement, that Catechism, which the learned Mr. William Seaman translated into Turkish, was printed; and, as appears by a Letter of Mr. Seaman's to Dr. Pocock, the same honourable Person gave 60 Pounds towards Printing the New Testament turned by him into the same Language: And at this Time, the Zeal he had for the Propagation of Christianity, engaged him to all the Expence, which was necessary, that Grotius's admirable Defence of it might be read in a Tongue generally studied in all those Countries, which have embraced the Superstition of Mahomet.

IT is heartily to be wished, that the Success of a Work so truly Christian, had been answerable to the Zeal, with which it was both undertaken and promoted: But of that, indeed, after all possible Enquiry, we are able to give but a slender Account. Mr. Boyle writes to Dr. Pocock, Jan. 24, 1667, that 'He had discoursed with a very understanding and religious Gentleman, a chief Member of the Council for Trade and the Plantations, and one that had a great Interest in the Merchants, who promised his Assistance in getting this Translation properly dispersed.' I find likewise, by the same Letter, that Mr. Baxter strenuously employed his Interest with the Turky Company to the same Purpose; that it was proposed at a Meeting of the Merchants trading to those Parts, who well liked it, and readily offered to disperse, as discreetly as they could, as many Books as should be put into their Hands. By another Letter of the same honourable Person to Dr. Pocock, we likewise learn, that a Quarter of a Hundred of these Books had been already delivered to some Merchants, and that a much greater Number would be committed to their Care, as soon as it should be determined at Oxford, what Sort of Binding would be most proper for the East. But for what particular Places these were intended, or in what Manner they were to be disposed of, I cannot find: That very few were distributed at Constantinople, the very learned Dr. Thomas Smith, who went to reside there in the Year 1668, had Reason to believe. He affirmed, 'That he did not know of so much as one single Copy in that Place, except that, which he carried out of England himself, and which he presented there to a Turkish Imam, or Priest of his Acquaintance, who was well-skill'd in the Language of his Prophet.' And, indeed, the same learned Person gives but little Hopes of Success from that, or any the like Books, among such Turks, as he conversed with in that City: 'For, generally speaking, he says, their unreasonable Prejudices, their gross Stupidity in Matters of Speculation, and their ‘equally prodigious and intolerable Obstinacy and Pride, had hardened them against all Conviction, and rendered them impenetrable to any Argument.’

I CANNOT, on this Occasion, avoid delivering it as my Opinion, that the Sight of these Arabick Translations of Grotius without his own, the Translator’s, or any other European Name prefixed to them, was what, in great Measure, deceived Mr. Watson, the Scotch Gentleman mentioned in Wheeler’s Travels, p. 200, who seriously affirmed, ‘That Hugo Grotius had stolen all his principal Arguments for the Truth of the Christian Religion out of Arabian Authors.’ Whoever considers, what little Acquaintance Grotius had with such Arabick Books, as have not yet been translated into other Languages, and how diligent Dr. Pocock was in enquiring out, what the East afforded before he engaged in that Version, can hardly think of any likelier Ground for such a Declaration, than what has been above assigned.

AT Aleppo, and the Parts about it, I find a considerable Number of these Books were disposed of: And yet, certain it is, that either Grotius’s Latin Tract; De Veritate Religionis Christianæ, or that other Work of his of like Nature, which he formerly published in Dutch, (mentioned in his Introduction to Hieron. Bignonius above-mentioned) it is certain, I say, that one of these two Tracts, many Years before the Printing of this Arabick Translation, had got into the East: For the Dervise Abmed, writing to our Author, soon after his Return home from Aleppo, promises, among some Oriental Manuscripts which he had bought for him, to send him a Book concerning the embracing the Christian Religion, the Work of Groot, the Brother of Gole. Mr. Smith, whether by Conjecture from the Dervise’s Mention of Gole, or from better Authority, I cannot say, sets it down as Fact, that Grotius had sent thither some Copies of Grotius, which is not improbable: But it seems to me, from the Dervise’s Mention of that learned Man’s Dutch Name, Groot, most likely that he had lighted on the Dutch, and not the Latin Treatise, concerning the Truth of the Christian Religion. Many Copies of this Arabick Version were likewise afterwards sent to Dr. Huntington, whilst Chaplain to the English Factory at Aleppo, and yet these were not sufficient: For having disposed of them, he desired another Parcel, in a Letter written by him to Dr. Pocock, which were accordingly sent to him: It appears from one of his Epistles, published together with his Life (Huntingtoni Epistola, N° 2.) that he presented one of these Copies to Stephanus Petrus, Maronite Patriarch at Antioch, to whom also he gave Assurance, that if he approved it, and thought a good Number of them of Use, they should be speedily sent to him; and, doubtless he did not neglect to make the like Overture to Mose, another Bishop of the East, with whom he corresponded. But it is too manifest, that he met with no small Difficulty in this Matter, from some Romanists in those Parts, who envied the Honour of a Design so truly Christian, to those of a different Communion from themselves: For tho’ the Doctors of the Sorbone, who read this Treatise of Grotius, before he published it, disapproved nothing in it, but that one Passage, [Lib. ii. Sect. 7. concerning Things which imply a Contradiction] which bears, as they thought, too hard upon Transubstantiation; and tho’ some Papists had such an Opinion of it, that they undertook a Translation of it into Persian, for making Converts in those Countries, where that Language is spoken; yet, Dr. Huntington now found, ‘That the most innocent and useful Attempt will be disliked by some Persons, when made by such Instruments, as they do not approve of.’ Notwithstanding all the Kindness, which (as appears from his printed Epistles) passed between him, and the Fathers residing in those Countries, and the Offices of Friendship they mutually performed, he complained to Dr. Pocock, ‘That as he dispersed this Treatise, he had much greater Apprehensions from their Malice, than from the unprompted Accusations of the Turks themselves.’ He told him further, that upon this Account he was obliged, for his own Safety, to cut the last Book, wherein Mahometism is confuted, out of some Copies, before he distributed them. And, if ever the Society for Propagating Christian Knowledge in Foreign Parts shall think of another Edition of this Work in Arabick, it may, perhaps, be found expedient to have some Copies of it printed without the last Book, to be disposed of in such Places, as will not endure a direct Opposition to the Tenets of Mahomet: For tho’ it is much to be wished, that his Followers might have that Part of this Treatise especially put into their Hands, which was so particularly intended for them; yet, where that cannot be attempted, with any Prospect of Safety, the other Parts of it alone may prove, by God’s Blessing, of considerable Advantage to them. And, indeed, if they shall but once perceive the Certainty of the Truths, which are in the other Parts so fully made out, they will, probably, begin to make some serious Reflections on their own Superstition, and, at length, discern the Follies and Absurdities of so gross an Imposture.

THE next Thing that Dr. Pocock published, was, an Arabick Poem, intitled, Lamiatol-Ajam, or Carmen Abu Ismaelis Tograi, with his Latin Translation of it, and large Notes upon it; a Poem which is held to be of the greatest Elegancy, answerable to the Fame of its Author, who, as the Doctor gives his Character, was eminent for Learning and Virtue, and esteemed the Phoenix of the Age, in which he lived, for Poetry and Eloquence: Dr. Pocock’s Design in this Work was, not only to give a Specimen of Arabian Poetry, but also to make the Attainment of the Arabick Tongue more easy to those, that study it; for his Notes, containing a Grammatical Explanation of all the Words of this Author, are very serviceable for promoting the Knowledge of that Language. These Notes being the Sum of many Lectures, which he read on this Poem, the Speech that he delivered, when he began to explain it, is prefixed to it, which, perhaps, contains, tho' a succinct, yet as accurate an Account of the Arabick Tongue, as is any where extant. After the general History of it, he there speaks of the Things that recommend it, and particularly of these four; Perspicuity, Elegance, Copiousness and Usefulness; an Instance of the first of these, he gives in that prompt Way the Arabians have of expressing many Things clearly in a very few Words, which is hardly to be imitated in any other Language; and the second, he says, appears both from the Care employed in it, either by the adding, taking away, or Change of Letters, to suit Words to the Nature of the Things they signify, and also from the Sweetness or Softness of the whole Language, in which there never is a Collision of two or more Consonants, but the Sound of a Vowel always intervenes. As to the Copiousness of this Tongue, he shews, that there is no Comparison between it, and any other: The strange Variety it has of synonymous Words, being such, as one would stand amazed at: There are in it 200 Names for a Serpent, which he there gives us, 500 for a Lion, and, to omit some other Instances, so many for Calamity, that, as he observes out of an Arabick Writer, who endeavoured to make a Catalogue of them, it is no small Calamity to recite them. The whole Number of Words, that make up this Language, is reckoned, as he assures us, by Hamezah Aspahanensis, from an eminent Lexicographer, at twelve Millions, three hundred and fifty Thousand, fifty and two: But that which chiefly recommends any Language, is the Usefulness of it; which, for the most Part, consists in the valuable Things, that are written in it; and in this Respect he shews it to be very considerable, and but little short of the most celebrated Languages. The ancient Arabians, long before the Days of Mahomet, were not altogether ignorant of some Parts of Learning; several of them had Skill in Astronomy, several in Physick, and not a few in Poetry; which last was in such Request among them, that when any one began to be eminent for it in any Tribe, it was Matter of publick Congratulation, and all the Kindred and Friends of it met together to rejoice, in the most solemn Manner, as for the greatest Happiness in the World. Indeed, whatsoever Knowledge they then had, it could not be very useful, for Want of Letters, which was an Invention so late amongst them, that when the Alcoran began to be published, some Time after Mahomet's Death, there was not found in all Arabia Felix a Person sufficiently qualified to read or write it: However, somewhat more than a hundred Years after, when the Empire of the Saracens came to the Abassides, all the Grecian Learning found a ready Entertainment with them, and began to be cultivated; and within the Compass of a few Ages, infinite Books were written by them in Philosophy, Astronomy, Geometry, Medicine, and all Kinds of Sciences: And that we may not make a Judgment of these Books, from the barbarous Translations of some of them, which were made, when Ignorance so much prevailed in Europe, the Doctor tells us, that whosoever shall read the Writings of Alfarabius, Avicenna, Avenpace, and many others, will soon find Reason for a very different Opinion of them, from that which is now commonly received amongst us. In short, he asserts with much Assurance, that, with respect to human Learning, the Arabians do not more want the Knowledge of other Languages, than other Nations do that of theirs, and that there are as many Things, which they can teach others, as there are, which they can learn from them; particularly for the Study of Divinity, he proves, that it may receive great Aids from this Language; for by the Help of this, Divines will be able to know the true Opinions of Mahometism, that they may confute them. The Arabick also will very much contribute to their Skill in Hebrew, and consequently, to the Knowledge of the sacred Text of the Old Testament; as appears from the Books of Aben Ezra, Maimonides, Kimchi, and others of the wiser Rabbins, who, upon every Difficulty, refer their Readers to the Arabick Language: By this too, they will be able to peruse the greatest Part of those Things, which are worth reading, amongst the Jews; such as the Writings of Maimonides, Coxari, Chobath Lebaboth, Emunoth, Saadias, and several more, which are for the most Part in Arabick; and also to consult the several Versions of the Holy Scriptures made into this Language, both by Jews and Christians, together with many Christian Books of good Account, that are written in it. Finally, by Means of this Language, the Piety of those who are zealous for the Promotion of Divine Knowledge, may make some Provision against the Ignorance of the Eastern Christians, who are so miserably oppressed under Turkish Bondage.

I HAVE been more particular in this Detail of the Uses of Arabism, from the greatest Master of it, that our European World could ever boast of, in Hopes; that such a Discourse may incite the Young and Studious among our Candidates for holy Orders, to apply themselves thereto, and to revive a Branch of Learning, that seems to have been gradually decaying for many Years among us.

THIS Book, Carmen Tograi, was printed at Oxford, in the Year 1661, by the particular Care and Direction of the very learned Mr. Samuel Clarke, Architypographus of that University, who not only made a Preface to it, but also added a suitable Treatise of his own, concerning the Arabick Prosodia: The Treatise he dedicated to Dr. Pocock in an Epistle for that Purpose; which he did, as he told him; not only because he thought him the properest Judge

Judge of the Work, but also because it was he alone, that first encouraged him to the Undertaking, that supplied him abundantly out of his vast Store with Materials to carry it on, and that constantly set him right, when involved in such Difficulties, as he knew not how to pass through.

It is intimated by Mr. Clarke, in the Preface before-mentioned, that Gregorius Abul Pharajius's History of the Dynasties, translated by Dr. Pocock, was, at that Time in, or ready for the Oxford Press, the Edition of which was finished in the Year 1663: That Part of this Book, which gives an Account of the Rise of Mahomet, the Doctor had published, as it has been shewn, several Years before; and, upon the Importunity of several learned Men, who were much pleased with that Specimen (more particularly of his great Friend, Dr. Langbaine, who had earnestly pressed him to it before his Death) the Whole was now printed in the original Arabick, with his Latin Version of it.

THIS Abul Pharajius was a Christian of the Jacobite Sect, of great Fame for Learning, not only among those of his own Religion, but among the Jews too, and Mahometans; and this Work of his is a Compendium of the general History of the World, from the Creation to his own Time: It is divided by him into ten Dynasties or Governments; for so many he reckons up, which are these following: The first is that of the holy Patriarchs, from Adam the first Man; the second, of the Judges in Israel; the third, of the Kings thereof; the fourth, of the Chaldeans; the fifth, of the Magi or Persians; the sixth, of the Greeks, that were Idolaters; the seventh, that of the Franks, for so he calls the Romans; the eighth, of the Greeks, who were Christians; the ninth, of the Saracens; and tenth, of the Mogul Tartars.

THIS Work, as is noted above, was published, An. 1663, and dedicated to his Majesty King Charles the Second; but the Love of Arabick Learning was now waxed cold, and the entire Piece of Abul-Pharai, in the Year 1663, met with small Encouragement, whilst a Specimen of it, An. 1649, had given Pleasure to all the learned World. But such is the Weakness and Instability of the human Mind, even when improved by Education and Letters, that Custom and Fashion shall, in a few Years, be able to sway it from one Extrem to another: And, perhaps, this Inconstancy may, in some Measure, also be imputed to the Indiscretion of learned Men themselves, who are too apt immoderately to cry up their own favourite Course of Studies; and when this once comes to be observed, the World is with Difficulty prevailed upon to allow the Idol, even its just Commendation.

OF this Change in the publick Taste, no one was more sensible than Dr. Pocock himself, as appears by a Letter of his to Dr. Thomas Greaves, which attended a Copy of his Abul Pharagii Hist. Dynastiarum, and which, at that learned Person's Request, he forced, as he tells him, from his Printer's, before the Index was wrought off. 'If you find, adds Dr. Pocock, any Thing in it worth the Publishing, you must be fain to speak for it; for I perceive it will be much slighted: The Genius of the Times, as for these Studies, is much altered since you and I first set about them; and few will be persuaded, they are worthy taking Notice of. My Lord of London asked me, if there were any remarkable Passages in the Book? I answered him only in general, that I thought there were many; if you should fall into any Discourse with him about it, I pray, note some Particulars, as, I think, you may that of the first Rise of Mahomet's Religion, p. 100, &c. and that of the Rise and Spreading of the Tartars Empire, and their Incurfions, which is in the Latin, p. 280, &c. or any other Passages, that you shall think worthy. And if you speak with any of your Acquaintance concerning the Book, your good Word may help bear up its Credit.' Dr. Greaves, in his Answer to this Letter, dated from Fulham, writes thus upon the unfashionableness of Arabick Studies; 'How these Studies are esteemed in the Universities, I know not; in these Parts, for ought I observe, they are not much followed or regarded, and receive small Incouragement from those, who, I thought, would have been Fautors and Promoters of them.' Nor was Arabick Learning then out of Vogue in England only; but beginning to decline in Holland also. In the Year 1669, Mr. afterwards Dr. Bernard, complains in a Letter to Dr. Pocock from Leyden, that Harder of that Place, who, says he, speaks Arabick readily, had translated the History of Saladine, but could not find a Bookseller, that would venture to undertake the Work, because Oriental Learning decays here, and Books of that Nature will turn to no Advantage; neither, adds he, can Mr. Thevenot find a Bookseller, either here, or at Amsterdam, to undertake his Abulfeda.

THE Declension of these Studies in the Esteem of the Publick may in some Measure account for our Author's rising no higher in Church-Preferments at the Restoration, when such Numbers of vacant Dignities were filled. Barely to be restored to what he had so many Years been deprived of for his Religion and Loyalty, and to have no other Reward for his Losses, Oppressions and Prosecutions, besides his uncommon Learning, and unspotted Sanctity of Manners, but what was due to him in Equity, was a Hardship, which reflects more Dishonour upon those Times, than any one Case of the like Nature, that has come to my Knowledge: For, in Justice to the Men that were then intrusted with the Disposál of Church-Preferments, it must be owned, that there were very few eminent Ecclesiasticks, who, upon that blessed Change of Things, were not called up to Advancement; some were not so early preferred preferred as others; but, perhaps, our Author is almost the only Instance of a Clergyman, then at the highest Pitch of Eminence for Learning, and every other Merit proper to his Profession, who lived throughout the Reign of Charles the Second, without the least Regard from the Court, except the Favour sometimes done him of being called upon to translate Arabick Letters from the Princes of the Levant, or the Credential Letters, of Embassadors coming from those Parts; for which, yet I do not find, he had any Recompence, besides good Words and Compliments: But he was as modest, as he was deserving, and probably, after presenting his Abul-Pharagius to the King, he never put himself in the Way of Royal Regards any more.

BEFORE I take my Leave of Dr. Pocock's History of the Dynasties, I shall observe something, which, tho' it more properly belongs to his Specimen of this larger Work, may not incommodiously find a Place here: The Reader, then, is to observe, that the celebrated Monsieur Bayle, p. 37, * of his Critical and Historical Dictionary, has observed a wide Difference between Dr. Pocock and Mr. John Greaves, about the Time in which Abulfeda was advanced to the Government of Hamah, in Syria: The former of these, in his Specimen Historiæ Arabum, p. 363, makes this to have happened Anno Hegiræ 710; whereas Mr. John Greaves, in his Preface to Bine Abulfedæ Tabulæ, p. 7, 8, places Abulfeda's Advancement 33 Years later, viz. Anno Hegiræ 743. This Difference Monsieur Bayle complains of, as irreconcilable, and thinks it most reasonable to suppose Mr. Greaves's Account the true one, because Abulfeda is his principal Subject, whereas Dr. Pocock speaks of him only, comme d'un fort petit Accessoire; upon which he proceeds thus: 'But is it not very vexatious, that one of Pocock's Consequence should not be safely to be followed in a Point of Oriental Learning, and that, whilst he published a Thing, a Colleague of his should be making it appear to be false?' Not content with this, he repeats the same Censure in his Index, under the Word Pocock, Il est étonnant, qu'il ne soit un guide sur en fait d'Erudition Orientale. But, against this confident Charge, Dr. Pocock has been thoroughly defended, by the learned Mr. Gagnier of Oxford, in his Preface to the Life of Mohammed, p. 5. For there he affirms, that what our Author, whom he calls Virum integerrimum & solide doctum, has said, concerning the Time of Abulfeda's Advancement, is perfectly right, as being exactly agreeable to the Account, which Abulfeda himself gives of that Event; and that Mr. Greaves had committed a monstrous Mistake in his Chronology, having confounded this Abulfeda with another of that Name, who was the sixteenth of the Mameluck Kings of Egypt.

THE Ground of the Mistake, as the learned Mr. Sale informs us, was this: 'Mr. Greaves, in an Arabick Manuscript, entitled, Al Sacerdan (or rather Al Sukkerdân, which is a Persian Word, and signifies a Sugar-dish) found the following Passage, as it stands in his Latin Translation: Rex justus, Columna Religionis, al Soltân, Abulfeda Ismael, Filius Al Melec al Naser, sedit super Thronum Regni [in Hamah] post amotionem Fratris ipsius Al Malec al Naser Ahmed, Feriâ quintâ xxii Die [Mensis] al Moharram, Anno DCCXLIII [Hegiræ] & regnavit donec obiit vi Die [Mensis] Rabiæ posterioris, Anno [Hegiræ] DCCXLVI. That is, Al Malec al Sâleb Omado'ddin Abulfeda Ismael, Son of Al Malec al Naser ascended the Throne [of Hamah] after the Deposition of his Brother Al Mâlec al Nâser Ahmed on Thursday the 22d of al Moharram, in the Year 743, and reigned till he died, the 6th of the latter Rabiâ in the Year 746. This Passage Greaves, from a Similitude of Names, (a most deceitful Guide) immediately, and without further Examination, concluded, must belong to our Abulfeda, and no other, and therefore made no Scruple to insert the Words [in Hamah] which were not in his Author, as a Thing of course: But had he looked into what precedes, and what follows, he would have found, that the Author is there giving the Succession of the Mamluc Soltans of Egypt.'

I WOULD not detract from the Praises due to Monsieur Bayle's Industry and Parts; but, I believe, after what has been said, the World will give me Leave, in this particular Instance, to tax him with a Defect, both of Judgment and Candour. When, indeed, two Writers, equally skilled in the Matter they treat of, differ in their Accounts, Mr. Bayle's Rule seems reasonable, and we ought rather to assent to him, who writes professedly on the Subject, than to him, that speaks of it only by the By; tho', even in this Case, a modest Critick would hardly think his Point so secure, as to brand the Author he dissents from, in the Manner Mr. Bayle has done by Dr. Pocock. But then, he ought to have very good Grounds for thinking the Writers equally conversant in the Matter they treat of; otherwise his Determination, tho' it should happen to be right, is rash and uncharitable: Whereas, had Mr. Bayle known any Thing of Dr. Pocock and Mr. Greaves, he must have known, that the former was incomparably superior to the other, in the Knowledge of Eastern Writers; he had greater Opportunities of acquiring this Kind of Knowledge, having spent more than twice the Time in the Levant, with the sole View of improving himself in Oriental Learning, than Mr. Greaves did for that, and various other Purposes. Mr. Bayle's Rule, therefore, had no Room in the present Case; and Dr. Pocock, tho' speaking of Abulfeda's Advancement to be Prince of Hamah, by the By only, was more likely to assign the true Time of that Event, than Mr. Greaves, tho' it was his principal Subject. It was, indeed, a very great and grievous Mistake in him to conclude, at first Sight, from the bare Mention of a Prince, in an Arabick Writer, one of whose Names was Abulfeda, that he must mean the Prince of Hamah, in Syria, without looking at all into that Writer's Subject and Design, but taking that for granted, which a little Enquiry would have convinced him, was an utter Mistake.

THAT Mr. Greaves, who, otherwise, was a cautious and accurate Scholar, should be prone to an Error, that might easily have been avoided, is the more surprizing, when we reflect, that but the Year before, Dr. Pocock, in his Notes on his Specimen Historiæ Arabum, had set down the true Date of Abulfeda's Advancement; that Mr. Greaves had this Piece of his Friend's, and highly admired it, as, indeed, he did every Thing, that came from him: But he had, probably, forgot that Particular, and, being then at a Distance from his Oracle, could not consult him on every Emergency. And yet it appears, from the Letters, that passed between those two dear Friends, about this Time, that Mr. Greaves had consulted Dr. Pocock, and received Solution from him of several Doubts concerning Abulfeda; but then, these concerned only the Readings of the various Copies, he was to print from: We further find, that he proposes to him intended Versions of Arabick Passages, that occur in that very Preface, wherein the grand Mistake stands; and which is more, the very Passage from Al Sacerdan, which misled Mr. Greaves, and his designed Translation of it, is extant in a Letter of his to Dr. Pocock, tho' without naming that Writer, or the Use he intended to make of the Passage from him.

THIS following Arabick, says he, I think, may be thus rendered into Latin; then, after giving the Arabick, comes his Latin Rendering, viz. 'Finitum est opus Feriâ 5, 22^{ndo}. Die Almoharram.'

AFTER another Arabick Sentence, nothing to the present Purpose, and its Version, we have the other Part of Al Sacerdan's Sentence, which he proposes to translate thus; 'Sedit super Thronum Regni post amotionem Fratris ipsius.' How easy had it been to add one more Quære, viz. whether the Abulfeda of Al Sacerdan was the same with the Prince of Hamah, whose Tables he was then publishing. But of this he seems not to have entertained the least Suspicion, tho' his only Authority for the affirmative Side of the Question, was that slender one of Agreement in Name: So weak and unguarded against Deception are the wisest and best of Men, at certain Hours! For my Part, I think, we should do well to look up to God's permissive Providence on all such Occasions, and to consider the Slips of learned Men, as Documents to them, and to the rest of Mankind, how imperfect human Prudence and Sagacity is, even when most improved by Study and Exercise, that they may not think of themselves higher than they ought to think, and learn thence, what constant Need they have to beg his Blessing and Direction in their Studies, who is the Father of Lights. But was I to account, humanly speaking, for this grievous Negligence in Mr. Greaves, or to offer any Excuse for him, it should be the Hurry and Distraction of his Affair, for those many Years, in which he was preparing the Edition of Abulfeda: The Truth of this Fact we have under his own Hand; for writing to Dr. Pocock, about a Year after that Piece came abroad, he uses the following Expressions: 'I may say for myself, that these five Years I have been so incumbered with Law-suits, and diverted from my Studies, that, having this Year found some Ease (I know not how) I am unwilling to take those Pains, I have formerly undergone.' Having, therefore, when he wrote his Preface to Abulfeda, neither Time, nor Inclination for exact Researches, he too easily trusted to Appearances, and, as commonly happens in such Cases, was grossly deceived by so doing.

BUT to return to our Author: After so many and great Proofs of his Abilities in the Writings and Languages of the East, he began to be esteemed all over Europe, a Kind of Oracle in that Branch of Learning: Such as entered on those Studies, earnestly applied for Directions from him, and the Professors themselves sought his Advice, with a Deference and Submission, that is hardly to be conceived, but by those, who have seen and read their Letters to him. Foreigners, who came into England, with a Design of improving their Stock of Oriental Learning, never failed to provide themselves with Letters of Recommendation to him; and such, as Curiosity alone brought amongst us, were glad, by the same Means, of an Occasion to see, and converse with a Person, who was the Prodigy of his Times, for Eastern Learning. Those who had a Taste for that Part of Literature, never returned without the deepest Sense of his mighty Abilities therein; and even they, who could form no Judgment of Dr. Pocock's peculiar Excellencies, as a Scholar, must, doubtless, have carried home with them, the most advantageous Sentiments of his Modesty and Humanity: In him, they saw a Man, who could preserve his native Humility, amidst the daily Caresses and Compliments, that were bestowed upon him by the whole learned World; one who had contracted no Moroseness from Study and Retirement; but who, as well as he loved Books, could leave them to discharge the Offices of Humanity, and answer the Call of his Friends and Correspondents: Not that the Period of his Life, we are now speaking of, was the Beginning of Applications to him in this Way.

THE first of this Kind was, a Letter from James Alting, afterwards Professor of Divinity at Groningen, then a young Man, and in England, written in the Year 1641. In this Letter he desires to have Mr. Pocock's Opinion about the Meaning of the Word אֵרֶם, Isa. xxiv. 15, rendered Ignes, in the English, and Convalles in the Dutch Translation. N. B. Valleys is also our English marginal Version.

JANUARY the 25th of the next Year, Mr. Pocock had a Letter from another learned Orientalist, viz. Jo. Hen. Hottinger, then a Professor at Groningen, and after that at Zurich, and lastly at Heidelberg: The Subject of it was, an Account of the Progress he (Hottinger) had made in translating the Chronicon Samaritanum into Latin; a Piece which Hottinger had brought with him from Holland into England, and, at the Desire of Primate Usher, had undertaken to translate. He further certifies Mr. Pocock of a Design he had in Hand, of turning the Helvetick Confession into Arabick, requesting his Direction and Assistance in the Work. Lastly, he begs our Author's Advice, where he might collect Arabick Books and MSS. for his Schola, where he was strenuous in cultivating Arabick Learning.

ON the first of March, 1643, Sir Simon D'Ewes, the Collector of Parliamentary Antiquities, wrote him a Letter of Thanks, for having, at his Request, translated into Latin certain Arabick Transcripts.

IN the Year 1653, Feb. 26, Dr. Arnold Boate, then at Paris, employed in collating Primate Usher's Syriack Pentateuch, with Copies of the same Version at that Place, consults Mr. Pocock concerning the Extent of Mount Libanus in Breadth and Length, putting other Geographical Quæries to him.

THE same Year, Sept. 30, Mr. John Jacob Stocker, Resident from the Protestant Cantons of Switzerland to the Parliament of England, desires Mr. Pocock to procure a Catalogue of the Arabick MSS. in the publick Library at Oxford, for the Use of Mr. Hottinger, then Professor of the Eastern Languages at Zurich, who was collecting a Library in that Way, and erecting a Press for those Languages. And, to the same Effect, Hottinger himself wrote on the 11th of the Month following.

IN October, 1654, our Author was favoured with a Letter from the famous Golius, Arabick Professor at Leyden, the only Man, perhaps, in Europe, that was nearly equal to Mr. Pocock in the Knowledge of that Tongue: He thanks him for his Present, [viz. Specimen Hist. Arabum] and for his Commendation of the Arabick Lexicon, which he [Golius] had lately published, acquaints him, that he intended to publish a second Edition with Improvements; that he had also a Persick Lexicon, already finished; but, finding the Printer afraid of the Expence, he designed first to send an Abridgment of it into the World. He also thanks Mr. Pocock for having recommended to him Mr. Nicholas Stanley, whom he greatly commends for his Parts and Learning. In the Conclusion, he begs Mr. Pocock's Judgment on two Questions; the first, about the religious Principles of Averroes; the second, about the Chatei, who they were, and what their Religion, Language, and Customs.

ON the Calends of August, 1655, Alting writes again to Mr. Pocock, recommending to him the Bearer of his Letter, an Inhabitant of Bern, in Switzerland.

THE same Year, in November, Mr. Thorndike returns our Author Thanks in my Lord Primate of Armagh's Name, for his Resolution of past Quæries, relating to Opinions of the Rabbi's on a certain Point, and proposes fresh ones.

IN February, 1657, Matthias Pasor, formerly Instructor to Mr. Pocock, in Arabick, writes his Thanks to Mr. Pocock, for the Present of his Porta Moysi, and offers a Conjecture of his own for reconciling the Septuagint, as cited by the Apostle, with the Hebrew of Hab. ii. 4.

ON the 26th of the same Month, Mr. John Tombes, then engaged in Controversy with Dr. Hammond, upon the Subject of Infant-Baptism, writes about a Distinction fathered, as it should seem, by Mr. Selden, upon the Rabbins, and denied by Dr. Hammond, desiring his Resolution of the Question between them.

THE Month following, Mr. Alting recommends, by Letter to our Author, a Person whom he calls Reverend. Joannem Zolikerum, Sangallensem, Helvetium.

IN August, 1657, Claudius Legendre, of Paris, who writes himself Conseiller du Roy, Contrôleur General des Reçes en sa Chambre des Accompts, sent a Letter to Mr. Pocock, in which he recommends to him a poor blind Arabian, then at Paris, and very skilful in the Arabick Language and Customs, and also in the Turkish, as one that might be useful to him.

IN December or January following, Ludovicus Forgus, Doctor of Physick at Sauthur, writes to Mr. Pocock, desiring his Permission to be his Disciple, and that he would explain such difficult Passages, as he (Forgus) should hereafter meet with in reading Arabick Books; which Mr. Pocock answered, with a Promise of his best Services.

Dr. Ralph Cudworth, of Cambridge, the celebrated Author of the Intellectual System, addressed himself by Letter to our Author, March 14, 1657, desiring an Extract out of Emir Chond, concerning the Persian Kings from Cyrus, to Alexander, their Number, Names, Years of Reign, and chiefest Actions; especially, if any Thing be found there, that is agreeable to what is recorded in Scripture or Greek Histories.

IN the same Month of the following Year, Jacobus Alting, by Letter, recommends to Mr. Pocock's good Offices, two Hungarian Youths, who were travelling for Improvement of their Studies, he says, they are pii, eruditi, bonestii.

AGAIN, in the same Month of the next Year, Alting sends to our Author two Copies of his Book de Schilo, which he had dedicated to him, and to his Landlord, Dr. Reynolds, and withal, recommends to him the Bearer D. Pauli, whom he calls a most excellent Youth, and the Son of an Orthodox Divine at Dantzick.

MAY 17, 1660, Mr. William Seaman, who, at the Request, and by the Encouragement of the Honourable Gentleman so oft mentioned for his noble Zeal to promote and propagate the Christian Religion, Robert Boyle, Esq; consults Mr. Pocock, as he had before done in this Work, about the Propriety of some Turkish Words: By which it appears, that our Professor was looked on, as an Oracle in that, as well as the Arabick Tongue.

THEODORE HAACK, a Dutch Gentleman, who had for some Years resided in London, on the Account of a religious and learned Design, wrote to Mr. Pocock, June 18, 1660, recommending to him two Gentlemen, the younger a Baron of Seltz, of near Relation to his Highness, the Prince, Elector Palatine, the other Mr. Fabritius, who was like to succeed Dr. Hottinger at Zurich: At the same Time he acquaints him, that Theodorus Petreus was printing, in Holland, his Psalterium Copticum. About the same Time also this Gentleman recommended two Germans, one of Hessia, a Civilian, the other of Thuringia, Student in Physick.

MARCH 16, 1661, Hottinger writes to Dr. Pocock from Heidelberg, to acquaint him, that he had dedicated a Book to him, which he sends by one Horneck, a Palatine, one, for his Age, well acquainted with the Oriental Languages, who was coming over to learn English, and to make an Acquaintance with our Connoisseurs.

THE latter End of the Month following, the Honourable Robert Boyle, Esq; desires Dr. Pocock to favour, with his Advice and Directions, Elzevir the Leyden Printer, who was coming into England, and he thinks going to Oxford, to see what he can get out of our Books and MSS. touching a new Edition of Josephus. Which however, I think, he did not publish.

AUGUST the 16th of this Year, Alting, in a Letter proposes a Difficulty in the Prophecy of Balaam, and recommends the Bearer of it, Joh. Jacob de Loffe, of Berne. In a Postscript, dated August the 26th, he owns the Receipt of a Letter, since the Finishing of this, in Answer to a former one, in which Alting had proposed his Opinion of the Word כְּרָאִי, which same Opinion the Doctor tells him, he himself had formerly defended, which Alting beseeches him to believe, he had not before observed; otherwise he should not have propounded it.

ON the 10th of May, 1662, his Serene Highness Charles Lewis, Elector Palatine, did Dr. Pocock the Honour of a Letter, signed with his own Hand, desiring him to favour with free Access to him, Frederick Miede, Son to his Vice-chancellor, who was desirous of improving his Knowledge in Theology, and the Oriental Languages, at Oxford. And to the same Purpose Hottinger wrote likewise, telling Dr. Pocock, that this Gentleman having seen the Universities of Germany, was now going for England, which he calls Abstrusioris Litteraturæ Sedem.

IN the End of the same Month, Mr. Thorndike, in a Letter to our Author, recommends a Jew of Amsterdam to him, whose Business at Oxford was, the Vending of a Book, which he had printed, and which Mr. Thorndike conceives to be a fit Entrance into the Reading of the Rabbins. He also expresses some Hopes, that this Jew might be converted to the Christian Religion.

JUNE 3, of this Year, Isaac Avendano (the same, I presume, who afterwards taught Hebrew in Oxford) brought Letters recommendatory from Dr. Castel to Dr. Pocock, in which that learned Person calls him an Oracle, unto which, all those who travel with publick Designs, are wont to make their Resort.

DR. Morley, Bishop of Winchester, wrote to our Author, May 16, 1663, in favour of the Bearer, to whom he desires he would extend his Care and Kindness, and Directions for learning the Hebrew, and other Oriental Languages; adding, that, if he was not much deceived, that Person would make very good Use of them. He does not name the Party on whose Behalf he writes; but, by comparing the Time, and some other Circumstances, I am induced to conjecture, that it was Mr. *George Hooper, afterwards Dean of Canterbury, and then successively Bishop of St. Asaph, and Bath and Wells: And, if I guess right, Bishop Morley prefaged of him very justly! For he lived, till he had not his Superior for Piety, Extent

* He was afterwards an eminent Preacher at the Savoy, and Author of several Books in the devotional Way.

* He was first, Chaplain to Bishop Morley, who presented him to the Living of Havant, near Portsmouth; and afterwards to the Rectory of East-Wood-Hay, in Hants: After that, he became Chaplain to Archbishop Sheldon. This very Year he commenced Master of Arts at Christ-Church. In short; it is Fact, and certain, that Mr. Hooper, in the former Part of his Life, was both encouraged and assisted by Dr. Pocock in the Prosecution of his Oriental Studies, and in the Application of Arabick Learning, towards clearing up Difficulties in the Holy Scriptures, and more especially in the Book of Job.

tent of Learning, and every good Quality, that could adorn a Bishop, a Gentleman, or a Scholar.

ON the 28th of the same Month, Mr. Boyle sent a Paper to Dr. Pocock, wherein Mr. Oldenburg, then Secretary to the Royal Society, begs, on the Behalf of an ingenious French Gentleman, his Correspondent, our Professor's Thoughts upon a certain Inscription; found at Persepolis, among some Ruins, which, adds Mr. Boyle, intelligent Travellers of my Acquaintance, that have visited them, profess to be the noblest and most worthy of Observation, they ever met with in Europe or Asia.

JULY the 25th of this Year, Mr. Oldenburg writes a Latin Answer, to that of Dr. Pocock, which gave an Account of the Persepolitan Inscription, thanking him for it, and promising to transmit it to his Correspondent. He further acquaints the Doctor, that a Friend of his Correspondent was about publishing Petrus Blesensis, a Writer of the 12th Century, who had freely taxed the Manners of the Court and Clergy of Rome; desiring, if any ἀνέκδοτα of that Writer should be found in the Libraries of either University, to have them procured, and requesting the Doctor to make proper Inquiries at Oxford. Certain it is; that four Years after this, viz. 1667; the Works of Petrus Blesensis were published at Paris, by Petrus de Gussanvilla, in Folio; with Notes and various Lectures, who, therefore, most probably, was the Friend of Mr. Oldenburg's Correspondent, above-mentioned.

THE 6th of the following Month, Golius writes to our Author, recommending to him a Transylvanian of an illustrious Family; named John Nadanyi.

AND thus, at one View, the Reader has the History of the Applications made to Dr. Pocock, after his second Return from the East, and the various Recommendations of Foreigners to him, down to the Year 1663; which, I think, will be compleat; after I have told him, that the pious and learned Dr. Hammond frequently consulted him by Letter, whilst he was preparing his excellent Annotations on the New Testament, and also on the Psalms; that with respect to the latter, the Books into which that Work was divided, were constantly submitted to our Author's Animadversions, before they saw the Press; which stood still, so long as Dr. Pocock's urgent Affairs withheld him from surveying what Copy was sent to him. So great Deference did even the most learned of his Contemporaries pay to the Judgment and Erudition of this humble and excellent Man!

I HAVE nothing to add under the present Year, (1663) but that our Author, about the Middle of it, was visited with Sickness, which, as I take it, proved a very severe one, being that, which ended in Lameness; that continued to the Day of his Death. After he had contracted this Lameness, he could not walk for Exercise, as before he was wont to do, twice a Day; but was obliged to substitute, instead of Walking, the Exercise of Pulling at a Dumb-Bell. Dr. Pocock's eldest and very learned Son Edward, in a Letter to Mr. Smith of Dartmouth, places this Sickness two Years later, viz. Anno 1665; which was the Year of the Plague, and in which, consequently, was an entire Cessation of Correspondence. But this is certain, that the first Compliments we meet with on Dr. Pocock's Recovery, are in a Letter of Mr. Boyle's, dated June 18, 1668, and then he only rejoices, that Dr. Pocock had recovered a great Measure of Strength. Dr. Narcissus Marsh, some Time ago Primate of Ireland, in a Letter, written by him, when Archbishop of Dublin, speaks of this long Sickness; and of our Professor's eminent Patience and Resignation under it; but gives us not the Year in which it happen'd; only says, it was many Years before his Death; that it was occasioned by a Humour, which fell into his Thigh, and that thereby he became lame; continuing so to his Dying-Day.

AFTER this, we meet with nothing remarkable in the Series of our Author's Correspondence, till the Year 1666, when Mr. William Seaman published his Turkish New Testament, undertaken at the Desire of the Honourable Mr. Boyle, and greatly forwarded by his Liberality. A Copy of this he begs Dr. Pocock to accept of, in a Letter, dated July 17.

IN April, 1668, Dr. Pocock had a Letter from Sir Joseph Williamson, with an Arabick Letter inclosed, from the Emperor of Morocco to King Charles the Second, desiring from him a Translation of it, they having No-body in Town Masters enough of that Language, to give the Contents of it.

IN June following, Mr. Boyle, writing to Mr. Samuel Clarke, after the Expression of his Joy at Dr. Pocock's Recovery, desires him to put him in Mind of the Promise he made him, [Mr. Boyle] that he would extract some unusual Explications of Hebrew Texts out of his ancient Grammarians: But I cannot find, that our Author ever perfected any such Design, nor that he left the Appearance of it behind him.

THE Year following, Mr. Seaman published his Turkish Grammar and Turkish History, concerning which, several Letters passed between him, and our Professor, who bestowed great Care and Pains in correcting it, and in putting the Preface into better Latin, as Mr. Seaman himself freely and thankfully acknowledges: The same he did by the Epistle dedicatory to Mr. Boyle, who advanced twenty Pounds towards the Work, to be paid in Books.

SOME Time this Year, or the latter End of the foregoing one, Peter Clauston, a learned Dane, as I take it, visited Oxford, and became acquainted with our Professor: In his Return home he was accompanied, as far as Leyden, by Mr. Edward Pocock, the Doctor's eldest Son, then Student of Christ-Church; and from thence, Mr. Clauston writes to Dr. Pocock, giving him an Account of his Son's kind Reception from all the Learned of that Place, on the Account of his Father's great Learning and Humanity. He takes this Opportunity to recommend two of his Countrymen, travelling to England, unto the Professor's Notice, the one a Son of the celebrated Antiquary Wormius, the other Mr. Borneman, whose Father had been Secretary to the King [of Denmark,] and each of whom had Brothers, that were Professors in the University of their Country.

HIERONYMUS HARDER, May the first of this Year, consults our Author on several Difficulties, relating to the History of Sultan Saladine, which he was then preparing to publish with a Latin Translation.

JUNE the 17th, Alting writes from Groningen, laments, that he could not see Dr. Pocock's Son in those Parts, congratulates him on his Recovery of Health; complains, that his Colleague Maresius, out of Envy, had charged him with Herefy and Socinianism; that he had given much the same Treatment to the Leyden Divines, and particularly to the famous Cocceius; because they would not come into his Censure, upon an Appeal to them.

MR. Francis Vernon, then at Paris, in a Letter, dated Sept. the 5th of this Year, at the Request of Mr. Justel, acquaints Dr. Pocock, that a Friend of his [Mr. Justel's] intended to publish the Works of St. Leo Papa, and of Prosper Aquitanus, and desires the Bodleian Library might be consulted, to see, if any MSS. could be found there, that would be useful to his Design.

MARCH the 3d, 1672, Mr. Bernard, from Leyden, writes, that Gronovius and his Son were preparing a new Edition of Polybius, with the Notes of Casaubon, Valesius, and their own, and corrected by some Manuscript Copies, and that they desired to have that in the Bodleian Library collated with the printed Copy, and transmitted to them.

THE 19th of the same Month he writes again, and says, that Harder, having translated the History of Saladine, cannot find a Bookseller to undertake the Printing of it, so great was the Decay of Oriental Learning: For which Reason also he adds, that Mr. Thevenot cannot find a Bookseller, either there, or at Amsterdam, to undertake his Abulfeda.

THIS Year was farther remarkable for the Publication of Dr. Castel's Lexicon in seven Languages, after ten Years immense Labour: Towards which, Dr. Pocock had contributed, by lending three Æthiopick MSS. and ten Æthiopick MS. Liturgies. We shall hear him hereafter complaining, how ill rewarded all his learned Pains were, which he had expended on this Lexicon. I shall only add, that, at the Time of his Death, he had a large Number of the Copies on his Hands; as appears from this Circumstance, that in his last Will, he bequeathed 100 Sets of them to Dr. Compton, then Lord Bishop of London.

APRIL the 20th, of the Year following, Lud. Ferrandus, a most surprizing young Frenchman, of whom more by and by, made his Application from Paris, by Letter, to Dr. Pocock, acquainting him, that he had undertaken to translate the Annals of the Kings of France, and the Ottoman Emperors, a MS. in the Royal Library, written formerly in Hebrew by Joseph the Priest, the Son of Jehossua, and intending to illustrate this History with Notes likewise taken principally from Arabick Writers, he humbly desires the Doctor to supply him with what such Arabick Books, as he has read, say of the French History, and chiefly of the Expeditions by them made into the East, or at least, to direct him to the Books, wherein Memoirs of this Sort are to be found.

THIS Year, Mr. Huntington, a great Friend and future Correspondent of our Professor, set out for Aleppo, to officiate there, as Chaplain to the English Factory.

MR. Vernon, from Paris, dates a Letter November 12, of the Year we are now in, the chief Design of which was to entertain Dr. Pocock with the History of Monsieur Ferrand, above spoken of, to whom he had just delivered the Doctor's Answer to his Letter. His Story is as follows:

MONSIEUR Ferrand is by Birth a Provençal, a Native of the Town of Tboulon, of some 25 Years of Age: From his Infancy he was always addicted to the Study and Admiration of Oriental Languages; to which, besides the Dispositions which Nature had given him, Fortune administered some accidental Helps: For being born in a maritime Town, where was a great Concourse of Strangers, and particularly of Levantes, brought thither by

by the Allurements of Trade and Riches, which they hope to acquire by a Correspondence in France; among much other Acquaintance with those Foreigners, he says, he made one very intimate with an Arabian Merchant, a Person as well furnished in his Mind, as he was rich in his Fortunes. This Man he represents, as one the most abounding with Courtesy, the most obliging in Behaviour, and the most learned of any he had seen or conversed with before; nay, he questions, whether he ought to prefer any, that he has seen since. This Man (he says) if he had not had natural Longings after Eastern Fashions and Writings, which, he professes to have had, would have inspired him with a Love and Esteem for them; so extremely did his Person seem to recommend and grace, what Mr. Ferrand's Fancy had given him great Inclinations to before. To this Arabian, then, he made his constant Resort; with him he spent all those Hours, which were in his own Disposal, and none of his Studies or Recreations were pleasant to him, except such as he took in his Company. This Arabian had great Store of Manuscripts, and these he taught him to read; many of these were Historical, and with these he diverted himself. Thus he spent, what he calls the happiest Part of his Life, till the Style of the World, and the Commands of his Friends, brought him to Paris, where they intend he shall compleat his Studies: He hath his Residence in the University, in the College des Thresoriers, where his Friends designed him for Physick; but his own Genius irresistibly carries him another Way, viz. to Oriental Studies, to which, for the most Part, he applies himself. The main of his Time he spends in the King's Library; where his great Assiduity and eminent Parts have brought him acquainted with the learned Persons that resort thither: So that now he is not only known for a prodigious Proficient in Oriental Learning, among Men of Science, but is also taken Notice of by Monsieur Colbert, who hath the Care and Superintendency of Learning, as well as of what else contributes to the Honour and Advantage of the French Nation. This able Minister looks upon Monsieur Ferrand, not only as an accomplished Scholar, but also as an useful Member, and Ornament of the State.

ON the 28th of this same Month, Harder, shortly after Professor of Oriental Languages at Leyden, probably, in the Room of the great Golius, writes to Dr. Pocock, and gives him a most melancholy Account of the Neglect of Arabick Literature in that University, or rather of the Contempt it lay under there: Two Causes he assigns for it; first, Golius, he thinks, did not exercise the Students, not even those that were maintained at the publick Expence, in these Studies, nor use his Authority to make them take Pains therein: 2dly, He blames the Avarice of the Age, which gave no Attention to any Sciences, that were not greatly lucrative.

IN the Beginning of the following Year, Hieron. Harder writes, that he was very lately made Reader of the Oriental Tongues by the Curators of Leyden: In which Employment, his Hopes of giving them Satisfaction were founded on our Professor's Direction and Assistance, which, he flatter'd himself, would not be wanting to him upon any emergent Difficulty.

ANOTHER Letter from the same Hand, dated May 23, 1671, brought a Recommendation of Mr. Furcardus, a Licentiate in Law, and a Man of good Learning, who was going for England.

IN this Year, the Professor's eldest Son, Mr. Edward Pocock, published, with a Latin Translation of his own, an Arabick Piece of Ebn Tophail, the Title of which was, Philosophus Autodidactus, sive Epistola Abi Jaafer Ebn Tophail de Hai Ebn Yokdhan. In qua ostenditur, quomodo ex Inferiorum Contemplatione ad Superiorum Notitiam Ratio humana ascendere possit. It is an ingenious Fiction, giving the History of Ebn Yokdhan, who, the Author tells us, according to some, was produced in one of the Indian Islands under the Æquinoctial, where Men come into the World without Father or Mother. Others relate his Beginning in this Manner: Over-against that wonderful Island was another large one, under the Sovereignty of a proud and jealous Prince, who, having a beautiful Sister, strictly guarded her from marrying, because he despaired of finding her a Husband of suitable Quality: But a Relation of his, by Name Yokdhan, nevertheless privately married her, and by him she had the Hero of this Fable, Ebn Jockdhan: As soon as he was born, and his Mother had suckled him, for fear her Marriage should be discovered, she exposed him to the Sea, in a Chest properly contrived, at high Water, which carried him to the opposite Island above-mentioned; where his Cries brought a She-Goat, which had lately lost her Kid, and which suckled and brought him up. He proved afterwards of a discerning and contemplative Spirit, and by progressive Reasonings with himself, from what he saw, formed a System of Natural Philosophy, Morality, and Metaphysics. In the 50th Year of his Age, Asal, a Person of a contemplative Disposition, who came thither from a neighbouring Island, for the Sake of Retirement, found Yokdhan, taught him Language, and got from him all the Account he was able to give of his Original, and the History of his gradual Approaches to a Knowledge of, and intimate Conjunction with God. Dr. Pocock prefixed a learned Preface to his Son's Book, concerning the Name and Age of the Arabian, that wrote the Original, which led Foreigners, especially those of France, to consider the Whole, as the Father's Performance.

MR. Vernon writing to Dr. Pocock, from Paris, Sept. 7, of this Year, tells him, that he had delivered a Copy of this Book to Monsieur Capellain of the Sorbonne, for which he was very thankful, being much delighted with it; he acquaints him, that his own Copy he had presented to Mr. Huygens, of the Royal Academy; that Mr. Herbelote, and Mr. De la Croix, both eminent Oriental Scholars, had read, and approved it: He adds, that Mr. Thevenot had Abn Topbail (the Arabick Author, translated by Mr. Pocock) his Life in Manuscript; that he informs him, he was a Philosopher of great Note and Eminence in his Age, that he was Averroes's Master, and that he had like to have made a new Sect among the Mabometans, being withal of an active Spirit.

IN September this Year, 1671, the Learned Mr. Beveridge, afterwards Bishop of St. Asaph, writes his Thanks to Dr. Pocock, for having perused the Arabick Paraphrase of the Canons, with his [Mr. Beveridge's] Translation, desiring the Continuance of his Care, and submitting himself wholly to his Judgment.

MR. Vernon, in November of the same Year, writes again to our Author, from Paris, acquainting him, that, together with his, would come two more Letters, one from Dr. Capellain, the other from Monsieur Ferrand, to both of whom he had, by the Doctor's own Direction, presented his Son's Book; he is sorry he had not begged a Copy for Mr. Thevenot, who was much taken with the Fancy of the Piece, and intended to make the Professor a Present of the Life of its Author, Abn Topbail, in Arabick. He adds, that Abbot Panciatichi, by that Time arrived at Florence, would make the Value of it known there, and that he perceived they every where made Account of it. Mr. Ferrand's Letter is yet extant; he gives a handsome Compliment to the Piece, declaring himself at a Loss, which to admire most, the Author's Elegance, or his Interpreter's Exactness. Mr. Capellain's Letter did not accompany Mr. Vernon's, as will appear from the Date of it in the next Article.

MONSIEUR La Grange le Capellain, a Sorbonist, and Author of Mare Rabbicum infidum, against Chavigny, to whom Dr. Pocock, as above, sent a Present of his Son's Book, and thanked the Doctor for it; having received a Letter since from him, writes, in Answer to it, one, dated February 17, 1672, in which he recommends the Bearer Ottsius, a Swiss, a Person well-skilled in Biblical and Rabbinical Hebrew, and now going for England to learn Arabick, tantum ad Fontem unde felicius & uberius hauriri possit. He inquires about Rabbi Tanchum, mentioned in the Professor's Letter, whether it was a printed Book, or only a Manuscript: So little known was that most excellent Commentator, till Dr. Pocock apprized the World of him.

OTTSIUS, the learned Swiss above-mentioned, was also at the same Time commended to Dr. Pocock's Regards, by Mr. Ferrand: Herein also he desires to purchase a Copy of the Philosophus Autodidactus for the famous Francis Bosquet, first Bishop of Lodeve, and afterwards of Montpellier, who, hearing of the Book, by Letter from Monsieur Ferrand, earnestly desired him to procure one, and impatiently expected it.

FROM two of Mr. Bernard's Letters this Year, I find, the Professor was much urged by his Friends, to publish his Chiliads of Arabick Proverbs, which had lain by him, finished for the Press, between 30 and 40 Years: The Encouragement he had to proceed in it, seemed, at this Time, not inconsiderable. Dr. Castel had promised to secure a hundred Books for Cambridge, and a still greater Proportion might be depended upon in Oxford, besides what the Assiduity of his good Friends in London, such as Mr. Boyle, Dr. Gale, Mr. Haaek, &c. might get off: But, for Reasons, of which we can give no Account, nothing was done in the Business, either then, or at any Time afterwards.

MR. Huntington, in February, 1671, wrote to Dr. Pocock, desiring, if any yet remained undisposed of, some Copies of his Arabick Grotius de Veritate, which Mr. Boyle readily and thankfully supplied, to the Number of 30, and with them 12 Copies of Mr. Seaman's Turkish Catechism: Of these our Author gave Mr. Huntington Notice, in a Letter, dated the 23d of August following: To accompany these, he sent three Dozen of our Church Catechisms rendered into Arabick, which he had just then printed for the Use of the young Christians in the East, intending that more should follow, if God permit. He tells his Friend, he was at a Loss, out of what Copy to take the Commandments, which, at last, he determined to do out of the Polyglott Bible. At the End, he farther tells him, are added some Places of Scripture, containing the most general Principles of Religion: To which should have been added, the Institution of the Lord's Supper, from 1 Cor. xi. but their Haste to have it out of the Press soon enough for the present Opportunity of sending them, prevented it. He proceeds to express his Wishes, that the chief Prayers of our English Liturgy were in Arabick, and his Astonishment, that he never found the Divine Hymn of Te Deum in the Eastern Languages: The Reason of which probably was, that this Hymn was the Composition of a Latin Father, [St. Ambrose] whereas, I think, the Eastern Liturgies were made agreeably to the Formularies used in the Greek Church. However, Dr. Pocock, as his Son informs us, added this Hymn to his Arabick Catechism. He repeats his former Request to procure him the Books of which Mr. Huntington had a Catalogue, such as were written by Jews in the Arab. Language. 'But, continues he, my chief Longing is for the first Part of Rabbi Tanchum's Book, which he calls כתאב אלביאן, Cetab ol Bian, which are his Notes on the ‘ whole Old Testament. That first Part he calls אלכליא, Al Coliyat, i. e. Generalia, wherein he treats of all Things necessary to the Interpretation of Scripture, as Metaphors, Parabolical Expressions and Words, either unusual, or of divers Acceptions and Difficulties in Chronology, divers Readings, and the like.’ He recommends to him the Methods, by which, when he was in the East, he got all the Pieces he then had of Tanchum, viz. Joshua, Judges, Samuel, and the Kings, and Jeremy, Ezekiel, and the twelve minor Prophets.

ON the 17th of August this Year, Mr. Oldenburg, before-mentioned, wrote to Dr. Pocock, on the Behalf of Dr. Fogelius, one of the chief Physicians of Hamburg, desiring the Professor to give him the Meaning of some Turkish Names of Medicines, and also to inform him, whether the Book de Voluptate Animi, of Badroddini, be at Oxford or Cambridge, and whether it be a MS. or a printed Book.

By several Letters written from Dr. Castel, in March, of the next Year, I find, that our Professor intended then an Edition of his Arabick Chiliads of Proverbs, and that, in order thereto, he printed and dispersed a Specimen of the Work. Dr. Castel earnestly pressed the Perfecting of that Piece, and, to encourage it, frequently repeated his Promise of becoming responsible for 100 Copies. From one of his Letters it appears also, that Dr. Pocock was then thought to be preparing something of Rabbi Tanchum and Maimonides’s More Nebochim, for the Publick: As to the former of these, the Reality of it is intimated by himself in a Letter to Mr. Huntington this Year, and that it was the Desire of a Learned Sorbonist (De la Grange le Capellain) as likewise of some at home: But for the latter, I rather take it to have been the Design of the Doctor’s eldest Son, Mr. Edward Pocock. For about this Time, Mr. Locke, since that so well known to the World, in a Letter to the Father, mentions his having engaged his Son at Salisbury, in translating and printing a Part of Maimonides, and that he had spoken with Mr. Boyle about it: He desired also to have it printed, just as that Piece translated by Mr. Prideaux^a was. He further assured Dr. Pocock, that it would greatly encourage those, who wished well to the Work, if he could assure them, that it should be done under the Father’s Direction. But of all these, Dr. Castel urged most the Publication of the Arabick Chiliads, as most grateful to all the truly Learned, offering to leave no Stone unturn’d to effect the Vending of the Edition: ‘ Not, adds he, of the Proverbs only, but as to the other Jewish Authors also, having a very high Esteem and Value for them, especially Rabbi Tanchum, offering, at the same Time, himself carefully to correct the Errata.’ The same Learned Arabick Professor of Cambridge was at this Time labouring to purchase the Golian Library for his University; a private Person of his Acquaintance being willing to venture about 700 Pounds for it. But the Executors hoping to make a more advantageous Sale, refused the Offer; of which they dearly repented afterward, being compelled, more than 20 Years after, to sell them by Auction, and probably to less Advantage. At which Time, Dr. Edward Bernard made a Journey into Holland, and bought the choicest of them for Dr. Narcissus March, then Archbishop of Dublin. See Dr. Smith’s Life of Dr. Bernard, p. 50, 51.

THIS Year, Mr. Huntington travelled to Mount Libanus, in order to make some learned Discoveries there, but was prevented by some Infirmary, which, when he was within two Hours of the Patriarch, came upon him, and disabled him from Walking. However, he procured R. Tanchum’s Morshed, in three Volumes, and some imperfect Pieces of his upon the Scripture, which he sent, as a Present, to our Professor: A better Copy of Al Morshed was afterwards transmitted to Mr. Huntington, from Damascus, of which he offered Dr. Pocock his Choice. He had likewise found, to his great Joy, Cozari in Arabick, the whole Disputation.

IN March, 1673, Dr. Martin Fogelius, of Hamburg, before-mentioned, having received our Professor’s Answer to his Quæries, concerning the Narcoticks of the Turks, by the Means of Mr. Oldenburg: To some of which he replied from the Lexicons, to others from his own Use and Observation, whilst he lived amongst them: He now desires a more distinct Account, what Quantities, how oft, to what End, and with what Effect he took them. He further consults him about a Difficulty in the Nubian Geographer: To which Dr. Pocock obligingly and fully replied. Dr. Fogelius had then a Tract by him ready for the Press, De Turcarum Nepenthe, which made him more particularly inquisitive on these Subjects.

IN September of the present Year, Mr. Huntington wrote a long Epistle to Dr. Pocock, which produced his next publick Performance, viz. the Arabick Version of our English Liturgy: It may be remembred, that the Professor, writing to Mr. Huntington, more than a Year before, had wished, that the chief Prayers of our English Liturgy were in Arabick: Taking Occasion from hence, and from his Arabick Catechism, he represents to the Doctor, what excellent Service our Liturgy would do in the East, if it were universally translated into the same Language. ‘ Undoubtedly, adds he, this [the Catechism] is but a Specimen of your further Design, and that thereby you would guess, how it might be accepted, before you accomplished the Whole. Really, continues he, if you will believe the People, they wonder a Frank should understand their Tongue, better than the most learned among them: And they see the two Tables, once more intire and perfect, not abused and broken, as in

‘ all the Methods and Systems of Divinity, that the Romanists have hitherto conveyed, for ought I know, into these Places ——— And, proceeds he, if this be so acceptable, what would the whole Service be, when the People here shall read it so fully expressed in the Language wherein they are born? No one is, nor ever will be, (besides yourself) fit for the Employment: For it well becomes the best Liturgy in the World, to be best translated; and in this Case, every one that knows your Name, knows where alone to rest his Expectation.’

ANOTHER Inducement he offers, which is, that it will convince a Sort of Men, who have brought a Fancy out of Europe, and which they would have believed here, that we have little or no Religion in England, and that what we have, is quite overspread with Errors and Herefy: This he thinks the Natives more apt to credit, because (which is a Thing very unhappy) we do not punctually observe the solemn Days and Times, in which their Religion chiefly consists. To this he adds, the Need that the Greek Christians have of Devotional Books; their Esteem for the Church of England above all others; their Agreement with it in Doctrine, excepting the Points of the Procession of the Holy Ghost and Transubstantiation; concerning the latter of which, they talk very differently, neither agreeing with one another, nor yet, at different Times, with themselves.

TOWARDS the Expence of this Translation, Mr. Huntington generously offered twenty Pounds at present, for procuring of Paper, intimating, that he would readily advance the whole Charge, if he lived to be worth so much, if it should happen, that no other Benefactors offered their Assistance.

BEFORE our Author could receive this Proposal, he had written again to Mr. Huntington, still reminding him of Rabbi Tanchum’s Works, for getting of which intire, he was at present the more solicitous, because the Learned World, both at home and abroad, desired, that something of that Author might be published. He likewise recommends to him, an Enquiry after what is to be had or known from the Samaritans, and from the Karraitim Jews, if any such were in those Parts. Lastly, he begs, that he would examine the Syrians, what Creature is by them called Yoruro, whether it be not a Jackall: Hereby he hoped to correct a Mistake in the usual Rendering of the Hebrew Tannim, by Dragons, which neither howl, nor have Breasts, both which are attributed to the Animals, called Tannim, in the Hebrew Scriptures. At the same Time, he desires Mr. Huntington would inform himself concerning the Noise which Ostriches make. Whoever recollects, what Dr. Pocock has written on both these Subjects, in his Commentary on Micah, Ch. i. Ver. 8. which was made publick four Years after this, will think it no improbable Conjecture, that he had now begun that Work, or, at least, was laying together an Apparatus for it.

IN November of this Year, 1673, Monsieur le Capellain paid his Respects to the Professor, in a Letter, the Bearer of which was a studious and noble Youth, his Name not mentioned, who came into England to see, and be acquainted with, our Men of Letters, and more particularly with Dr. Pocock.

THE next Year, i. e. 1674, appeared the Fruits of Mr. Huntington’s Instances with Dr. Pocock, for translating our English Common-Prayer into Arabick: He did not render the Whole of it into that Language, but only the chief Prayers, Hymns, &c. agreeably to what himself had, some Years before, wished to see done. The Title of this Piece, as left with us by his eldest Son, in the Catalogue of his Father’s Works, is, Partes præcipuæ Liturgiæ Ecclesiæ Anglicanæ, Linguâ Arabicâ. 1674. Mr. Edward Pocock’s more particular Account of this Version of his Father’s is, that it contained the daily Morning and Evening Prayers, the Order of administering Baptism and the Lord’s Supper: To which, he likewise added, the Doctrine of the Church of England, comprehended in the 39 Articles, and the Arguments of our Homilies. Mr. Huntington had not, as he expected, the Honour of defraying the Expence of these useful Labours of his Friend: For the University of Oxford most worthily supplied the entire Expences of the Book; thereby precluding all private Benefactions, Of which more hereafter.

ON the 20th of March, Peace being then concluded between the English and Dutch, and the Literary Correspondence once more open between Dr. Pocock, and his Friends in the Low Countries, Mr. Alling, of Groningen, took the first Opportunity of saluting the Professor, congratulating the happy Change of Affairs between the two Nations, and recommending the Bearer of the Epistle, Anthony Klingler, of Zurich, a Student in Divinity, who, having spent a Year at Groningen, and, after that, a Winter at Leyden, was going thence to England.

IN the same Month, Dr. Thomas Greaves, in a Letter to our Author, expresses his Wishes, that some one would publish the Life of the Pious Cyril, Patriarch of Constantinople, together with the Occasion and Manner of his Death: ‘ I have, says Dr. Greaves, moved Sir Cyril Wyche to undertake it, and have offered to contribute some Assistance.’ The Reader, perhaps, may remember the Account given of this excellent and illustrious Person, towards the Beginning of the present History, and particularly, how he honoured Sir Peter Wyche, then Embassador from King Charles the First, at the Porte, with standing Surety to his Son at his Baptism there, and giving him the Name of Cyril: And this will sufficiently explain, how how it came to pass, that Dr. Greaves applied to that Gentleman, and thought him the fittest to write the Patriarch's Story.

THIS Year also Dr. Pocock had the agreeable News from Aleppo, that his Friend Huntington had, after long Enquiry, procured for him Abu Wallids Allama.

IT was May, in the Year following, before the Translation of the English Liturgy into Arabick reached Mr. Huntington, at Aleppo; who, upon the first hearing that so acceptable a Present was in its Way to him, wrote a most pious and thankful Letter to the Professor, dated May 13, 1675. 'I find, says he in it, the University envied me the Honour of being a Benefactor to so good a Cause ——— However, I'll recover what I can by the religious Distribution of the Books.' He proceeds thus: 'I have several of the Grotius's, yet by me, rather out of the Apprehension I have of the Malice of some Christians (who will hardly allow, that a Man of a different Opinion should be instrumental to the Propagation of the right Faith) than from the unprompted Accusation and downright Danger by the Turks. I did cut out the last Book in two or three Copies.'

UPON the actual Receipt of the Common Prayer made Arabick, which happened before the End of May, Mr. Huntington wrote again with a Profusion of religious Joy to Dr. Pocock for his Labour of Love, as he calls that Work, and the Pledge of his Affection to those People, among which he formerly lived: 'I expect, adds he, it should meet with the greatest Hindrance from the Latin Fathers: For they are unwilling the People should know too much, that is, more than they think fit to teach them. Nor is this a needless Suspicion: For if they were so much aggrieved, as I heard they were, because you printed the Second Commandment at length in yours, which very impudently they have expunged out of their Catechisms, how must they be concerned to find their Doctrines, some of them thwarted and positively denied? Neither is it reasonable to expect, they should allow the Articles, though of a whole Church, when they contradict their Opinions and Interests, since, upon the same Account, they dare renounce an express Law of God!' The good Man proceeds in owning his Obligations, not only to the Professor, but also to the Vice-Chancellor and the University, praying for their Happiness and Prosperity, and successful Progress in the like good Works: Nay, such was his Zeal for the Promotion of true Religion, by the Means then put into his Hands, that he wishes to have born some small Share in the Expence, tho' only in the Binding of the Books in marbled Paper, which he calls the most taking and proper Dress for them in those Countries.

IN July of this Year, our Author received from Dr. Castel his Thanks and Compliments for the Present of our English Liturgy; most elegantly transfused, as he expresses himself, into Arabick. The Reader will pardon me, for observing on this Occasion, that this very learned Gentleman, by conversing almost constantly with the Eastern Writers, seems to have made their lofty Ways of Expression habitual to him, so as not to have been able to forbear them, even in his Epistolary Style.

MR. Huntington writes again the following November, and acquaints Dr. Pocock concerning his old Acquaintance, Father Celestine, the Carmelite, and Brother to the great Golius, that he was then gone in Mission with three others, to the Coasts of Malabar, to confirm the Christians of St. Thomas there, and to convert Infidels; that he enquired most affectionately after him, [Dr. Pocock] and made Mr. Huntington a Visit, on purpose to understand the Doctor's Welfare; and to convey his Respects unto him: 'Very glad he was, adds he, to hear of your Performance in Eutychius, whom Selden, he said, had injured, and in Abul-Pharai, a Book he commends mightily, but had not seen them in Print. Your Specimen he had perused, and gives it due Applause: He had heard of your Version of Grotius, and was wonderfully pleased with some Copies of it, which I presented him, in your Name, and promised me a Thomas à Kempis, de Imitatione Christi, by him translated into the same Language, some few of which he brought with him from Rome. He hath left a little Poem of St. Ephrem there ready for the Press, with his Translation into Arabick, Turkish, Latin, &c. He renews his Age, he saith, and altho' 72, is healthy and vigorous, and walks as nimbly as ever. One Reason, why he was chosen for this Employment, may be his Skill in Syriack, the Holy Tongue of those Christians, to whom he is gone. From him I could not have expected a fair Account of your late Undertaking; nor is it in the Service itself, but the Articles and Homilies, where such People find fault: And though it was not designed for them, they are ready to keep others from esteeming it; and, to raise the Reputation of their own Doctrine, they are in Interest bound to decry ours.

'I SEND hereby two Letters from the Samaritans, in answer to Dr. Marshall's, though in both of them, there is but one Passage properly answered: They are in a strange Amaze, and know not what to think; but mighty willing they are to believe, they have such Brethren, because they would fain be the better for them. And if ever you hope to get any of their few Books, it must be upon some such Consideration, wherein, as Care should be taken not to abuse them, so neither to cheat yourselves.'

THE History of this Correspondence between Dr. Marshall and the Samaritans of Siehem, and of what gave Rise to it, not being in every one's Hand, I shall here briefly lay the whole whole Matter before the Reader, out of Dr. Huntington's Epistles to the famous Job Ludolphus, Author of the Æthiopic History. Whilst the former of these was Chaplain to the English Factory at Aleppo, he took Galilee and Samaria in his Way to Jerusalem. At Sicbem, where, and at Gaza, the small Remains of the Samaritans are found, he visited them in order to get Information, and, if possible, some Books from them. The Samaritans asked the Doctor, if there were any Hebrews in his Country, not meaning Jews, as he afterwards perceived, whom they hate, but Samaritans, to whom only they allow the Name of Israelites and Hebrews: The Doctor, supposing they asked about Jews, innocently answered in the Affirmative; and, at the same Time, read some Sentences out of their sacred Books, and written in their own Character. Hereupon they cried out with Transports of Joy, These are truly Israelites, and our dearest Brethren. The Doctor took Pains to undeceive them, affirming, that the Persons, to whom his Answer related, were unquestionably Jews; but they hugged their Mistake, and would by no Means be set right. After this, the Doctor told them, that they would do well to send a Book of their Law, with an Account of their Religion, Times of Prayer, Sacrifices, High Priests, Feasts, Fasts, and all their Books, from which it would certainly appear, whether they were of the same Faith or not. Accordingly they sent a Copy of their Law, and such Letters as he described, which were transmitted to Dr. Marshall, Rector of Lincoln-College in Oxford, and answered by him; and to this they again replied, the Correspondence continuing many Years, and not ending, but with the Death of that very learned Person. See Huntingtoni Epist. Lond. Edit. à Th. Smith, S. T. P. An. 1704, p. 55, 56.

HENNINGUS WITTE, who, more than ten Years before, had seen and conversed with Dr. Pocock in England, wrote to him, May 24, 1676, on the following Occasion, from Riga in Livonia, his own Country: He had for some Time been engaged in a Design of writing Encomiums on all the most famous Writers of that Age, in each Part of Literature, and had already published some Decads, containing Memoirs of Divines, Civilians, and Physicians. He was now collecting Panegyrics on the most illustrious Philologers, Historians, Orators, and Philosophers; but wanted Memoirs of the chief Englishmen, that, in the present Century, have cultivated these Sciences, having no Relation of this Sort in his Possession, except of Mr. Cambden: He begs, therefore, that our Author would, by the Bearer, transmit to him, whatever he had to communicate in this Way.

THIS Year also began a Correspondence between Dr. Pocock and Dr. Dudley Loftus, of Dublin, a Clergyman of a noble Family in the Kingdom of Ireland, and famous for his Skill in the Oriental Languages: He had been assisting to Dr. Walton, in the Polyglott Bible, having translated the Æthiopic New Testament into Latin, and was useful to Dr. Castel, in his Heptaglott Lexicon, as is owned by each of them in the Prefaces to their several Works. It is somewhat wonderful, that this Correspondence had not commenced sooner, considering the Nearness of these learned Persons, and the Alliance of their respective Studies: Nor had it, perhaps, begun so soon, but for the Accident of a Chaldee Priest, who desired Dr. Loftus's Letter to our Author, signifying his good Behaviour in Ireland, and the Success of his Journey, to which Place Dr. Pocock, among others, had given him Commendatory Letters. Having this Opportunity, he desires the Professor to inform him, what Oriental Writers say concerning Dionysius, the Compiler of a Catena upon the Bible, from Oriental Interpreters; and whether any of this Dionysius's Works be extant in Oxford. Dr. Loftus had already published a Translation of this Catena, upon the Gospel of St. Mark, into English, and intended an Edition of him upon the four Gospels, which was all he had of him. There are also some other learned and curious Quæries in this Letter, too long to be transcribed here.

MUCH about this Time also, I conceive, there was a Literary Commerce between Dr. Pocock, and Christian Noldius, of Copenhagen, Author of the Concordantiæ Particularum Hebræo-Chaldaicarum, printed in the Year 1679: Such a Thing is spoken of by that learned Person, in his Vindiciæ, wherein, upon all Occasions, he makes very honourable Mention of our Author.

TOWARDS the End of this Year, or rather early in the Year following, viz. 1677, was published Dr. Pocock's Commentary on the Prophecy of Micah: What induced him to write on this, and afterwards on three more of the lesser Prophets, rather than on others, is not easy to determine: The general Opinion is, that it was pursuant to a Scheme of Dr. Fell, then Dean of Christ-Church, and afterwards Bishop of Oxford, who, intending to oblige the World with a Commentary on the entire Bible, or, at least, of the Old Testament, made by the learned Hands of that University, had divided the Task among a set Number of them, and that the Books of Micah, Malachi, Hosea, and Joel, fell to the Share of our Professor. I should be the more ready to give into this Account, because it comes confirmed by his eldest Son; and yet it seems strange, allowing this to be true, that, in his Dedication of his Commentary on Hosea to Bishop Fell, he should particularly mention the Encouragement he had from him, to put that Work to the Press, and not take the least Notice, that either this, or the two preceding Commentaries, owed their first Conception to him. All that Dr. Pocock himself has let us into, in his Preface to his first Commentary, that on Micah, is, that his

chief Endeavour in those Annotations, was to settle the genuine and literal Meaning of the Text, i. e. of the Hebrew Original: He had observed, that Interpreters often rendered this very differently from what we read in our English Bibles, and that in them also we have various Readings, or rather Rendings in the Margin. He further acquaints the Reader, what Methods he used to come at this literal Meaning: And Translations being a principal Help, he is hence led to speak of them, especially such as are less generally known, viz. the Syriack and Arabick. But, because it would be in vain to look after the literal Meaning of the Hebrew Text, so long as it was presumed to be corrupt (a Prejudice that then increased much thro' the Writings of Capellus and others, against the Antiquity of Vowel Points in the Hebrew Bible) Dr. Pocock labours to shew, first, The Improbability of such a Surmise, and how unlikely it was, that the Jews should have corrupted their own Scriptures, either before or after the Time of Christ: As to the Argument for this supposed Corruption, arising from the Difference there is at present between the LXX Translation made from the Hebrew some Centuries before the Coming of Christ, and the Hebrew Copies now extant, he shows, that it will prove nothing, till it shall appear, 1st, That the Copy, used by the Seventy, was truer than any preserved among the Jews, and derived from them to us. 2^{dly}, That the LXX Interpreters always followed the Letter of their Hebrew Copy, never venturing to give us their Sense of it in different Words, or had not some Notions of the Words, which are not now so usually known. 3^{dly}, That the Version of those Interpreters has been transmitted to us pure, as they made it, and free from Alteration or Mixture: But none of these Things, he thinks, has been, or can be sufficiently proved. In a Word, as the English Version of the Bible, at present used, generally follows the Letter of the Hebrew Text, which was the main Object of our Author's Enquiry, so it became but one Labour to give us the literal Meaning of the Original, and to defend our authorized Translation; which last he somewhere declares to have been the main End of these Commentaries^b.

BESIDES this, he had, probably, a Design to shew the Usefulness of Rabbinical Learning towards understanding the Old Testament; and particularly to give the Learned World such a Taste of Rabbi Tanchum, as might induce them to encourage the Publication of him, which the Professor had much at Heart, though he could never effect it.

BUT the predominant View of this great and good Man, in commenting on the Prophets, was to rescue many noble Predictions, concerning Christ and the Times of the Gospel, from that artful Confusion into which they had been brought by the Jewish Doctors, who seldom leave the Letter of Scripture, but when it serves the Cause of Christianity: In all such Cases, Grammar is no longer with them the Rule of Interpretation, but the Tradition of their Forefathers, set up at first out of mere Opposition to the Christian Religion, is their sole Guide. To encounter, therefore, with these, scarce any one was so well qualified, as Dr. Pocock, who had all their Oriental Learning, and knew their Writers better than themselves did. Here then was a glorious Field for one of his Attainments to display himself in. And was there nothing else to recommend his Commentaries, the vast Service done therein to the Argument for Christianity from Prophecy, will give them Immortality.

IN the End of his Preface to the Commentary on Micah, our Author informs us, that the Thing first proposed was, to have given the Meaning of the Text in brief Marginal Notes, but this was laid aside, lest the Method should be deemed too Magisterial: And, indeed, nothing has contributed to render Dr. Pocock's Commentaries less perfect, than his insuperable Modesty, which sometimes hindered him, in very material Points, from giving his Judgment upon differing Expositions. This, he apprehended, would be objected to his Performance; but at the same Time declares, He dared not do otherwise. The Generality of Readers, finding this now and then to be the Case, have taken up an Opinion, that Dr. Pocock was generally, if not universally, thus indeterminate: But how much they have wronged him herein, will be shewn hereafter, when we come to form a Judgment of his Commentaries at large.

THIS same Year also Dr. Pocock published his Commentary on Malachi, which, proceeding on the same Principles, and being directed to the same Ends with that on Micah, requires not a distinct Consideration. Something, however, must be said concerning the Appendix to this second Commentary, which seems to have been a Latin Sermon, or rather a Part of one preached before the University of Oxford, upon the Messiah of the Jews, whom they call Ben Joseph, of the Tribe of Ephraim: An Invention of theirs, long after our Saviour's Days, to answer such Predictions in the Old Testament, as will not agree with him, whom they call Messiah Ben David. In this Discourse, our Professor shews the Novelty and Absurdity of this Notion of a two-fold Messiah, and that Maimonides, one of their most learned Rabbins, seems to have been ashamed of it, never once mentioning the Name of Ben Joseph when he expounds the Prophecies concerning Messiah, but adapting them either to David, or the Messiah, who was to spring from him.

^b His Words are: To adjust that of our last deservedly approved Translation with the Original, I look on as my main Business. Comm. on Hof. Chap. v. Ver. 2. p. 218.

IT was some Allay to Dr. Pocock's Satisfaction, in having finished the above-mentioned Commentaries, that he had an Account of the Death of two Friends: One, and the Principal of them, was the learned Dr. Thomas Greaves, Brother to our Author's dear Friend, Mr. John Greaves, and often mentioned in this History; the other, Mr. Francis Vernon, of Christ-Church, between whom and Dr. Pocock many Letters passed, whilst the former resided at Paris. This unhappy Gentleman afterwards travelling into Persia, just before he entered Spahan, was hurt in a Rencounter, upon a very trifling Occasion, and died of his Wounds in that City, two Days after. Intelligence of this came in a Letter from Mr. Huntington, dated at Aleppo, June 1, 1677.

THE same learned and pious Gentleman writes again to our Author, July the 4th of the following Year, thanking him for the Present of his Commentaries on Micah and Malachi. He adds, that he got the Samaritan Chronological History from them with much ado, and hoped likewise for a Comment on their Law; of which Affair he had wrote at large to Dr. Marshal. He concludes with an Account of the dreadful Havock made at that Time in the Levant by the Plague: At Smyrna there died 400 in a Day, and some Places were said to be depopulated by it.

HENRY William Ludolph, Nephew to the famous Job Ludolph, Author of the Æthiopick History, then upon his Return from England to his Unkle in Germany, desires, by Letter, to carry what Commands Dr. Pocock had for that Country. Mr. Boyle had told him of the Correspondence they had at Oxford with the Samaritans, at Sichem: Of which he desires to carry some Account to his Unkle; and therefore prays an Answer to the following Quæries; Whether there was an Answer sent from Oxford? Of what Contents? Who managed the Correspondence? In what Language? By what Means it was conveyed, and if there came since a second Letter from the Samaritans? To all these he received satisfactory Answers, which encouraged the Unkle afterwards to address Letters to the same Sichemites, by a Portuguese Jew, that lived in their Neighbourhood, to which he received Answers, which he printed in the Year 1688, with a Latin Translation and Notes, adding thereto a Latin Version of the Letters from the same People to Oxford. Soon after the Arrival of the younger Ludolph at Frankfort, his Unkle wrote to Dr. Pocock a Letter of Thanks, for the Favours he had done his Nephew, during his late Residence in England: And taking this Opportunity, he desires some Arabick Transcripts from Oxford, relating to the Æthiopick History, which he [Job Ludolph] was then preparing, and begs an Explanation of some Passages in the Doctor's Abul-Farai, and his Notes thereupon, pertinent to the same Purpose. And lest this Letter should have miscarried, he sent another about a Month after, repeating the principal Matters contain'd in the former, and adding thereto, one more Request, viz. to have an Arabick Manuscript in the Bodleian Library, mentioned by Mr. Selden, in his Uxor Hebraica, transcribed and transmitted to him, for which, as well as the other Arabick Extracts, he would thankfully pay the Transcriber.

ABOUT this Time, Dr. Narcissus Marsh, first Fellow of Exeter-College, and afterwards Principal of Alban-Hall in Oxford, and an intimate Friend of our Author's, was preferred to be Provost of the College of Dublin, the same who became Bishop of Leighlin and Fernz, and afterwards successively Archbishop of Cashels, Dublin, and Armagh. He was himself eminently learned, and a great Encourager of Learning in others: After his Settlement at Dublin-College, he wrote to Dr. Pocock, who either wanted Leisure to write, or else a good Opportunity to send his Answer, till February in the Year 1672, at which Time, he expressed his great Want of Dr. Marsh's good Converse and Company. As to Literary News, Dr. Pocock writes to his Friend in the following Manner: 'I look not abroad among the new Books; I have not so much as seen Vossius's Tract of his Sibyls, and such others as are with it; but I am told, that he speaks therein Things that are derogatory to Rabbinical Learning (but that matters not much, as for other Things) and particularly (which is magis dolendum) to bring Disrespect and Contempt on the Hebrew Bible; and all authoritative, without good Proof or Reason: And I hear, that by some at Coffee-Meetings, it is cried up. It may be suspected, that the Intention is to bring it into Doubt, whether we have any such Thing, as a true Bible at all, which we may confide in, as God's Word. It is, I see, by some wished, that the Verity of the Original Text might be vindicated from such sceptical Arguments, by some of Learning and Vigour, such as yourself. However, I doubt not, but that, by God's Providence, as the Hebrew Text hath hitherto stood firm, so it will still stand on its own Bottom to wear out all Assaults against it, and be, what it always was, received as the undoubted Word of God, when all the Arguments and Objections against it are vanish'd into Smoke.'

I HAVE been the larger in this Transcript for Reasons, which will appear hereafter.

THE same Letter gives us Reason to believe, that Dr. Pocock had no sooner published his Commentaries on Micah and Malachi, but he turned his Thoughts upon that of Hosea, in which, at this Time, he appears to have made a considerable Progress. 'If you ask, adds he, what I am doing, I am now in the Press with the Conclusion of the fifth Chapter of Hosea; and, perhaps, the Beginning of the sixth must be joined with it, to make up the entire N 11 in the second Alphabet; so that what is already done, is longer than those other

' other Commentaries of Micah and Malachi together, and, perhaps, is too long. I must be forced for a while to make a Pause, and hope, if God give Life and Leave, to go over the other Chapters in a shorter Way.' But the Doctor found himself in the End mistaken: For the remaining Chapters take up as much Room, in Proportion, as the five first did.

To this Letter, Dr. Marsh wrote an Answer, dated April 17, 1680; in which he complains of the Want of new Books, occasioned by the Ignorance and Obstinacy of the Dublin Booksellers. As to Dr. Pocock's Complaints against Isaac Vossius, and his Abettors, I am very much grieved, replies Dr. Marsh, at what you say concerning some Mens Design to invalidate the Authority of the Hebrew Text, and thereby of all the Old Testament. And certainly, it would not be hard to make them sensible of their Error (if not Ignorance therein) and retract: But such a Work will never be undertaken by any Man of ordinary Modesty, whilst you live, if you do it not yourself: And certainly, were it not for the other Work, wherein you are engag'd, you would find it a hard Matter to resist all the Importunity, that would be made use of to that Purpose.' After this, he proposes a Critical Exposition of his own upon James v. 12. desiring our Author's Opinion about it: He also puts a Querie to him, what might be the Ground of the Rabbins (Ben Gersom especially) supposing Phinebas to be Elias.

ON the 29th of this same Month, Dr. Marsh writes again to our Professor, chiefly on the same Subject, but more largely, than in the former: And as I trust the Reader will not be displeased to have the sedate Thoughts of so great a Man, on a Subject of great Importance, I will lay the Whole of it here before him.

' I FIND, Dr. Vossius's last, as well as former Books, have not done much Good (I wish they have not done the contrary) here: We have not many, that can judge of the Original; but I hope to breed up good Store that Way, since we have an Hebrew Professor's Place lately settled on the College, to which Lecture I make all the Bachelors of Arts attend, and be examined thrice every Week, and they are likewise to be publicly examined in Hebrew, before they can take their Degree of Master in Arts, which I sometimes do myself. I say, I think, we have not many in the whole Kingdom, that can judge of the Original Hebrew; and therefore, whatsoever Dr. Vossius says, because his Name is Vossius, ipse dixit, is enough to make it be believed; which seems to me the more insufferable, because they cannot, or else will not make any Distinction between Gerard and Isaac Vossius, nor consider, which Way a Man's Talent lies, and whether he deals in a Subject, which he can master, or in one that masters him: If they would do but thus much, I believe, ipse dixit, would quickly stand for nothing, and that Isaac would not long pride himself with the Plumes, wherewith Gerard's Fame has adorned him. Sir, I make the same Wishes and Prayers with you, and have the self-same Hope, that God will raise up some able Man to vindicate (I may say) his own Cause: But I must add, that all Mens Eyes are fixt upon you; and I dare say, none will have the Confidence to think of putting Pen to Paper on such a Design, whilst you live.'

To both these Letters, the Professor made Answer, the first of the following September, having then just returned to Oxford, after an Absence of some Weeks, at his Son-in-Law Emes's, in Surrey. To Dr. Marsh's Rabbinical Queries he replies very particularly; but as to his Exposition of James v. 12. he only says, that it seems very ingenious, but that he dare not interpose his Judgment concerning it. He greatly approves, both in this and his next Letter, of Dr. Marsh's Designs for promoting Religion and Learning in Ireland; but takes not the least Notice in either, of his Intimation, that the World expected from him an Answer to Vossius de Sibyllis, unless he intended, as a tacit Excuse from that Service, what he says of the slow Progress he made in commenting on Hosea, owing to what he calls the Laziness of his Age, and other Inabilities.

ON the 24th of May, 1681, Mr. Huntington, from Aleppo, acquaints Dr. Pocock, that he had been in Egypt, where he had in vain searched after Rabbi Tanchum's Pieces. Abu-Walid's Dictionary he had met with, under his own Hand, as was pretended, which was transcribing; as also a Book of the Karaim Jews, which he hoped to receive from Cairo. It should seem, that our Professor, in his last Letter to Mr. Huntington, had given an Account to him of Vossius de Sibyllis; concerning which, in the Conclusion of the Letter before us, he answers thus:

' I HAVE not seen Vossius de Sibyllis; but to decry the Hebrew Text has long been his Design and Practice: And it is a great while since Hulsus and Horn have taken Notice of it; but I am no Judge of the Controversy. Whilst Men speak and fight too not for Truth, but Victory, we may well expect heterodox Opinions and seditious Actions.'

AFTER what has been said of Dr. Pocock's and his Friends Indignation against the above-mentioned Piece of Isaac Vossius, and the Expectation of Mankind, that the Professor, being the first Man in the World for Knowledge in these Matters, would appear an Advocate for the Hebrew Text, against the confident Assaults of that Writer, it may seem wonderful, that he neither undertook the Service, nor excused himself to his Friends, who modestly incited him thereto, but at the same Time earnestly wished to see him engaged in the Controversy:

But

But for his Conduct in both these Respects, many Reasons may be assigned. As to his not entering avowedly into this Dispute, his natural Aversion to Polemick Writing, had there been no other Hindrance, would alone account for it: And when to this we add his great Age, (being then not more than three Years short of Eighty) it will hardly be deemed a Wonder, that he, who in his Youth and Vigour had always avoided Controversy, should not chuse to begin such troublesome Work in his old Age. His close Attention to the Commentary on Hosea might be urged, as a third Impediment to an Ingagement of this Kind: He had then but half finished that Design, and his Time of Life admonished him to avoid every Interruption thereto. What he had hitherto done in it cost him three or four Years, and the usual Course of Nature forbid him to hope for more than so many to come: Common Prudence, therefore, would restrain a Man, under all these Circumstances, from digressing into new Employment. Besides this, I am of Opinion, that if none of these Reasons had stood in Dr. Pocock's Way, there were Discouragements arising from the Person, he must have opposed, and the Nature of the Cause he was to defend, which would have deterr'd him from being directly concerned therein. Isaac Vossius, though very learned in his Way, was a Man of strong Passions, and not over-patient of Contradiction. Could, therefore, Dr. Pocock have prevailed on himself to debate publicly a Point of great Importance, both to Religion and Learning, with a cool and candid Adversary, he knew himself too well, to enter the Lists, on any Occasion, against one of a different Disposition. Besides, the Warmth and Honesty of his grateful Mind would at any Time have made him loth to put on the unfriendly Appearance of a declared Adversary to the Son of his old and infinitely esteemed Patron, Gerard Vossius; for whose Sake he preserved a great Regard to his Son Isaac, though greatly disapproving many of his Sentiments: Inasmuch, that when Dr. Pocock's eldest Son visited Leyden, he had his Father's express Commands to wait on Dr. Vossius there, as we have it under his own Hand, in a Letter to Mr. Smith. Lastly, the Controversy itself, through the Prejudices and Passions of Men, on both Sides, became of so delicate a Nature, that it was difficult even for a Man of Judgment and Temper to enter into it, without displeasing all Parties. On the one Hand, the Men of Vossius's Sentiments could be satisfied with nothing short of giving up the Hebrew Text, as corrupt, and setting up the Septuagint Translation, as the only pure Canon of the Old Testament Scripture; which, it appears, Dr. Pocock could by no Means approve of, having declared against it, as an Hypothesis, that would destroy the Certainty of the Jewish Scriptures. On the other Hand, the Partisans for the Hebrew Verity were not to be satisfied with a Defence of the Hebrew Text, in a reasonable Sort, as to all its Essentials: To please them, even the Accents in the Masoretick Text must be insisted on, as of Divine Appointment, and coeval with the Text itself; whilst the Greek of the LXX was to have no Mercy nor Quarter, but to be deemed a Translation originally bad, and, by frequent Transcribing, become so corrupted, as to be of no Certainty nor Use. But our Author was not disposed to give into either of these Points; he rightly judged it, therefore, most expedient not directly to engage in a Dispute, wherein, after infinite Disquiet to himself, he found no Way to please either Side; and yet, as we shall find anon, he took a Course to apprise the World of his Sentiments in the main Parts of this Controversy, and to convince Vossius and his Adherents, if they were not hardened against all Conviction, that the Hebrew Text was fairly defensible, and not at so great a Distance from their favourite Greek Translation, as they were wont to imagine. In order thereto, in his Commentaries on Hosea and Joel, he entered more largely and more frequently into the Discussion of the seeming Differences between the Hebrew Text and the Septuagint Translation, than he had done in his two former Commentaries, reconciling them, without Prejudice done to either. Happy had it been for the Truth, if others, who opposed the Extravagancies of Vossius, had observed the same Decorum and Judgment with our Author; if, like him, they had defended the Masoretick Text, without giving up the LXX Version: Particularly Father Simon^c, who, whether from secret Scepticism, or a Design of reducing us to a Necessity of admitting the Authority of his Church, as the Basis of revealed Religion, made free with all the Originals of the Bible in their Turn, the authorized Latin Version not excepted, and opposed the Translation of the Seventy, without defending the Hebrew Text from any other, save wilful Corruption. Among others, who have given our Professor his just Praises, for conciliating the Hebrew and the Septuagint, in his Porta Mosis and his Commentaries, I must have Leave to make particular Mention of the very learned Dr. Lee, in his admirable Prolegomena to that Tome of Dr. Grabe's Septuagint, which contains the Historical Books, Chapter the first. There, proceeding upon the moderate Sentiments of Bishop Walton, Bishop Pearson, and Dr. Pocock, he has laid down Rules, by the due Observance of which, all Controversies between the Zealots for Hebrew Verity, on the one Hand, and the Septuagint Version on the other, may be happily extinguished, and those sacred Treasures may be rendered each beneficial to the other, and to the Cause of Christianity in general.

IN July this Year, 1681, Dr. Pocock, in a Letter to Dr. Marsh, acknowledges the Receipt of his Letter and Book of Logick; then published by him, continuing to complain of the the slow Progress of his Commentary on Hosea, and of its Prolixity, neither of which, as Things stood with him, would admit of a Remedy.

IN October following, Andreas Arnoldus, a German, then in London, writes to our Professor a particular Account of a Work printed at Vienna, the Year before, by Francis a Mesnien Meninski, Knight of the Holy Sepulchre at Jerusalem, Counsellor, and first Interpreter to his Imperial Majesty: It was partly a Lexicon of the Turkish, Arabick, and Persick Languages, and partly Grammars to all those Tongues.

THE next Year Mr. Huntington returned from Aleppo, and gave Dr. Pocock the good News of his safe Arrival at Paris, in a Letter dated thence, June the 27th, where he had the Pleasure to meet two old Friends, Sir Richard Graham, then created Lord Preston, and Embassador at the French Court from the King of England, and Mr. Wigan, his Lordship's Chaplain, a very good, as well as a very learned Man. He recounts, with a truly Christian Concern, the Persecution then begun against the Protestants of that Country, and adds, that he foresaw some untoward Resolutions would be taken about them, from an Agreement made among the Bishops, to summon all the Ministers in their several Dioceses, and exact an Account of them, for their refusing the Catholick Assemblies; though by several Edicts they have been exempted from all Episcopal Visitations and Jurisdiction.

IN this same Month Dr. George Hooper, formerly mentioned, wrote to the Professor on the following Occasion: He had formed some learned and curious Conjectures, concerning the Blessing of the Patriarchs, in the 49th Chapter of Genesis; wherein chiefly, by the Help of the Arabick Tongue, he discovered the Blessing bestowed on each Patriarch, to be couched in his Name; desirous he was to have Dr. Pocock's Judgment on this Performance, which, according to his usual Modesty, he himself held in small Esteem: Nor did he prevail on himself to have it published, till a little before his Death, which happened in the Year 1727, forty-five Years after the Date of this Letter; then he put it into the Hands of the Reverend and Learned Mr. Hunt, now the worthy Professor of Arabick in the University of Oxford, who, according to the Bishop's Directions, printed it with a Preface and Notes, collected out of the Arabick Manuscripts in the Bodleian Library. The whole Impression consisted but of 100 Copies, designed chiefly for Friends, and the Expence of it was defrayed by Mrs. Prowse, the Bishop's Daughter. I shall only add, that, in this Letter, Dr. Hooper owns the Professor's Favour to him, whilst he was learning the Arabick Tongue, and modestly takes Shame to himself, for not having made a suitable Proficiency therein: A Particular, which strengthens the Probability of my former Conjecture, that this was the anonymous young Man, whom Bishop Morley recommended to Dr. Pocock's Direction, in the Study of the Oriental Languages.

DR. Loftus, of Ireland, wrote to our Professor, April 19, 1683, acquainting him, that he had lately met with a panegyric Oration upon Abul-Pharaji (whose History of the Dynasties Dr. Pocock had published twenty Years before) written by Dioscorus, Bishop of Gakarto, and a Contemporary of his, which clears him from the Imputation of Apostasy; that in this Panegyrick was recited a Catalogue of Abul-Pharaji's Works, which he sends inclosed. He adds, that he was now translating this Panegyrick, with an Intent to publish it.

IN the Month following, Mr. Strype (since well known to the World, by having written the Lives of the four first Protestant Archbishops, and the Annals of the twelve first Years of Queen Elizabeth's Reign) acquaints Dr. Pocock by Letter, with the Design of reprinting Dr. Lightfoot's English Works in one Volume, in Folio; and that they waited only for some Manuscript Pieces and Letters of his, which were to be joined therewith, beseeching him, if any such were in his Hands, to communicate them to him.

ABOUT this Time Dr. Huntington, through the Recommendation of Bishop Fell to the Duke of Ormond, was preferred to the Provostship of Dublin-College, which was become vacant by Dr. Marlb's Promotion to the See of Leighlin and Ferns: And from thence, on the 29th of May, in the next Year, he answered a Letter of Dr. Pocock's, dated the 13th of the foregoing February. He informs his old and dear Friend, that P. Agathangelo, his Correspondent at Bassora, had purchased for him, the two Books of the Sabians or Mendæans; one of which, according to the fabulous Tradition of that Country, was given by God to Adam; the other, to John the Son of Zechariah; that there was a third paid for, but not yet received, which was given to the Angels 33000 Years before the Creation of Adam. 'But,' adds Dr. Huntington, to what Purpose am I at all this Expence, if none of you will make out the Language? Therefore, pray, Doctor, think of it once again; for I will send Dr. Piques's Papers to you once more, because I know not a likelier Oedipus to unriddle this Sphinx.' This Dr. Piques was a learned Sorbonist, who, the Year before, had wrote a long Letter to Dr. Huntington upon the Subject of the Sabian or Mendæan Language, and his Conjectures about it.

^d In two of F. Agathangelo's Letters to Dr. Huntington, we have the following Account of these Sabians or Mendæans: That they unjustly assume to themselves the Name of Christian, deserving rather to be esteemed a Tribe of uncircumcised Jews; that if ever the equivocal Denomination of Christian belonged to them, on the Account

JANUARY the 3d, of this same Year, Dr. John Moore, then Chaplain to Lord Chancellor Nottingham, and afterwards successively Bishop of Norwich and Ely, desired, by Letter, of Dr. Pocock, the Resolution of a Question (which, he says, he must hope for from him, or from No-body) viz. Whether there be more Evidence, than the Affirmation of the Arabian in Dr. Wallis's Arithmetick, by Dr. Pocock translated, that the Ægyptian OEba, which is believed to be the Epba, was the sixth Part of the Egyptian Ardab, which was the Cube of their Cubit?

Dr. Loftus, of Dublin, in September, 1685, having compared the Variations of Dr. Huntington's Syriack Abul-Pharaji from Dr. Pocock's Arabick, gave him some Particulars of them, in a Letter, and at the same Time acquaints him, that he had lately met with that Arabick Writer's Ecclesiastical History, which he had translated, and put to the Press in Dublin.

THIS Year also was made publick Dr. Pocock's large and laborious Commentary on the Prophecy of Hosea, which he dedicated to his old Friend Bishop Fell, being, as he tells him in the Epistle dedicatory, first committed to the Press by his Lordship's Encouragement. He prefixed likewise a Preface to this Commentary, the chief Design whereof was to account for and excuse the extraordinary Length of it: Certain it is, that no one Thing contributed so much to swell the Work, as the Defence therein made, for the Purity of the Hebrew Text, against the Objections raised from the Disagreement of the Greek or Septuagint, the Vulgar Latin, and the Chaldee Paraphrase, therewith. He had in the former Commentaries, as well as in this on Hosea, left no particular Passage unexplained; he had taken in every Help for literal Exposition from Jewish and Christian Commentators and Grammarians; he had quoted Translations, as well ancient as modern; but he had not therein so frequently, and with such set Purpose, considered the Differences between the Chaldee, the Vulgar Latin, and more especially between the Septuagint and the Hebrew Text. The late repeated Attempts of Isaac Vossius, to depreciate, or rather to decry that venerable Original, as well as those of Capellus, now made it necessary to be large and special in guarding the Masoretick Text from the Charge of various Readings, which those learned Men were ready and glad to suggest, upon every seeming Difference between it and the ancient Translations and Paraphrases. Some may think our Author went too far, in supposing, that the Hebrew Text was always, and in every Particular, read as it is at present; but if he err'd in this, he certainly err'd on the right Side, it being safer to suppose the Original Hebrew utterly uncorrupt, than to call its Purity in Question so oft as Capellus and Vossius did. Besides, the Obstinacy and Unreasonableness of Gainfayers often drive even wise and good Men into too great Lengths of Opposition, and the ill Use that is made of just Concessions, when we have to do with contentious Adversaries, makes it seem advisable to forbear them, and to put the Proof of some Things upon them, which we should never dispute with more candid and better-minded Opponents. To this we may add, that the Knowledge of Biblical Hebrew being that Part of Literature, in which Dr. Pocock chiefly excelled, and in which he most delighted, it is the less to be wondered at, if he was prejudiced in Favour of it, especially, considering likewise, that Hebrew Verity was the prevailing Opinion of the Times, in which he was educated, and was then thought by most Protestants, essential to the Interests of the Reformation. But after all, perhaps he needs no Apology in this Respect. The great Success of his Attempts to reconcile the Hebrew and the Septuagint Version, without Recourse to the Supposition of various Readings in the Original Text, manifest in the Notes on the Porta Moysis, and his Commentaries, especially the two last, would make one hope, that no seeming Difference between those venerable Books would have been too hard for him and his conciliatory Scheme, had he been at Leisure to pursue it thro' the whole Old Testament.

It has been Matter of great Pleasure to me, and, I doubt not, to others also, to observe, that Dr. Pocock's Zeal for the Purity of the present Hebrew Text, even when most stirr'd by the intemperate Opposition of Isaac Vossius, never provoked him to depreciate the Septuagint, to which that learned Man showed so violent a Partiality. He well knew the Regard that was on many Accounts due to that famous Version: Its great Antiquity, and the Nearness of its Authors to the Times when Hebrew was a living Language, should, at least, screen it from hasty and contemptuous Censure. But above all, the Use made of it in the Scriptures of the New Testament, and the first Ages of the Church, ought to make every learned Christian treat it with Decency, if not with Reverence. Had it been originally so vicious a Translation, as some Writers, even in cool Blood, have delighted to call it, how came it to pass, that the Apostles and Evangelists so often argue for the Connection of the Gospel

count of some Christian Symbols and Observances, they are now degenerated from all Appearance of Christianity. Their principal Books are three: The first they call Sahaf Adam, which our first Father Adam, according to them, received immediately from God; the second, Sahaf Hieahie, i. e. the Son of Zechariah, which he received of God; the third they call Divan, which exceeds the others much in Bulk, but is equally esteemed by the Sect. They are jealous of these Books getting into other Hands, and, tho' extremely covetous, are hardly prevailed on to have them transcribed, or to part with them for Money, unless driven thereto by the most pressing Want. They have no written Grammar, and their Presbyters teach the Knowledge of these Books by Word of Mouth only: Their Idiom differs not much from the Hebrew and the Syriack. The Remains of this Sect are found at or near Bassora, a populous and trading Port, at the Mouth of the Euphrates, in the Persian Gulf. See Huntington's Ep. p. 82, 83, &c.

with the Old Testament, as it stands in the Septuagint Version. Jerom's Salvo, that the Version of the LXX, with all its Faults, was therefore used, because it was already in the Hands of the Hellenistick Jews, though it has been a thousand Times urged in Disputes of this Kind, is far from satisfying this important Quarry: For St. Matthew, in his Gospel, without Regard to the Circumstances of the Hellenists, oft makes a Greek Translation of his own, and so, doubtless, would all the other Sacred Penmen have done, if the Greek of the LXX had been so corrupt, as some pretend. How easy had it been, when the Gift of Tongues was so common in the Church, for one or more inspired Persons to have drawn up a new Version for the Use of such, as did not understand the original Language of the Old Testament, which was the Case of the Generality of Christians, both in the Apostolical and succeeding Ages, and not to have left an important Part of the Scripture Canon to them in so bad a Condition, as the Greek of the LXX is by some represented to be. They had little to fear from the Fondness of the Hellenist Jews, for their accustomed Version, it being absurd to suppose, that the same Authority which reconciled them to the Abrogation of the Law, would be insufficient to recommend a new Version of it. In a Word, the seeming Differences between the Hebrew Text, and the Translation we are speaking of, are scarce wider any where, than in some Passages cited thence in the New Testament; which should incline us to be sparing of our Censures, on Account of such Variations, and to think the LXX, at least in general, a sound and useful Version. For these and such like Reasons, Dr. Pocock laboured, in his two latter Commentaries, to reconcile the Hebrew Text with that anciently-received Translation, as the most effectual Means to vindicate the Purity of the former, and to remove the dangerous Prejudices, that too many had entertained against the latter. The Principles, on which he proceeded in this Attempt, were of incontestable Truth in themselves, and applied by him with great Learning and Judgment; and they were chiefly these three: First, That the present LXX Translation is in many Places corrupted: 2dly, That the Authors of that Version did not always design it to be literal: 3dly, That they often followed such Acceptations of Hebrew Words, as are now no longer known, and are irretrievable, without the Help of the Arabick and Syriack Tongues, between which and the Hebrew there is a manifest Affinity. Happy would it have been for the Christian and Learned World, if Dr. Pocock had been at Leisure to execute this conciliatory Scheme on the other Parts of the Old Testament. Scarce any one ever was, or perhaps ever will be, so compleatly qualified for the Work, as he was: But whosoever shall undertake, and in good Measure succeed therein, will deserve the Thanks and Blessings of all sober and intelligent Men.

BUT to return from this long Digression: No sooner was our Author's Commentary on Hosea seen by his Friends, but he received their most ample Thanks and Encomiums. Two Letters more especially, from Ireland, were filled with Commendations of the Performance; the first came from Dr. Huntington, who, after acquainting Dr. Pocock, that he had received his learned Commentary on Hosea, and delivered Presents of the same to the Bishop of Ferns and Leighlin, and Dr. Loftus, writes thus: 'Each Man speaks for himself, but none of us so much as it deserves; no, not the Doctor himself, [Dr. Loftus] tho' he should employ all his Tongues (and I think they talk of twenty) in its Commendation.' In a Postscript to his Letter, Dr. Huntington writes thus: 'I hear nothing of your Son's Arabick History, which you once told me he had put into the Press, with his Version of the same. If it be confined there, let me know what will bring it forth into the open Air, and you shall have the Money, as soon as you let me know the Sum.' This Performance of Mr. Edward Pocock, our Author's eldest Son, was unfinished at the Press, when his Father died; and was withdrawn thence by him, some little Time after, upon a Disgust at his being disappointed of succeeding his Father in the Hebrew Professorship: The Copy, as much of it as was then printed, and the Manuscript History, is now in the Hands of Mr. Pocock's Son, the present Rector of Minall in Wiltshire. Dr. Loftus in fuller Terms expresses his Gratitude for the Present of what he calls Dr. Pocock's most learned and elaborate Commentary on the difficult Prophecy of Hosea; he adds as follows: 'Never did Criticism more triumph in its Grandeur and Utility, than in your Exposition of that Prophecy, which you handle in so accurate a Manner, as to avoid the proverbial Censure on vulgar Commentators, who, when they come to an hard Place, skip it over, or by too largely handling the Text, become tedious; whereas you, omitting nothing that is requisite, nor enlarging upon any Thing, so as to be burdensome, are not to be taxed with either of the Extreams: For there seems to be nothing in that Prophecy, which you do not give very good Account of, nor is there any Thing in the Account you give of it, but what is excellently profitable, and no Way tedious; for after your Examination of all various Opinions touching each Part of that Prophecy, you conclude with your own, in a perfect Certainty, or in the greatest Probability, seldom omitting a Recital of the Opinions of other great Authors; or your Judgment of them, to the pleary Satisfaction of all those, who are Masters in Criticism.' I have transcribed thus much from Dr. Loftus, to let the World see, what so great a Master of Languages and Sacred Philology thought of the Commentary on Hosea, and how little Room there is for the Censure, which some have passed on it, that the Author seldom gives us his own Judgment, after reciting the various Opinions of other Expositors; whereas, I think, I may safely pronounce, that to one Instance of this Kind, throughout his Commentary, there are twenty of the contrary, viz. in which he either absolutely gives his own Judgment; or at least manifestly inclines to one Exposition or Interpretation, rather than another.

IN June of the following Year, Mr. Samuel Thomas, from Chard, writes his Thanks to Dr. Pocock for his Present of the Commentary on Hosea, and at the same Time proposes a new Translation of Jer. xxiii. 6, the famous Passage on which the Notion of imputed Righteousness, is chiefly founded by those, who espouse it: Instead of his Name shall be called the Lord our Righteousness, Mr. Thomas would have it rendered, And this is the Name, which the Lord shall call him, our Righteousness: For which Change he there also gives his Reason.

FROM this Time forward, Dr. Pocock's Correspondence grew more contracted, which was owing to several Causes; one and the principal was, that Writing became exceeding troublesome to him, through a Palsy in his Hand, which drinking of Coffee, to which he had used himself ever since his Residence in the East, first brought upon him, and which increased, as he advanced more in Years: This made his Friends sparing in their Letters, because they knew his Civility was such, as would not suffer him to be behind Hand with his learned Correspondents, whatever Pain or Trouble it cost him to answer their Queries. Another Cause was, the Troubles which soon followed in Ireland, the Hurry of the Revolution at home, with the War that broke out abroad in Consequence of it; all which brought on an Interruption of Correspondence between Dr. Pocock and his Friends in Ireland, and in foreign Parts. Some Letters however passed, between the present Time, and that of our Author's Death, the most considerable of which are as follows.

IN the Year 1687, Dr. Pocock wrote to his old Friend the Provost of Dublin, Dr. Huntington, and from this Letter it appears, that he had begun his Comment on Joel, and that he then enjoyed a good Measure of Health.

IN the following January, 1687, Dr. Whitby, then engaged in the Popish Controversy, consulted the Professor upon the Priests and Judges spoken of in Deuteronomy, chap. xvii. who were to determine hard Controversies, and to whose Judgment the People were to stand under Pain of Death, putting several Questions to him thereupon; all which were learnedly answered by our Author.

IN April the same Year, John Betts, of Lime-street in London, desired of Dr. Pocock the Solution of a Difficulty from Avenzoar, as he is cited by Shenkus, in his Collections de Febribus.

FROM this Time to the 14th of October, 1690, we see no Traces of that Correspondence, which had now for 60 Years been held between our Author and his learned Friends, both at home and abroad; and the last we have of this Sort was one of the Date above-mentioned, from Dr. Dudley Loftus, of Dublin. In this Letter, that learned and noble Person, on Occasion of Sixtus Senensis's saying in his Bibliotheca, that the whole last Chapter of St. Mark was an Addition to the Gospel, shows how the Armenian Copy concluded that Gospel, which took in the last Chapter to the End of the 8th Verse, and he affirms, that by the best Search he could make, no more of that Chapter was ever wanting in any Copy, than from the 8th Verse exclusive. He further acquaints our Author, how he had spent his Time, during their late Troubles in Ireland, viz. in translating eight Syriack Liturgies, each of which they call Anaphora, into Latin. He adds, that he had also translated the Æthiopick Liturgy into Latin, though already translated by a Romanist, that he might shew what abominable Falsities those of that Religion endeavour to impose upon this ignorant World: Besides these, he had translated the ancient Form of Prayer, used in the primitive Church, for the Cure of Diseases; which, though printed at Rome, in the Time of Pope Paul the Third, had not hitherto been translated. All these he intended to print shortly, with an Elucidary upon them.

MUCH about the same Time, if I conjecture right, Eusebius Renaudot entertained a Design not much unlike this, which some Years after he executed, of publishing a Collection of all the Oriental Liturgies, as also a distinct Work, De Fide, Moribus & Institutis Orientalium Christianorum: Of this Intention of his, Renaudot informed Dr. Pocock, in a Letter to him without a Date, but as appears from some Circumstances in it, not long before his Death. In this Epistle the Writer professes a very high Esteem for our Author, desires the Liberty of consulting him in all the Doubts, that should occur in preparing the Works above-mentioned, and promises, in Return for this Favour, to make a publick Acknowledgment of it, and to preserve a perpetual Memory of the Obligation. It is highly probable, that Death prevented Dr. Pocock from giving any Assistance to Renaudot in these Designs; but I am sorry to say, that the Treatment that learned Person has given to the Memory of our Author has not been consistent with the Expressions of Respect for him, with which this Letter abounds. For when he came to publish his Collection of Eastern Liturgies, forgetting his own Professions, and the Duty of a Gentleman, a Scholar, and, above all, of a Christian, he goes out of his Way, in the End of his Preface, to reproach him with a Mistake, which, perhaps, was the only one which could be fastned upon his Writings, though Renaudot, as above-mentioned, had, without good Grounds, charged him with another; but the Abbot's Zeal against Protestants testants got the better of his Candour, and though he could treat the Learned amongst them with Civility in a private Way, it was not, as it should seem, adviseable to observe such Measures with them in the Eye of the World.

THE next Year, 1691, Dr. Poccock published his Commentary on the Prophecy of Joel, to which, besides the Dedication to the then Bishop of Exeter, Sir Jonathan Trelawney, he prefixed a Preface, the chief Design of which was, to give an Account of the Draught or Scheme of the Area of the Temple, and the different Parts thereof, which he had procured to be engraven, and which immediately follows the Preface: It was taken from an ancient MS. of Maimonides, as old as that Rabbi's own Times.

THE Method of this Commentary being the same with that on Hosea, I have no Occasion to speak particularly to it. One Thing more it may be proper to observe, that tho' the chief Intention of our Author, in these Commentaries, was to assert the Purity of the Hebrew Text, and the Justness of our authorized English Translation, yet he was not inflexibly rigid in either of these Points: With Respect to the former, though he seems in general unwilling to admit that, at the Time when the Seventy made their Version, there were various Readings in the Hebrew Text, yet he sometimes allows it to be a probable, though not a necessary Supposition. And I am much mistaken, if the Places referred to in the Notes* will not justify this Assertion. As to the latter, the Justness of our authorized English Translation, his good Opinion of it, as representing the literal Sense of the Original Text, does not always hinder him from owning, that better Renditions might have been found. The References at the Bottom will direct the Reader to two Places,† where such Concessions are to be met with; and probably there are more, which have escaped my Observation.

WHETHER Dr. Poccock intended a Commentary on any other of the lesser Prophets, I cannot learn; but if he did, Death prevented him, which happened on the 10th of September in this Year. A gradual Decrease of Strength and bodily Vigour, for some Time before, were sure Indications of a Dissolution; but his Parts continued sound, and his Memory but little impaired, to the very last. His only Distemper was great old Age, which hindered him not, even the Night before he died, from praying with his Family, as his Custom had always been, in the excellent Forms of our Church.

THUS died this most pious, learned, and venerable Man, when he wanted but two Months of completing the 87th Year of his Age, after having been for many Years confessedly the first Person in Europe for Eastern Learning, and not less remarkable for Humanity and Modesty, than for Profoundness of Erudition. How it came to pass, that Merit so great and so conspicuous met with no higher Rewards, has already in Part been accounted for. Dr. Poccock was a Stranger to those Arts, by which the Ambitious wind themselves into the Affections of Princes and Ministers of State, chusing no other Way to be known to the World, but by being useful and exemplary in his Profession; and it is seldom found, that Merit and Modesty are forced out of their Retirements into Dignities and Distinction. Indeed, the Preferments he died possessed of, either fell to him by Course of Seniority, or were procured for him, without his Seeking, by the Interest of Friends; nor was he otherwise instrumental in his own Advancement, than by deserving it.

As to Dr. Poccock's Person, he was of a middle Stature, or rather tall and slender; his Hair was inclining to black, so were his Eyes; he was of a fresh Complexion, had a lively and cheerful Look, a sound and healthy Constitution.

IN his ordinary Conversation, he was free, open, and affable, retaining, even to the last, the Briskness and Facetiousness of Youth: He was extremely civil to all, who applied for Directions in the Study of those Languages wherein he excelled, and his courteous Reception of Foreigners, who in great Numbers resorted to him, spread the Fame of his Humanity, as well as Learning, throughout Europe. His Temper was naturally modest, humble, and sincere, abhorrent of every Thing that had the Appearance of Hypocrisy and Falsehood; but without the least Mixture of Sourness or Morosity; being very observant of all common Duties of Civility, such as returning Visits, answering Letters, and the like.

As for his intellectual Abilities and Acquirements, he was of a quick Apprehension, great Memory, and unwearied Industry; his Skill in the Sciences, if we may believe his Contemporaries, was not inconsiderable, but his Knowledge of Languages was vastly extensive, and in many of them was more accurate than any could boast of, who lived before, in, or since his Times. He was profoundly skilled in the Hebrew, Arabick, and Syriack Tongues, was well acquainted with the Persick, Samaritan, Æthiopic, Coptick, and Turkish; besides which, he understood Italian, and something of Spanish. In Greek and Latin his Friends say he was critically conversant, and his Writings and Letters bear Testimony to his Abilities in both. His Style, in English, was clear and expressive, but was never cultivated, even from his Youth; whereas, in Latin he wrote not only with Propriety and Perspicuity, but also with a good Degree of Elegance: The Reason of which Difference probably was, that he read but few English Books in his Youth, and wrote nothing in that Language for the Publick, till he was far advanced in Years.

BUT the most meritorious Part of this great Man's Character is still behind, that which concerns his moral and religious Endowments; and surely he was one of the most uniform and steady Exemplars of Christian Perfection, that has blessed these latter Ages.

ALL his Words and Actions carried in them a deep and unfeigned Sense of Religion and true Piety; God was the Beginning and the End of his Studies and Undertakings; to his Glory they were devoted, and professedly finished by his Help, as appears by Expressions, sometimes in Arabick and Hebrew, and at other Times in English, which we find not only in his printed Works, but also in his Note-Books, and Writings of any Account.

IN the publick Duties of Religion he was very punctual; all the Time he resided at Christ-Church, which was more than thirty Years, he was seldom absent from Cathedral Prayers, oft frequenting them, when he was not thought well enough to go abroad upon any other Occasion.

IN his pastoral Capacity, so long as he resided constantly at Childrey, he shewed the greatest Diligence and Faithfulness, preaching twice every Lord's Day, and catechizing likewise, when the Length of Days would permit him. Nor was he less exact in discharging the private Duties of his Function, such as visiting sick and ancient People, and the like; and during that Part of his Life in which his Attendance upon his Professorships and canonical Residence called him to Oxford for the greatest Part of the Year, he took a most conscientious Care to supply his Absence by an able Curate, of whom he strictly required the same laborious Course of Duty, and for his Encouragement, allowed him fifty Pounds per Annum, besides Surplice Fees, all which amounted to more than a fourth Part of the then Value of that Rectory.

As a Member and a Minister of the Church of England, though with all due Charity to those, who, on the Score of Conscience, dissented from her, he steadily conformed to her Appointments, highly revered and approved every Part of her Constitution. In subscribing to her Articles his Hand and his Heart went together, being an Enemy to all Prevarication, however coloured or palliated by subtle Distinctions. He seemed from his Youth to have imbibed, among other eminent Divines of those Times, an Opinion of the Illegality of Usury, or at least to have entertained Scruples about its Lawfulness; but this appeared rather from his constant Practice of lending Money freely, than from any open Avowal of his Sentiments in that Point: His Friends could never get from him his Reasons against Usury, and the Cause of his Reservedness was, that the Thing being allowed by our Laws, and not disapproved by the Church, he would disturb neither by his private Opinion. How many uncharitable Disputes would be prevented, if every Christian was endued with this laudable Moderation! But so long as it is fashionable to have no Concern for the Peace of the Church, nor Reverence for Authority, Controversies about Religion will encrease, till, without some gracious Interposition of Providence, they eat out the Vitals of it.

IT would be endless to enumerate all the Virtues of this excellent Man, or to be particular about the Constancy and Frequency of his Devotion, with his Family, and in his Closet; his strict Manner of observing publick Fasts, his undissembled Grief at hearing God's Name profaned, or the Lord's Day unhallowed, or the Recital of any gross Immorality: But above all, his Charity under each Branch of it, giving and forgiving, was so exemplary, that a more special Mention must be made of it.

THE Largeness of a Family was, in his Judgment, no Excuse for scanty Alms-giving: But besides the Poor, whom he daily relieved at his Door, he gave to others quarterly Allowances. His charitable Disposition was so notorious, and brought such Numbers of necessitous Objects to him, that Dean Fell, himself a most munificent Person, used complainingly to tell Dr. Pocock, that he drew all the Poor of Oxford into the College.

A NOBLE Instance of his Readiness to forgive Injuries was his Behaviour to those Parishioners of his, who in the Usurpation had laboured to have him ejected and starved; for he treated them with his accustomed Humanity, did their Families particular Kindnesses, and to keep them as much concealed as possible from the Knowledge and Resentment of his Friends, would never mention any Thing of the Trouble they had given him; but on the other Hand, industriously secreted the Papers of their Depositions against him, as long as he lived; scarce any of his Friends or Children having seen them before his Death.

IN a Word, such was the Uniformity of his moral and religious Character, that his Friends generally esteemed him to be as much above the common Level for Goodness, as he was for Learning.

SHOULD I begin, says Dr. *Marsh*², (some Time ago Primate of Ireland) to speak any Thing of the rare Endowments of this admirable Man (Dr. Pocock) with whom I had the Honour to be very intimately acquainted for many Years, I should not be able to end his Character under a Volume: His rare Learning appears in his Writings; his exemplary Piety,

ty, Meekness, Self-denial and Candour, were visible to all that conversed with him; his Patience and Resignation to God's Will were discernible to all, who visited him in the Time of his long and painful Sickness; and his profound Humility was well known and admired by all his Acquaintance.

BUT of all the Encomiums bestowed on our Author, after his Death, none was so full, as that which was drawn up by the celebrated Mr. Locke, in a Letter to Mr. Smith of Dartmouth, dated July 23, 1703, who was then collecting Materials for writing the History of Dr. Pocock's Life. And with some Extracts from thence I shall conclude his Character.

So extraordinary an Example, in so degenerate an Age, deserves, for the Rarity, and I was going to say, for the Incredibility of it, the Attestation of all that knew him, and considered his Worth. The Christian World is a Witness of his great Learning, that, the Works he published would not suffer to be concealed; nor could his Devotion and Piety be hid, and be unobserved in a College, where his constant and regular assisting at the Cathedral Service, never interrupted by Sharpness of Weather, and scarce restrain'd by downright Want of Health, shewed the Temper and Disposition of his Mind: But his other Virtues and excellent Qualities had so strong and close a Covering of Modesty and unaffected Humility, that, though they shone the brighter to those, who had the Opportunities to be more intimately acquainted with him, and Eyes to discern and distinguish Solidity from Shew, and esteem Virtue, that sought not Reputation, yet they were the less taken Notice of, and talked of by the Generality of those, to whom he was not wholly unknown; not that he was at all close and reserved, but on the contrary, the readiest to communicate to any one that consulted him. Indeed he was not forward to talk, nor ever would be the leading Man in the Discourse, though it were on a Subject that he understood better than any of the Company, and would often content himself, to sit still, and hear others debate in Matters, which he himself was more a Master of. He had often the Silence of a Learner, where he had the Knowledge of a Master, and that not with a Design, as is often, that the Ignorance any one betrayed, might give him the Opportunity to display his own Knowledge with the more Lustre and Advantage, to their Shame, or censure them, when they were gone; but these Arts of Triumph and Ostentation, frequently practised by Men of Skill and Ability, were utterly unknown to him: It was very seldom, that he contradicted any one, or if it were necessary at any Time to inform any one better, who was in a Mistake, it was in so soft and gentle a Manner, that it had nothing of the Air of Dispute or Correction, and seemed to have little of Opposition in it. I never heard him say any Thing, that put any one that was present, the least out of Countenance, nor ever censure, or so much as speak diminishingly of any one that was absent. He was a Man of no irregular Appetites: ———— Though he was a Man of the greatest Temperance in himself, and the farthest from Ostentation and Vanity in his Way of Living, yet he was of a liberal Mind, and given to Hospitality; which, considering the Smallness of his Preferments, and the numerous Family of Children he had to provide for, might be thought to have out-done those, who made more Noise and Shew. His Name, which was in great Esteem beyond Sea, and that deservedly, drew on him Visits from all Foreigners of Learning, who came to Oxford to see that University: They never failed to be highly satisfied with his great Knowledge and Civility, which was not always without Expence. Though, at the Restoration of King CHARLES ———— his Merits were so overlooked or forgotten, that he was barely restored to what was his before, without receiving any new Preferment then, or at any Time after, yet I never heard him take any the least Notice of it, or make any the least Complaint, in a Case that would have forely grated on some Mens Patience, and have filled their Mouths with Murmuring, and their Lives with Discontent: But he was always unaffectedly chearful; no Marks of any Thing that lay heavy at his Heart, for being neglected, ever broke from him; he was so far from having any Displeasure lie concealed there, that whenever any Expressions of Dissatisfaction, for what they thought hard Usage, broke from others in his Presence, he always diverted the Discourse; and if it were any Body, with whom he might take that Liberty, he silenced it with visible Marks of Dislike.

THOUGH he was not a forward, much less an assuming Talker, yet he was the farthest in the World from sullen or morose; he would talk very freely and very well of all Parts of Learning, besides that, wherein he was known to excel: But this was not all; he could discourse very well of other Things. He was not unacquainted with the World, though he made no Shew of it. His Backwardness to meddle in other People's Matters, or to enter into Debates, where Names and Persons were brought upon the Stage, and Judgments

^h This Letter, (the Original of which is now in my Hands) or a Copy of it, was communicated to Mr. Curll the Bookseller, who printed it among other Letters of Mr. Locke's, in the Year 1714.

ⁱ Much to the same Purpose is Primate Marsh's Observation, which he makes an Instance of Dr. Pocock's profound Humility: 'Though his Learning, says he, and Judgment were very great, yet, whenever any difficult Point, in Matters of Learning, happened to arise in Discourse, he would, to my Wonder, constantly ask him he conversed with, what his Opinion was of that Matter, before he would give his own. This I found by long Experience.'

• Judgments and Censures were hardly avoided, concealed his Abilities in Matters of Business and Conduct from most People. But yet I can truly say, that I knew not any one in that University, whom I would more willingly consult in any Affair, that required Consideration, nor whose Opinion I thought better worth the hearing than his, if he could be drawn to enter into it, and give his Advice.

• THOUGH in Company he never used himself, nor willingly heard from others, any personal Reflections on other Men, though set off with a Sharpness, that usually tickles, and by most Men is mistaken for the best, if not the only Seasoning of pleasant Conversation, yet he would often bear his Part in innocent Mirth, and by some apposite and diverting Story continue and heighten the good Humour.

• I DO not remember, that in all my Conversation with him, I ever saw him once angry, or to be so far provoked, as to change Colour or Countenance, or Tone of Voice; displeasing Accidents and Actions would sometimes occur, there is no Help for that; but nothing of that Kind moved him, that I saw, to any passionate Words, much less to Chiding or Clamour. His Life appeared to me one constant Calm. To conclude, I can say of him, what few Men can say of any Friend of theirs, nor I of any other of my Acquaintance, that I do not remember I ever saw in him any one Action, that I did, or could in my own Mind blame, or thought amiss in him.

I SHALL only subjoin, at the Desire of some judicious Friends, the famed Ode of Mr. Edmund Smith, of Christ-Church, made immediately upon our Author's Death.

DUM cæde tellus luxuriat ducum,
Meum, Pococki, barbiton exigis,
Manesque musam fastuosam Sollicitant pretiosiores.
Alter virentum proruat agmina
Sonora Tbracum, donaque Phillidi
Agat puellas, heu decoris Virginibus nimis invidenti.
Te nuda virtus, te fidei pius Ardor serendæ, sanctæque veritas
Per saxa, per pontum, per hostes Præcipitant Asiæ misertum:
Cobors catenis, quæ pia stridulis
Gemunt onusti, vel sude trans sinum Luctantur aetâ, pendulive Sanguineis trepidant in uncis.
Sentis, ut edunt sibila, ut ardui
Micant dracones, tigris ut horridus
Intorquet ungues, ejulatque
In madido crocodilus antro.
Vides lacunæ sulphure lividos
Ardere fluctus, quæ stetit impiæ
Moles Gomorrhæ, mox procellâ Haustra rubrâ, pluviisque flammis:
Quod ista tellus si similes tibi Si forte denos nutrierat viros, Adbuc stetisset, nec vibrato Dextra Dei tonuisset igne.
Quin nunc requiris testâ virentia
Nini ferocis, nunc Babel arduum, Immane opus, crescentibusque Vertice sideribus propinquum, Nequicquam: amici disparibus sonis
Eludit aures nescius artifex,
Linguasque miratur recentes
In patriis peregrinus oris.
Vestitur hinc tot sermo coloribus,
Quot tu, Pococki, dissimilis tui
Orator effers, quot vicissim
Te memores celebrare gaudent.
Hi non tacebunt quo Syriam senex
Percurrit æstu raptus, ut arcibus

*Jam non superbis & verendis Indoluit Solymæ ruinis.
Quis corda pulsans tunc pavor hauserat!
Dolor quis arsit non sine gaudio,
Cum busta Christi provolutis Ambiguus lachrymis rigaret!
Sacratus arbor multa Pocockio,
Locosque monstrans inquiet accola,
Hæc quercus Hoseam supinum, Hæc Britonem recreavit ornus.
Hic audierunt gens venerabilem
Ebreæ Mosen, inde Pocockium
Non ore non annis minorem, Atque suam didicere linguam.
Ac sicut albens perpetuâ nive
Simul favillas & cineres sinu
Eruat ardentis & pruinis Contiguas rotat Ætna flammæ,
Sic te trementem, te nive candidum
Mens intus urget, mens agit ignea
Sequi reluctantem Joëlem
Per tonitru, aeriasque nubes.
Annon pavefcis, dum tuba pallidum
Ciet Sionem, dum tremulum polo
Caligat astrum, atque incubanti
Terra nigrans tegitur sub umbra?
Quod agmen! heu quæ turma sequacibus
Tremenda flammis! quis strepitantium
Fliæus rotarum est! O Pococki
Egregie, O animosæ vatis
Interpres abstrusi, O simili fere
Correpte flamma, te, quot imagine Crucis notantur, te, subæto
Christicolæ gravis Ottomannus
Gemens requirit, te Babylonii
Narrant poetæ, te pharetris Arabs
Plorat revulsis, & fragosos
Jam gravior ferit horror agros.
Quæ gesta nondum cognita Cæsaris,
Quæ nec Maronis scripta, Pocockius
Ploratur ingens, & dolenda Nestoræ brevitæ senectæ.*

LECTOREM.

SI quid sit in his à nobis editis, quod illis qui Rabbinica cum Arabicis studia conjungere cupiunt, prodesse poterit, satis tam pro muneris, quam pro instituti nostri ratione fecisse videamur; adeo ut Lectorem, cui istiusmodi cordi sint, ulteriori præfatione destinere opus non sit, quin rectà portam, quā patet, ingrediatur, ut quæ ab hoc fine non prorsus aliena fore speramus, an nostrum utriusque votis respondeant, ipse legendo perspiciat. Sed cum in ea oculos forsàn conjecturi sint & alii severioribus occupati curis, quò suis etiam usibus aliquid inde decerpant, liceat aliqua de totius operis ratione historico more præfari.

Quæ è Lingua Arabica in Latinam à nobis versa sunt, Maimonidem habent authorem, virum nominis tam apud Christianos quàm Judeos meritò celebris, (qui quid de ipso & censuerint & dixerint licet consulere tum alios, tum imprimis Cl. virum Johannem Buxtorfium in sua ad Moreh Nervochim præfatione) nec minus apud Mohammedanos; apud quos, teste authore historiæ Medicorum) موسى الرئيس Mosès Princeps audit: quòd scil. Judeis in Egypto degentibus aliquando præfuerit, cum esset من احبارهم وفضلهم Juris Judaici peritissimus, sed & عالم بسنن اليهود seculi sui in arte medica, eaque facienda, Phœnix (quo nomine & Regi Salaboddino ejusque filio Ali, cujus jussu librum تدبير الصحة de regimine sanitatis composuit, notus fuit) nec non متقنى في العلوم omni scientiæ genere clarus. His artibus cum tantam apud Mohammedanos (in diversæ professionis homines satis plerunque obliquos) gloriam adeptus fuerit, minime mirum est eum apud suorum alios, eas, quas nemo ferè alius, consecutum esse laudes, à quibus נר ישראל Lucerna Israelis, אור מזהר ומערב חכם עבר וערב Lumen Orientis & occidentis, Hebræorum & Arabum Sapiens, Mosès cui post Mosen primum haud alius similis fuerit insignitus est: apud alios verò (ut fieri solet) tantæ nominis celebritati invidentes, odium plus quam Vatinianum in se concitasse, quo perciti nihil non & contra ipsum & ipsius scripta molirentur; à quorum ipsum tanquam religionis Mohammedicæ, quam aliquando simulaverat, desertorem accusantium calumniis, unâ ^a Al Kadi Al Fadel Abdirrahimi fidi amici ope & gratiâ (referente Gregorio Abil Farajio) liberatus est. Sed non est nobis animus, tam quæ ad Authoris personam, quam quæ ad præsentis operis rationem spectant, in medium proferre. Inter prima quæ edidit magnus iste Doctor ingenii sui monumenta, est ipsius in sex Mishnæ ordines, seu universum textum Talmudicum commentarius, qui quando ab ipso conscriptus sit, non aliunde meliùs discemus quam ex ipsius verbis quibus opus suum obsignavit, quæ tum in C. Causa nobis eas Arabice edendi ea fuit, quam innuit R. Nathanael, Ben Almeli, verbis jam antea laudatis; scil. quod cum lingua Arabica apud Judeos in desuetudinem abierit, metus sit, ne prorsus perirent thesauri isti. Nescio enim quo pacto factum sit, ut paucorum jam manibus terantur quæ Arabice scripta sint, blattisque solùm & tineis comedentur, iis etiam in regionibus ubi ante aliquot sæcula, non aliam, ut vidimus, dialectum facilè intelligerent vel eorum doctissimi. Nescio, inquam, quo pacto, cum fatum illud non solum Judeorum libris contigerit, sed & aliorum Arabice scribentium monumentis magna ex parte commune sit: nempe, ut nec eadem jam diligentia conserventur, vel posteritati propaganda transcribantur, quâ olim cum apud ipsos eâ linguâ quasi vernaculâ gauderent, unâque cum ejus studio florent literæ, utrisque idem ferè jam fatum passis, magnâque veteris gloriæ parte privatis: non quod vel in angustiores limites redacta sit lingua ista quam olim erat, cum vel latius unâ cum religione Mohammedana, cui necessario sacra est, propagata fuerit; nec quod qui summâ jam rerum apud ipsos potiuntur minori erga literas studio ferantur; secus enim, quicquid vulgo statuatur, se rem habere comperiet qui Turcarum annales consuluerit, ac pluris fieri, majoribus sumptibus ali, & ad majores honores provehi apud ipsos, quam alibi, doctos; sed potius quod turbatis ad tempus inter arma studiis, cum jam fato cessissent literarum Antistites, nec in promptu essent, qui easdem labantes susciperent, & ipsæ unâ occubuisse videantur, vel grave saltem deliquium passæ, post quod imperio ad homines linguâ pariter & sede diversos jam translato, in integrum nullâ medicorum ope adhuc restitui potuerint. Quæ animo perpendenti verissimè ac gravissimè dictum videtur illud quod Ali à quibusdam acceptum fertur, نوال العلم اهن من موت للعلماء Scientiæ ipsius quàm doctorum leviolem esse occasum, cum utroque non rarè idem sepulchrum contumulet, nec illa his superfit: adeo ut nihil gravius pati possit sæculum eruditorum jacturâ, utut incolumes plerumque contemptui, si non odio manifesto habere soleat. Sed ne ad limen perductos in diverticula abducamus; Quod & characteribus Hebraicis imprimenda curavimus Arabica, ea in re autorem ipsum (è cujus autographo parum abest, quin mihi persuadeam edita esse horum aliqua) imitati sumus; idque consilio, studiosis, si quid sentiam, non inutili, quò ita ei scribendi rationi assuescant, quâ quotquot ferè è Judeis Arabice scripserunt usi, ut nunc solent, & olim videntur. Ac teste R. Salomone in sua ad Maimonidem in Seder Nezikin præfatione, R. Saadiab Gaon, (totius veteris Testamenti Paraphrasi Arabicâ, & libro Emunoth eadem linguâ scripto, clarus) R. Enoc f. R. Mosis, qui התלמוד בלשון ערבי totum Talmud Arabice enarravit; R. Samuel Levita Granatensis, R. Isaac Al Fesi, R. Isaac Ben Giath, R. Joseph Hallevi Ben Megash, & אחרים רבים אין מספר, alii ferè innumeri, כולם רוב פירושים ותשובותיהם בלשון ערבי, quorum omnium interpretamenta, & responsa magnâ ex parte Arabice conscripta reperies. [Obiter notare liceat, quod de R. Enocho narrat R. Salomon noster, idem R. Josepho ab aliis tribui. In Chronologia Davidis Ganz à doctissimo V. Guilielmo Henrico Vorstio editâ, dicitur “ tempore Raf “ Hai

In horum, aliorumve hoc genus Autorum, librum aliquem qui inciderit, pede magis inoffenso perget, si mori scribendi isti assuetus prius fuerit. Quem in finem, si quid alicui contulerit opus istud, Academia Oxoniensis beneficium gratus agnoscat, quæ typographiam suam ea ipsa de causa typis ad hanc rem idoneis instrui curavit, quibus plus jam hoc in genere quam aliàs adhuc, quod sciam, unquam in publicum prodiit. Quod prodiit ne sine ulteriori examine contemptui habeat, suadet magnum Maimonidis nomen, qui ut præcipuis reip. literariæ Antistibus visum est, nugari non solet. Nec dubito quin & hæc penitiùs inspecta eundem quem cætera ipsius scripta genium spirent, sed & in iis repertum iri nonnulla quæ ab ipso primùm in ordinem redacta, pleniùsque ac fusiùs quàm ab aliis tradita sint; quod de fundamentis fidei Judaicæ hîc ab ipso in articulos suos distributis testatur Abarbinel. Quis totius operis Talmudici rationem & historiam tam dilucidè alibi enucleavit? Quis tot disciplinæ ^m Judaicæ mysteria tam luculentâ Methodo exposuit? His in linguam Latinam traducendis, si illud saltem præstitero quod כריק מבלי אל כלי (ut verbis R. Josephi utar) qui è vase in vas [usui magis accommodum] transfundit, vel qui sitienti scutellam præbet quâ aquam è fonte desumat, operam non prorsus inutilem navasse videbor. Si quis interim eadem cum Hebraicis conferens, me à doctis istis Judæis, qui in eam linguam ipsa verterunt, in non paucis discrepare viderit, antequam vel in hanc vel alteram partem statuatur, utraque cum authoris (quæ hic dedimus) Arabicis diligenter conferat. Nam & eorum plerique errores quos sibi exemplarium quæ secuti sunt vitio, aliisve de causis necessario committendos persenserunt, magna equidem cum modestia deprecantur; neque ipse eò immodestiae perveni ut quempiam mecum errare velim. Lector, quo utilitati suæ (cui post Dei gloriam dicatus est labor noster) consulat, in ea, quæ veritati maximè consentanea est, interpretatione eligendâ judicio suo utatur; & si in utrâque erratum deprehenderit, tertiam ipse reponat.

In Appendice notarum verè miscellaneâ, neque ad strictas methodi leges ubique exigendâ, quid præstitum sit haud facile erit uno intuitu ob oculos ponere. Ad hunc ferè scopum collimant omnia, ut studiorum Rabbinicorum & Arabicorum in genuino S. Scripturarum sensu eruendo, iisque explicandis usum, prolatis exemplis, ostendant, & commendatiorem reddant. Quod vel bonarum literarum amantioribus persuasum dare, forsan non adeo facile erit; multo minus illis, quibus vel quid ultra vernaculam sapere, iis rite interpretandis maximum statuatur impedimentum. Genus hominum planè ἀτοπον & ἄλογον, atque hujus sæculi lues; à quibus quid passus fuerim, (quanto majora, nisi apparuisset Deus μετακύμιον, passurus! nec tam aliâ forsan de causâ, quàm quod & doctos amem, & à doctis, licet indignus, amer) qui noverit, haud adeo mirabitur si impræsentiarum, nec plura, nec meliora præstiterim. Sed liberavit me Deus, virorum insignium, quibus meliora cordi sunt, ope ultro oblatâ: quibus gratias quantas possum maximas refero, aliâsque, quibus impar sum, plures adhuc debere me hîc palam testatum volo. Deus, qui hanc mentem illis indidit, bona ipsis omnia rependat, & boni omnes bene cupiant. Scitum est illud Poëtæ,

 لا يذهب العرف بين الله والناس

Qui fecerit bonum, non destituetur mercede ipsius.
Non perit beneficium inter Deum & homines.

Quod si in notis istis à viris summis in diversum aliquando abeam, non est quod quis vel me illis detractum ire putet, vel veritatem à tanto illis inferiore prolatam fastidiosè respuat. Obtinuit semper atque obtinebit illud etiam Poëtæ,

f. Maimonis Hispanus ipsam extruxi, è mari Talmudis extraxi, è sapphiro Tosiphthæ fundamenta ejus jeci, ipsam carbunculo Siphrae stravi, auròque Siphri oblevi, verbis excellentium fulcivi, argento puro constrinxi, & in argilla cordis mei fudi. Estque, ecce, illa sicut vinea desiderabilis, quam plantatione deliciarum consitam interdium ac noctu custodivi, & ad momenta irrigavi, donec consummati fuerint flores ipsius, & maturerint botri, omnisque uva parva se aperuerit, & omnis in ea arbor gemmas emisit, dederintque mandragoræ odorem. Portas ejus quas aperui non obseravi, neque interdium aut noctu clausi, sed omni recto & mundo liberè ipsam permisi, & pro munere discipulis misi. Atque ecce alligavi ipsam omnibus qui verba transcribunt, sedentibus coram Domino, ut sit ex quo comedant ad saturitatem, & operimentum durable.

Congregamini, sapientes, & in statione vestra consistite, dote enim bonâ vos donabo. Accedite, filii, & auscultate mihi, timorem Domini docebo vos: diligenter auscultate mihi & comedite bonum, sitque instar horti irrigui anima vestra. Quis est vir qui delectatur vitâ, qui amat dies quibus videat bonum, qui non extulit super se regem aliquem magnum, nec sub ipso se incurvavit; quem non seduxerunt seductores ejus, neque fuit inter eos qui ab ipso plecti sunt, qui in corde suo statuit non pollutum iri se portione escæ regis, aut vino compotationis ipsius? divertat huc ad victimam meam quam mactavi, ad vinum meum quod donec inveterasceret fervavi, ad eam quam instruxi mensam. Adeste, vescimini cibo meo, vinum quod miscui bibite. Ecce in eo est ex omni genere fructuum pretiosorum, recentium simul & veterum, vinumque conditum, succus malogranatorum loqui faciens labia dormientium. Est autem ipsum oblatio spontanea vini mei, primitiæ omnis frumenti mei, tritura mea, & proventus aræ meæ. Vinum ipsius è vinea collis præpinguis, & panis ipsius panis fortium, si quis ederit ipsum, portio ejus pinguis erit; sapor ejus ut sapor olei recentis. Comedite pingua, & bibite dulcia, filii mei. Comedite, focii, bibite, & inebriamini, intelligentes mei. Hæc est mensa quæ est coram Domino. Est autem ipsa interpretatio Mishnæ, quam expoliverunt patres vestri, explicatio maceriarum, quas struxerunt pastores qui fœtas vestras ducunt, & fundamentorum super quæ fundati estis, radicum, nec non consuetudinum, decretorum & constitutionum, quæ constituerunt vestrum potentissimi, à die quem præcepit Dominus, ac deinceps per generationes vestras. Atque ecce est illa instar turris Davidicæ super tumulum suum constitutæ, in quâ mille suspensi sunt clypei, cum omnibus electorum instrumentis bellicis, omnia potentium scuta. Ego Moses

SCIAS omnia legis præcepta quæ à Deo ad Mosen magistrum nostrum demissa sunt, demissa ad ipsum fuisse una cum interpretatione sua, eloquente Deo ipsi primùm textum, deinde explanationem & interpretationem ejus, & quid comprehenderet textus iste authenticus. Modus autem edocendi illa Israellem ejusmodi erat qualem tibi descripturus sum. Recipiente se [Mose] in tentorium suum, primus ipsum conveniebat Abron, cui textum ad se [cœlitus] demissum semel enarrabat, ipsumque ejus interpretationem docuit; illo deinde surgente atque ad dextram Mosis se sistente, ingrediebantur Eleazar & Ithamar filii ipsius, quibus etiam dictabat Moses idem quod dictaverat Abroni; tum surgentibus ipsis, cedentibusque uno ad sinistram Mosis magistri nostri, altero ad dextram Abronis, ingrediebantur postea septuaginta Seniores, quos docebat Moses eo modo quo docuerat Abronem & filios ipsius. Ingredebatur postea cœtus populi promiscuus, omnis nempe quærens Doninum, quibus etiam idem recitavit, donec omnes ab ipso [illud] audirent. Audierat autem jam Abron à Mose textum illum quater, filii ipsius ter, Seniores bis, reliquus cœtus semel. Deinde discendente ab ipsis Mose, repetebat Abron textum istum, quem memoriâ tenebat à Mose quater auditum, uti descripsimus, omnibus qui aderant: tum discedebat etiam Abron: atque ita duo etiam Abronis filii jam quater audierant [illud quod dictum est;] à Mose ter, & ab Abrone semel. Post Abronis igitur discessum, repetebant Eleazar & Ithamar eundem textum, quem quater audierant, uti explicavimus, coram toto presentium cœtu, atque à docendo surrexerunt. Atque hoc pacto factum est ut etiam septuaginta Seniores jam textum istum quater audierint, bis à Mose, semel ab Abrone, nec non ab Eleazaro & Ithamaro semel. Recitabant ergo & septuaginta Seniores textum istum populo semel, ut & omnes quater illum audirent, primò à Mose, secundò ab Abrone, tertio à filiis ipsius, quartò à septuaginta Senioribus, qui tum discentes alii alios docebant illud quod à Dei nuntio acceperant, textum autem voluminibus inscribebant. Tum dispersi sunt primores populi per totum Israellem ad eos docendos atque instituendos, donec memoriâ tenerent textum illum, ejusque lectionem callerent. Deinde docebant etiam illos interpretationem textus istius à Deo demissi, quæ sensus ejus universos contineret. Textum autem scripto, traditionem memoriæ mandabant; atque ita dicunt sapientes (quibus pax) Lex quæ scripta est, & Lex quæ ore tradita. Dixerunt etiam in Baraitba, Et allocutus est Dominus Mo- sen in monte Sinai. Quid sibi vult quod dicit, In monte Sinai? Annon tota lex tradita est de Sinai? Verùm hoc dictum est ut tibi indicet, quod sicut præceptum de anno intermissionis, cum generalibus, particularibus & minutiis quæ ad ipsum [spectant] datum sit è Sinai, ita & reliqua præcepta cum generalibus, particularibus & minutiis suis data sunt è Sinai; ut e. g. tibi dicam quod dixerit ipsi Dominus, In Tabernaculis habitabitis septem diebus, tum docuerit ipsum necessaria esse tabernacula ista Viris non, Fœminis, neque obligari ad ea ægrotos, neque itinerantes, neque tecta ipsis de aliis [rebus] quàm quæ è terra germinant [imponenda.] Neque enim obtegenda esse vel lanâ,

vel ferico, vel vasis, etiam si ex iis quæ producit terra [confectis,] veluti floreis aut vestibus: nec non, edendum, bibendum, atque dormiendum in ipsis esse septem dies integros; neque debere minus quàm septem palmas longitudine, ac totidem latitudine continere, altitudine autem non minus quàm decem palmas. Veniens ergò Legatus Dei (c. p.) attulit [secum] hoc præceptum cum interpretatione ipsius; eodémque modo 613. præcepta una cum interpretationibus. Præcepta autem voluminibus inscribebantur, expositiones ore tradebantur. Fine autem anni quadragesimi, initio mensis Shebat, convocavit ipsos Moses, (c. p.) dicens, Appropinquavit jam tempus mortis meæ; si quis ergo traditionis alicujus à me acceptæ oblitus fuerit, accedens petat ut eam ipsi declarem, & si quæstio aliqua cuiuspiam intellectu difficilis videatur, accedat ut eam ipsi explicem. Hoc est quod dicit Scriptura, * Voluit Moses explanare legem istam, dicendo, &c. atque ita dixerunt sapientes in [libro] Sifre, Si quis oblitus fuerit constitutionis alicujus, veniat & eam secundo audiat, & si quis opus habeat explanatione, accedat ut ipsi explanetur. Traditionum ergo veritatem ab eo didicerunt, atque explicationes acceperunt toto illo temporis spatio quod inter initium mensis Shebat & diem septimum Adar intercedit. Cum autem jam prope esset ut moreretur, manum describendis libris admovens, tredecim exaravit legis exemplaria, in pergamento omnia, à litera B vocis Bereſhith usque ad L, vocis Israel [quâ terminatur lex,] quorum singula singulis tribubus, quibus uterentur, distribuit, decimum tertium autem dedit Levitis, dicens illis, Accipite librum legis, &c. Tum montem circa meridiem septimi Adar (uti traditione verâ acceptum est) conscendit. Fuitque hoc mors ejus respectu nostri, eo quod ipso privati fumus, at ipsius respectu vita, ob eum ad quem evectus est [gradum] atque ita dixerunt [magistri] (q. p.) Moses Doctor noster non est mortuus, verum ascendit ut serviret [Deo] in excelsis. Verùm sermo de his valdè prolixus est, nec hujus loci. Mortuo ergo Mose, cum Josua iis quæ ad ipsum demissæ fuerant explicationibus instructum reliquisset, Josua ejusque sæculi homines secundum eas sententiam dixerunt. Quidquid autem Mosi acceptum ferret ipse aut seniorum aliquis, nulla de eo controversia, nulla incidit dissensio, at si quid erat è ramis de quo nihil à Mose acceptum fuerat, quid de eo statuendum esset eliciebatur collatione, ope tredecim regularum quæ ipsi [Mosi] tradita sunt in Sinai; istis nempe tredecim argumentandi modis quibus legis sensus eruitur. Eorum autem, quæ isto modo eliciebantur, quædam erant de quibus nulla omnino incidit dissensio, cum unanimi omnium consensu recepta essent, alia verò de quibus accidit inter duas conjecturas discrepantia, prævalente apud unum quod ipse opinatus fuerat, apud alium quod ipse conjectando assecutus. Hoc enim inter sententias, quæ è locis probabiliter argumentandi eruuntur, evenire solet. Accidente autem hujusmodi dissensione in plurium sententiam itum est, juxta Dei mandatum quo ad plures inclinare jubet.

excellentiā autem Prophetæ spectat eorū-que quæ circa legem fecerit, cuiuscunque tandem generis fuerint, est illud certe magni momenti fundamentum ex iis quibus fundatur religio. Porro videtur mihi hic locus esse explicandi fundamentum istud, quod tamen fieri nequit nisi præmissâ distinctione modorum quibus prophetiam sibi vendicant Prophetæ, quaque ratione vera comprobetur prophetia: cum hoc etiam magnum sit fundamentum in quo errant, non solum universum hominum vulgus, sed & potioris notæ non pauci; putantes, scil. non credendum prophetiam sibi vendicanti, nisi post editum miraculum par alicui è miraculis Mosis Doctoris nostri; & necesse esse ut ordinarium rerum cursum perumpat, sicut fecit Eliab in resuscitando viduæ filio, aut ut factum est in deprædicatis Elisbæ miraculis. Regula autem hæc minimè vera est, cum omnia quæ patrarunt Eliab, Elisbæ, cæteri-que Prophetæ, non in eum finem fecerint ut iis Prophetiam suam confirmatum irent; cum jam antea de eo certo constaret: sed ea poscente necessitate ediderint, cum pro ea quâ apud Deum erant propinquitate, voluntatem ipsorum perfece-rit, juxta illud piis promissum, ^b Et cum statuer verbum, ratum erit tibi. Vera autem comprobatur prophetia eo modo quo hoc, quem exorsus sum, sermone descripturi tibi sumus. Dico igitur, primò, canones in lege nostra de prophetis traditos, ita se habere: sc. eos, qui prophetiæ munus sibi vendicant, in duo distingui genera, eorum qui in nomine Idoli, & eorum qui in nomine Domini vaticinantur. Prophetia autem in nomine Idoli duplicis rursus est generis, primum, cum surgens Prophetæ dixerit, Hujusmodi stella influxu suo spiritali in me demisso, dixit, Hoc modo me colite, vel, hoc modo me invocate, nec non cum ad Idoli aut Telestatis alicujus cultum invitat dicens, Hoc mihi illud indicavit, hoc mihi nuntiavit, vel præcepit mihi ut juberem ipsum tali modo coli, quomodo facere solebant Prophetæ Baal, & Prophetæ Luci. Secundum, cum dixerit quispiam, Venit ad me à Deo revelatio, colendum esse Idolum tale, aut spiritualem ejusmodi influxum tali modo eliciendum (rationem interim aliquam cultus, & actiones aliquas describens quibus utuntur qui tali dediti sunt cultui, quemadmodum inter fundamenta legis nostræ traditur) hic etiam inter Prophetas Idololatrias censendus est, cum hoc nomen comprehendat non solum illos qui dicant ipsum Idolum se coli jussisse, aut aliud aliquid mandasse, sed & eos qui dicant Dominum creaturæ alicujus cultum præcepisse. Cum igitur audierimus quempiam quolibet horum modorum se Prophetam venditasse, atque hoc manifestò de ipso probatum fuerit, debet ille strangulatione è medio tolli, sicut dicit Deus, ^c Propheta autem ille, vel somnians somnium, morte afficietur: neque habebitur ratio [muneris] quod sibi vendicat, neque requiretur ab ipso signum; imo et si miracula ediderit ad professionem istam confirmandam, quibus nihil unquam magis mirum audivimus, nihilominus strangulabitur, nullâ miraculorum istorum habitâ ratione. Causa enim ob quam rata fuerint ista miracula, ea est quam assignat Scriptura (dicens,) ^d Quoniam tentat vos Dominus Deus vester, &c. Testimonium enim intellectus, qui professionem ejus falsi arguit, oculi qui miracula ipsius viderit testimonio firmitus est, cum apud intellectu præditos demonstratione certa probatum sit, non debere magnificari, neque coli præter unum qui omnia condidit, & ab omnibus perfectione summa distinctus est.

VOL. I.

Porro, qui in nomine Domini vaticinantur, duplici etiam sunt in genere. 1. Cum quis in nomine Domini prophetans ad ipsum homines allicit, & ad eum colendum incitat, dicens, Deum præceptum aliquod præceptis suis addidisse, aut præceptum aliquod de numero eorum quæ continet liber legis detraxisse. Neque interest quicquam addiderit an abstulerit, sive iis quæ in textu legis habentur, sive ipsorum explicationi traditione acceptæ. Uti siquidem addat vel detrahat iis quæ in textu habentur, hoc modo, Dixit mihi Deus, Spatium quo pro præputiatis habendi sint fructus, duorum tantum annorum esse, post quos fructibus sativis vesci licitum: vel dicendo, Dixit mihi Dominus, quatuor annis illicitum erit illis vesci, loco ejus quod dixit Dominus, Tribus annis incircumcisi erunt vobis, &c. atque ita in ejusmodi aliis. Nec non si aliquam, quamcunque tandem, in traditione mutationem fecerit, etiam favente ipsi textus literâ: e. g. si dicat, dictum ejus in lege, Et abscindes manum ejus, non parcat oculus tuus, de abscissione reverâ intelligendum esse, non autem de multa pudore [alium] afficienti constitutâ, prout traditione acceptum est; atque hoc prophetiæ acceptum ferat, dicens, dixit mihi Dominus dictum suum, Et abscindes manum ejus, prout sonat intelligendum: hic etiam strangulatione tollendus erit, cum Propheta mendax fit, Deo illud affingens, quod Deus ipsi non dixit; neque ejus ob signum aut miraculum ab ipso patratum ratio habebitur; cum Propheta ille, qui miraculis suis totum mundum ad stuporem adegit, cuique ut crederemus, fidemque haberemus infixit Deus cordibus nostris, (asserente ipso Deo, cum dixit, Et tibi credent in sæculum) jam antea nobis denunciaverit, non prodituram à Deo aliam ab ista legis lationem. Atque hoc est quod dicit, Non est in cælis ipsa ut dicas, Quis ascendet pro nobis in cælum, &c. Et quod dicit, In corde tuo, & in ore tuo, hoc innuens, vel sententias quæ ore traduntur, vel conclusiones quæ speculatione, (unâ ex potentiis è corde oriundis) eliciuntur, quibus etiam aliquid vel addi vel detrahi vetuit, dicens, Non addes illi, neque diminues de eo. Ideoque dixerunt Majores, quibus pax, Non est Prophetæ concessum ut aliquid ab isto tempore immutet. Cum ergo sciamus ipsum in eo quod sibi vendicat, in Deum mendacem esse, eique affingere quod ab ipso non sit illi dictum, necesse est ut eum morte afficiamus, declarante Scriptura dum dicit, Propheta qui addiderit, &c. morietur Propheta ille.

Secundò. Cum [quis] ad Deum [colendum] homines invitat, atque ad præceptum ejus custodiendum incitat, nec non ut legem observent denunciat, idque citra additionem, vel diminutionem, (sicut dixit ultimus eorum, Memento Legis Moysi servi mei, cui mandavi in Horeb super omnem & prohibens: e. g. si dicat. Expugnat nunc regionem istam, aut sestam istam: sicut olim mandavit Samuel Sauli ut Amalecum occideret; aut [si quem] prohibeat morte afficere; sicut * Elisba interdixit Jebozabab, ne exercitum Hazaëlis, qui Samariam ingressus est, deleteret, (uti notum est;) & ut vetuit Isaiab aquam intra muros derivari; & ut interdixit Jeremiab Israëlitis ne egrederentur extra Jerusalem; cum ejusmodi aliis. Cum ergo prophetiæ [munus] vendicaverit sibi Propheta, ita ut illud Idolo alicui acceptum non ferat, neque Legi quicquam addat aut subtrahat, verum alias quasdam insistant vias, eo modo quo explicavimus, tum opus est, ut eum probemus, quò vocatio ipsius nobis sit comperta; quoniam cum de alicujus vocatione constat, tenemur omnia quæ jubet, tam minoris quàm majoris [momenti] præstare; & quicumque transgressus fuerit aliquod ejus mandatum, tenetur morte per manus Dei [infligendâ] ex dicto Domini de eo qui transgressus fuerit mandata Prophetarum, ¹ Ego requiram ab illo. Quòd si vera non comprobetur vocatio ejus, ipse strangulatione perimendus est.

De veritate autem vocationis [Prophetarum] constabit hoc, quo descripturus sum, modo. Scilicet, cum quis prophetiam sibi vendicaverit, sicut declaravimus, eoque idoneus fuerit; utpote qui fuerit doctus, religiosus, continens, intellectu & omni morum probitate præditus, juxta illam apud nos regulam, Non residet prophetia nisi super sapientem, fortem, & divitem. Multæ autem sunt notæ ad hoc propositum spectantes, quas omnes comprehendere nequimus, & de quibus sermone instituto singulas probare conari, allatis textibus è Sacra Scriptura dictisque Sapientum, librum potius integrum per se requirerent. Qualem forsan [ut aliquando componamus,] cum omnibus quæ eodem spectant, auxilium suppeditabit Deus. Cum ergo idoneus huic muneri fuerit, prout oportet, ipsumque sibi vendicaverit, dicemus illi, Ede nobis promissa, & refer nobis aliqua eorum quæ nota fecit tibi Dominus; quo referente, si vera evaserint promissa ejus omnia, hinc prophetiæ ejus veritatem percipiemus: quòd si in aliquo ipforum, vel minutissimo, mendax fuerit; hinc mendacem eum esse cognoscemus: atque hæc expressa est legis de hujusmodi probatione sententia: Et cum dices in corde tuo, Quomodo cognoscemus verbum quod non locutus est Dominus, quod loquetur Propheta in nomine Domini, & non erit verbum, &c. Quinetiam etsi verum dixerit nobis in uno aut altero promisso, nondum tamen certum erimus prophetiam ipsius veram esse, sed manebit apud nos dubiæ fidei, donec veracitas ipsius in omnibus quæ à Deo refert, vicibus continuis exhibeatur: unde de Samuele dicitur, (Postquam notum ac certum fuerat quodcunque diceret, ratum fieri,) Et novit omnis Israel à Dan usque ad Beershebam quod fidelis esset Samuel in Prophetam Domino; neque accidit illis negotium aliquod de quo non sciscitarentur Prophetas. Nisi enim ita fuisset, ut prophetas de omnibus rebus suis consulerent, non adiisset Saul in principio Samuelem, de eo quod amiserat sciscitaturus. Minimè autem dubium est sic se rem habere, quoniam Deus Prophetas [mittendo,] fecit ne opus haberemus Astrologis & Divinatoribus & Ariolis; quoniam illos

consulere possumus de rebus nostris, vel simul universis, vel divisim singulis, ut nobis à Deo vera nuncient; sicut isti ea quæ forsan vera, forsan falsa, renunciant. Hoc est quod dicit Scriptura, ° Quia gentes istæ, quas tu expellis, præstigiatores & divinos audiunt: at tu non sic: Dedit tibi Dominus Deus tuus Prophetam è medio tui, &c. Atque has ob rationes appellabant Prophe-tam, Videntem; quòd res futuras, antequam ex-isterent, prævideret. Sicut dicit, Quoniam Pro-pheta hodie, antea appellabatur Videns.

Forfan autem [ita] apud se putet quis ac dicat,
Num ergò ex veritate prædictionis eorum quæ eventura sunt, vera censèbitur Prophetia eorum qui eam sibi vendicant? Si ita se res habet, possunt Arioli, Astrologi, omnibûsque potentiis animalibus præditi, arrogare sibi prophetiam, cùm quotidie oculis nostris videamus futura prædicere. Atqui (novit Deus) hic locus est magni momenti, quem oportet ut explicemus, quòd appareat differentia inter illas quas Propheta à Deo refert, eorûmque qui potentiis istiusmodi præditi sunt prædictiones.

Dico igitur, Ariolos, Astrologos, atque ejus sectæ homines prædicere quidem futura, sed ita, ut ne-cessariò partim vera, partim falsa sint; quod & perpetuò videmus, & confirmant ipsi qui eas artes profidentur; neque negare possunt, dum hinc gloriam captant, si cujuspiam mendacia pauciora quàm alterius fuerint: sed ut verum dicat quisquam eorum in singulis, hoc impossibile est: neque id sibi arrogant iis potentiis præditi; verùm ubi dixerit quis, Futura est hoc anno siccitas, nullâ per eum cadente pluvîâ, si parum in eo pluat; vel ubi dixerit, Cras pluet, si postridiè pluat, &c. habetur hic admodum excellens, atque ex illustribus famæ hominibus, quos celebrant historiæ. Atque hic est sensus ejus quod dicit Isaiab Babeli, Stent nunc & servant te speculantes celos, contem-plantes stellas, cognoscere facientes menses, ab iis quæ ventura sunt super te. Et dixerunt sapientes [Me asber, ab iis] non [Col asber, ab omni quod.] Non sunt autem promissâ Prophetarum ejusmodi, sed penitus vera, quorum non inter-cidit quicquam sive parvum, sive magnum, per totum seculorum decursum in omnibus quæ nunciat Propheta quis à Domino: ideò si quando irritum fuerit eorum aliquod, noverimus eum mendacem. Atque hoc est quod dicit Scriptura, Quoniam non cadet è verbo Domini in terram.
Quod & innuit Jeremiah, ubi [loquitur] de iis, qui cùm in somniis vera viderent, ea de quibus ita moniti fuerant, ac si prophetiæ essent, enarrârunt; dum eos reprehendens, & eorum prætextus labefactans, dicit, Propheta, cui est somnium, narret somnium, & cui sunt verba mea, loquatur verba mea in veritate. Quid palea cum tritico? dicit Dominus. Cujus dicti sensum hunc reddunt Sapientes, quòd prophetia quid purum sit, nec admistum habeat falsi aliquid, instar frumenti à palea puri; at somnia, aliâque ejusmodi indicia, mendacium habent admistum, instar paleæ, in qua grana quædam frumenti sunt: unde dixerunt, Sicut impossibile est ut sit tritium sine palea, ita fieri non potest ut sit somnia absque verbis falsis. Superest autem hic locus magni momenti, qui explicatione indiget: scil. Quòd si quis propheta mala populo

merenti comminetur: e. g. famem aut gladium, aut inundatum iri ipsorum regionem, vel descensura in illos fulmina, atque ejusmodi alia, quorum deinde nihil eveniat, verum remisso ipsis peccato res prosperè succedant; non tamen inde constet de mendacio Prophetæ illius, ut Pseudopropheta, qui morte mulctandus sit, habeatur, quod pœnituerit Deum mali, cùm forsân pœnitentiam egerint, aut à peccatis suis destiterint, aut distulerint eos Dominus pro longanimitate sua, atque in aliud tempus rejecerit; (sicut fecit Achabo, cui per Eliam dixit, Non adducam malum in diebus ejus, in diebus filii ipsius adducam malum super domum ipsius) aut remiserit ipsis ob merita antecedentia. Neque enim de hujusmodi rebus loquitur cùm dicit, Neque fuerit res illa, neque eveniat. Quod si bona tempore constituto eventura promiserit, dicens, Futuram hoc anno pacem, evenierit autem bellum; aut, Futurum hunc annum pluvium & fertilem, fuerit autem sterilis & siccus, &c. erit hic Pseudopropheta, de cujus prætextuum falsitate & mendacio constat. Atque hic est de quo dixit Dominus, Per superbiam loquutus est illud Propheta, non timebis ab eo, i. e. Non terreat neque avertet te à cæde ejus, religio, bonitas, aut scientia ipsius, cùm per superbiam magna professus, falsa de Deo loquutus fuerit. Nam quoties Deus populo per Prophetas bona promiserit, fieri non potest, quin ea perficiat, ut ita prophetiam ipsorum apud homines confirmet: atque hoc est quod dixerunt [Majores nostri] Omne verbum quod prodierit ex ore Domini in bonum, etiam conditione additâ, non tamen revocat. Quod ad illud autem quod timeret Jacob, postquàm ipsi Deus bona promississet, cùm diceret, Et ecce ego tecum, &c. (invenimus enim illum timuisse perditionem, dicente [Scriptura] & timuit Jacob valde) dixerunt Sapientes, timuisse eum ne prævaleret ipsi peccatum, quod perditione dignus fieret: atque hoc est quod dicunt, Putavit forsân peccatum in causa futurum, &c. Ostendit autem hoc, aliquando etiam promittente Deo bona, prævalere peccata, ne rata fiant bona ista. Scias ergò evenire quidem hoc inter Deum & prophetam; at ut jubeat Deus Prophetam bona populo simpliciter denunciare, quæ deinde [eventu] non confirmantur, hoc certè falsum est, quod fieri non possit; neque enim superesset locus unde dignosceretur veritas Prophetiæ; cùm ipse in libro suo hanc nobis regulam dederit, dignoscendum Prophetam ex veritate promissionum ipsius. Atque ad hanc regulam illustrem, digitum intendit Jeremias in contentione sua cum Hanania filio Aazuri, ubi prophetat Jeremias de malo & perditione, futurumque ut Nebuchadnezzar victoria potiretur, & superior [pugnâ] factus templum vastaret, Hananias autem f. Aazuri bona annunciat, sc. reportatum iri Hierosolyma vasa templi, quæ translata fuerant Babelem; quare dixit illi Jeremias inter disceptandum, Consentaneum est fundamentis apud nos servatis, etiamsi non confirmetur vaticinium meum, neque victoriâ potiatur Nebuchadnezzar, nec reportentur vasa Domûs Domini, sicut tu [futurum] affirmas, non tamen esse in his, quod me prophetam esse mendacem arguat, cùm fieri possit ut Dominus misereatur eorum; verum si non confirmetur dictum tuum, neque reducantur vasa domus Domini,

certò constabit illud quod tibi arrogas, falsum esse, neque certò constabit te prophetam esse, donec eventu comprobentur promissa ista de bonis à te facta. Hoc est quod dicit, Veruntamen audi nunc verbum hoc quod ego loquor in auribus tuis, & in auribus universi populi. Prophetæ qui fuerunt ante me & ante te à sæculo, & prophetaverunt ad terras multas & super regna magna, de bello, & malo & peste: Propheta, qui prophetabit de pace, cum venerit verbum prophetæ, sciatur propheta quem miserit Dominus in veritate: quo dicto innuit, quod ad Prophetas illos qui prophetarunt de bono & malo, non constare ex malo quod comminati sunt, verè an falso sibi prophetiam arrogaverint; verum argumentum est veracitatis ipsorum, cum bonum, quod promiserunt, ratum fuerit.

Ubi verò de vocatione Prophetæ certò constiterit, juxta fundamenta præmissa, notæque fuerit famæ, ut in Samuele, Elia, &c. Prophetæ isti concessum est, illud in Lege facere, quod alii nemini; illud nempe quod descripturus sum, scil. cum omitti jubet præceptum quodvis ex affirmativorum numero, aut perpetrari quicquam quod præceptum aliquod negativum prohibeat, necesse esse dicto ipsius per omnia parere, & quicumque transgressus fuerit illud, reum fieri mortis cælitus infligendæ, causâ Idololatriæ exceptâ. Atque hæc est sententia Sapientum in Talmude, ubi dicunt, In omnibus, si dicat tibi Propheta, transgredere verba Legis, auscultes ipsi, exceptâ Idololatriâ; verum hæc conditione, ne perpetuum velit esse mandatum istud, dicens præcepisse Dominum hac de re, ut ita fiat usque in sæculum, sed tantum jubeat illud per occasionem aliquam, nec nisi ad tempus designatum: atque Propheta ipse, quoties jussit mandatum aliquod ex iis quæ præcepit Dominus per Mosem, transgredi, si interrogatus fuerit, respondeat, transgressionem istam non fore perpetuam, sed impræsentiarum tantum committendam, quemadmodum facere solet Senatus in sententiâ ad breve tempus valiturâ. Sicut fecit Eliab in monte Carmel, quando obtulit sacrificium extra Hierusolyma, etiam post extructum illic Sanctuarium; quod quidem factum perpetratores, absque jussu Prophetico, reum fecisset excidii, utpote à Deo prohibitum in textu Legis, ubi dicit, Ne fortè offeras oblationes tuas in omni loco quem videbis, poenâ excidii constitutâ in eum qui ita faceret, quemadmodum dicit de eo qui extra [locum illum] obtulerit, sanguis imputabitur viro isti, sanguinem fudit, & excindetur vir ille è populo suo. Quòd si ab ipso (c. p.) inter offerendum in monte Carmel quæsitum fuisset, quid dices, si instar hujus facti perpetuò fecerimus? dicturus fuisset, nequaquam hoc licere, atque illum qui extra (Jerusalem) offerret, excidii poenâ teneri: hoc autem jam factum, quòd palam faciamus mendacium Prophetarum Baal, atque illud quod præ se ferunt, irritum faciamus. Nec non sicut fecit Elisha, cum juberet Israelem in expugnatione Moabi, arbores frugiferas excindere, dicens, Et omnem arborem pulchram deficietis, cum Deus hoc facere vetuerit dicendo, Non perdetis arborem, securim ipsi ad-movendo: quòd si interrogatus fuisset Elisha, num sublatum esset hoc mandatum, liceretque nobis in apud nos constat, sicut descripsimus, jufferit nos die Sabbati omnes, tam fœminas quàm viros, surgentes ignem accendere, quo paremus nobis instrumenta bellica quibus instruamur, ac loci alicujus incolas eodem die occidere, eorum opes diripere; & mulieribus ad libitum uti; oporteret nos, qui Mosis legem accepimus, contra locum istum nihil cunctantes insurgere, sicut nobis præcepit, omniâque quæ suggesserit, expeditè ac diligenter facere, sine scrupulo aut hæsitazione credentes omnia quæ fecerimus ipso Sabbati die, scil. dum ignem accendimus, opera facimus, occidimus & pugnamus, præceptum esse, cujus speremus nos à Deo præmium [consequuturos] quòd auscultaverimus mandato Prophetæ, cujus jussui obedire [tenemur] vi præcepti affirmativi, sicut mandavit nobis Dominus per Mosen, ⁷ Ipsam audietis, & per traditionem accepimus. In omni, si dixerit tibi Propheta, transgredere verba Legis, auscultes ei, exceptâ Idololatriâ. Quoniam si dixerit nobis, Colas hoc tantum die figuram [aliquam] aut suffitum facias stellæ isti ad unam tantum horam, morte afficietur, neque ei auscultabitur. Quod si quis, qui sibi religionis ac probitatis cultor videtur, fueritque senex ætate provectus, dixerit, Cùm simus senes, & tot annos vixerimus, neque unquam mandatum aliquod transgressi fuerimus, nunc tandem die Sabbati surgentes transgrediemur in re vetita sub pœna lapidationis, & exhibimus ad pugnam, quod ad me autem, ego nihil omnino [dicam vel faciam,] & sunt præter me qui sufficiant, & magna hominum copia qui rem istam præstare valeant; hic certè immorigerum se præbet verbo Domini, & reus est mortis cœlitus infligendæ, cùm transgressus sit illud quod jussit Propheta, quia qui præcepit [observari] Sabbatum, præcepit etiam observari cujusvis Prophetæ mandatum & decretum. Quisque transgressus fuerit mandatum ipsius, ejus, quod commemoravimus, supplicii reus est, atque hoc est quod dicit Dominus, Erit autem ut vir qui non auscultaverit verbis meis, quæ loquetur nomine meo, ego requiram ab ipso. Interea tamen si quis nodum afriktionem die isto Sabbati, dum ea præstat opera, nexuerit, cujus opus non sit in re aliqua quæ conferat ad perficiendum illud à Propheta præceptum, reus est lapidationis. Quod si vel ipse Propheta, qui nobis illa die isto Sabbati facienda præcepit, dixerit, (& nos jussui suo obsequentes habuerit) Est terminus [itineris diei] Sabbati [præscriptus] uno minus bis mille cubitorum, aut unius & bis mille, atque hoc obtenderit indicatum fuisse sibi per revelationem, non per viam disquisitionis, aut argumentationis, hic jam pseudopropheta est, strangulatione è medio tollendus. Juxta hoc ergò conjecturam sume de omnibus quæ præceperit tibi Propheta, & si qua reperies in Scriptura è mandatis Prophetarum, quæ contraria sint alicui Legis præcepto, clavis [tibi] erit hæc regula ad ea omnia [intelligenda.] Atque hoc uno distinguitur Propheta ab aliis hominibus in Legis præceptis declarandis. Quòd autem ad disquisitionem & argumentationem & intelligentiam in Lege, perinde se habet ac reliqui sapientes ejusdem cum ipso ordinis, qui prophetia instructi non sunt. Quòd si cùm interpretationem aliquam attulerit, aliâque afferat quispiam non Propheta, dicat Propheta ille, Dixit mihi Dominus interpretationem meam veram esse, non au-scultabitis ipsi. Imò si vel mille Prophetæ, qui omnes sint instar Eliæ & Elisbæ, interpretationem afferant, sapientes autem mille & unus aliam illi contrariam, ad plures inclinandum est, & facere [tenentur homines] juxta sententiam sapientum mille & unius, non juxta sententiam mille Prophetarum illustrium. Atque ita dicunt Sapientes, Certè, si diceret mihi illud Joshuah filius Nun ore suo, non auscultarem illi, neque audirem illud ab ipso. Et similiter etiam dixerunt, Si venerit Elias & dixerit, Discalceationem peragunt calceo; audiunt ipsum: sin sandalio, non audiunt ipsum: quo innuunt non [fieri] ullo modo augmentationem in præcepto ex parte prophetiæ. Quod si prætenderit Propheta, dixisse ipsi Dominum sententiam in præcepto tali, tali modo ferendam, atque esse argumentationem τὴν δ᾿ἐνὶ & veram, morte afficietur Propheta iste, quoniam Pseudopropheta est, juxta fundamenta à nobis posita, quia non est demissio [legis] post legatum primum, neque addere licet vel diminuire: non est in calis, neque remisit nos Dominus ad Prophetas, sed ad doctos argumentandi peritos; neque enim dixit, Et accedes ad Prophetam; verum dixit, Et accedes ad Sacerdotes, Levitas, aut ad Judicem, &c. Perquam multa autem adduxerunt Sapientes in hanc sententiam; quæ certè vera est.

Cum autem moreretur Joshua (cui pax) quasunque traditione acceperat interpretationes, nec non quæcunque ipsius tempore in lucem prolatae sunt sine ulla [inter Doctores] dissensione, & quæcunque, cum de iis incidisset dissensio, ex plurium consensu decisæ sunt, commendatas reliquit Senioribus illis, de quibus dicit Scriptura, ² [Et omnibus diebus seniorum qui post Josuam diu vixerunt.] Deinde commendarunt seniores isti quæcunque traditione acceperant, Prophetis (q. p.) Et Prophetarum alii aliis; ita ut nullum esset sæculum in quo non inquisitum fuerit in sententiam legis, & conclusiones inde elicita: Uniuscujusque sæculi hominibus sermones eorum qui ipsos præcesserant pro fundamento ponentibus, unde conclusiones educerent atque elicerent. De fundamentis autem traditione acceptis nulla fuit dissensio usque ad tenipus viro-rum Synagogæ magnæ, qui fuerunt Haggai, Zachariah, Malachi, Daniel, Hananiah, Misbael, Azariah, Ezra Scriba, & Nehemiah f. Chacalia, Mordecai, & Zerubbabel fil. Shealtiel, cum aliis qui hisce prophetis conjuncti sunt, quibus perferrent numerum centum & viginti seniorum ex inclytis & præcipuæ autoritatis viris, aliisque ejusmodi, qui etiam in sententiam Legis inquirentes, uti fecerunt qui ante ipsos fuerant, decreta decreverunt & constitutiones ordinarunt. Ultimus autem virorum cœtus istius sancti primus fuit Sapientum quorum in Mishnah fit mentio: sc. Simæon Justus, qui tunc temporis Sacerdos summus fuit. Post quos, cum processu temporis ventum est ad Rabbenu Hakkadsh [Doctorem nostrum sanctum] cui pax, qui fuit sæculi sui phoenix, atque unicum temporis decus, vir certè in quo [in unum] collegerat Deus dotes eximias & virtutes eas ob quas apud συγγερονες suos meritis est appellari Rabbenu Hakkadsh, cum nomen ipsi esset Judah, quique in summo scientiæ & celsitudinis gradu constitutus fuit, sicut dixerunt, A diebus

tatis & humilitatis, & abstinentiæ à voluptatibus gradu, uti etiam dixerunt, Ex quo mortuus est Ribbi, cessavit humilitas & timor peccati; hominum insuper eloquentissimus, & linguæ Hebraicæ callentissimus, adeo ut explicationem verborum legis difficiliorum è sermone fervorum & ministro- rum ipsius discerent Sapientes, sicut in Talmude manifestum est, cuique tanta fuit opum copia & rerum omnium affluentia, ut de ipso dicerent, Præfatus stabulorum Ribbi ditior erat Sapore rege, ipse beneficentiam erga literatos & studiosos ex- exercens, legem in Israele confirmavit, sententiis, dictis, & differentiis ore traditis à Mose usque ad tempora sua collectis, cum & ipse ex iis esset qui ore tradita referebant: utpote qui referret quæ acceperat à Simeone patre suo, ut ille à Gama- liele patre suo, ille à Simeone patre suo, ille ab Hillele patre suo, ille à Shemaiah & Abtalione præceptoribus suis, illi à Juda Tabbai filio, & Simeone Sbatabi filio, illi à Josua Pherakai filio & Nathao Arbelita, illi à Jose Jozeri f. & Jose Fuchanani filio, illi ab Antigono Socensi, ille à Simeone iusto, ille ab Ezra, (quoniam ipse è superstitibus Synagogæ magnæ fuit,) Ezra verò à Baruco Nerie filio, præceptore ipsius, Baruc au- tem Nerie f. à Jeremia, ut & Jeremias sine dubio acceperat à Prophetis, qui alii ab aliis acceperant usque ad Seniores, qui Josua, quæ ipse à Mose retulit, accepta tulerunt. Collectis igitur sententiis & dictis [istis,] manum admovit componendæ Mishnæ, quæ omnium quæ in Lege scripta sunt præceptorum explicationem contineret, partim tradi- tionibus à Mose (cui pax) ore acceptis, partim consequentiis argumentationum elicitis de quibus nulla est dissensio constans: partim conclusionibus circa quas contigit dissensio inter duos argumen- tandi modos: quas ergò una cum ista dissensione recensuit, [dicens] N. sic, N. verò sic dicit: quod si quis pluribus contrarius fuerit, sententiam sin- gularis istius, & sententiam plurium retulit; quod ob causas fecit valde utiles, quarum in Mishna in- tit. Adayoth, [seu de testimoniis] meminit, quas & ipse commemoraturus sum, sed [explicato] prius magni momenti, quod hic referre visum est, capite: scil. Sacerdotis, cum cœperit fornicari, patrem suum polluit, igne comburetur: non necessario esse juxta hanc sententiam, nisi cum nupta fuerit, flatuendum. Similiter eò quòd decrevit Deus de illa, apud quam non reperta fuerint signa virginitatis: scil. lapidandam esse, non invenerimus in controversiam vocatum inde à Mose ad hoc usque tempus, non esse hoc [intelligendum] de aliâ quam quæ uxor viri fuerit, & quam manifestò probatum fuerit stuprum commississe post contracta sponsalia, postquam adhibitis testibus admonita fuerit; & si qua hujusmodi sunt ex omnibus præceptis, nulla est circa ea controversia, quia explicationes sunt usque à Mose ore traditæ, de quibus eorûmq. similibus dixerunt, Totius Legis tradita sunt universalis & particularia de Sinai. Quamvis autem ore tradita fuerint, ita ut nulla de iis sit controversia, nihilominus tamen verbo cœlitus dimisso hoc proprium est, ut ex eo eruantur interpretationes istæ variis modis comparisonum, allegationum, allusionum, & indiciorum in textu occurrentibus. Cum autem videris eos in Talmude disputantes, & dissentientes in arenâ disquisitionis, & probationes afferentes ad [confirmandam] aliquam harum interpretationum & similium, e. g. cum dicunt, de dicto Domini, Fructum arboris decoris, forsân est iste malum granatum, aut cotoneum, aut aliûs quispiam fructus; donec probationem de eo sumpserint è dicto ejus Fructum arboris; dixerintque aliqui [innui] arborem, cujus & ligni & fructûs eadem esset ratio; alii, fructum qui in arbore sua ab anno in annum permanet; alius, fructum qui juxta omnes aquas crescat: non hoc factum est quod res illis difficilis videretur, donec his probationibus eam confirmaverint; cum viderimus sine dubio malum citrinum cum ramo palmæ quotannis à Josue ad nostra usque tempora acceptum, nullâ de hoc motâ controversiâ; verùm quòd indicium tantùm quæsierint hujus interpretationis ore traditæ quod è textu occurreret: eodem modo se habet probatio quam attulerunt de myrto; nec non ex quâ confirmant, multâ pecuniariâ teneri eum qui socium suum membro aliquo privaverit; ut & ex quâ ostendunt filiam Sacerdotis, cujus ibi mentio fit, intelligi eam quæ viri uxor sit: eodémque modo se habent reliqua his similia; atque hic sensus est dicti ipsorum, Universalis ejus & particularia ejus. i. e. Res, quas vides nos elicere [argumentis] ab universali & particulari [desumptis] nec non reliquis tredecim modorum [argumentandi], eæ traditæ sunt à Mose è Sina: quæ tamen nihilominus quamvis à Mose traditæ, non appellantur Constitutio Mosis è Sina. Neque enim dicimus, [quod dicunt] Fructus arboris decoris est malum citrinum, esse hoc constitutionem Mosis è Sina; aut ut Qui socium suum laeserit, pecuniam numeret, esse Constitutionem Mosis è Sina; cum hoc antea pro fundamento apud nos positum sit, Interpretationes [istas] omnes à Mose esse, & reperiri ipforum indicia quædam in textu, aut inde modo aliquo concludendi (uti diximus) elici: Si quæ autem dicta sint, quorum nullum occurrit in textu indicium, neque ullam habeant ab eo dependentiam, neque inde elici argumentando possint, de his tantùm dicunt, esse Constitutionem Mosis è Sina. Ubicunque autem producet aliquam harum constitutionum in sequenti explicatione Misna, eam loco suo explicabimus, adjuvante Deo. Juxta fundamenta ergò à nobis præmissa, distribuenda erunt judicia in lege posita in quinque classes.

Classis prima, [completitur] interpretationes quæ Mosi acceptæ feruntur, ad quæ in textu digitus intenditur, aut quæ inde argumentando elici possunt; atque de his nulla omnino movetur controversia, verum statim ac dixerit quispiam ita traditione accepi, litigationi finis imponitur.

Classis secunda ea [continet] judicia, de quibus dicitur [esse ea] Constitutionem Moysi à Sina, nullâ autem probatione [nituntur] uti jam diximus, atque hæc etiam inter ea sunt, de quibus nulla est controversia.

Classis tertia ea [continet] judicia quæ variis ratiocinandi modis concluduntur, & de quibus controvertitur, uti diximus, & de quibus statuitur juxta sententiam plurium, uti præmisimus, [atque] hoc quando obscura est speculatio, ideòque dicunt, Si constitutio sit recipimus eam, sin sub judicio cadat, est quod respondeamus. Incidit autem controversia, & disputatio in iis de quibus nihil traditione acceptum est, quare invenies eos per totum Talmudem inquirere in modos concludendi, propter quas accidit differentia inter differentes, ac dicere, Propter quid contendunt, aut quænam est ratio & N. aut quid est inter eos dissensionis? Hæc enim hæc ratione quibusdam locis adducunt, ut ostendant quid ansam præbuerit controversiæ, dicentes, & N. tali dicto nititur, & N. tali: & hujusmodi alia.

Quod si quis putaverit constitutiones istas, de quibus controvertitur, traditione etiam acceptas fuisse à Mose, ortam autem esse controversiam istam ex errore aut oblivione, dum alter verum retulerit, alter autem in narratione sua erraverit, aut oblitus fuerit, vel non totum à præceptore suo acceperit quod accipere oportuit, & sententiam suam probare velit ex isto ipsorum dicto, Ex quo multiplicati sunt discipuli Shammæi & Hillelis, qui non quantum opus est studuerunt, multiplicata est dissensio in Israël, & facta est lex quasi duæ leges; hoc (novit Deus) dictu turpe & valde absurdum est, & sermo ejus qui, cum non rectè res percipiat, nec fundamenta teneat, & de fama personarum quibus accepta fertur legis traditio detrahit: hoc ergò totum falsum; nec aliud est quod inducit homines ad falsam hanc opinionem fovendam, quàm quòd non rectè perpendant verba Sapientum, quæ in Talmude reperiuntur, cum invenerint explicationem Mosi acceptam ferri, (quod verum est uti præmisimus) nec distinxerint inter fundamenta traditione accepta, & consequentias quæ [argumentando] eliciuntur. Tu verò quacunque tandem de re dubitaveris, hoc tibi extra dubium sit, cum reperiatur inter discipulos Shammæi & discipulos Hillelis differentia, cum dicant, Everrendam esse primò domum, deinde abluendas manus, aut lavandas primò manus, deinde everrendam domum, neutrum horum dictorum à Mose traditione acceptum fuisse, neque de Sina relatum, causam autem differentiæ inter ipsos fuisse illud quod fertur; nempe quòd altera harum [sectarum] vetuerit populo terræ uti, altera permiserit. Eodémque modo [se res habet] in omnibus hujusmodi dissensionibus, quæ sunt rami à ramorum ramis [profecti.] Quod ad dictum autem ipsorum, Ex quo multiplicati sunt discipuli Shammæi & Hillelis, qui non quantum opus est studio legis incubuerunt, multiplicata est dissensio in Israël, sensus ejus valdè perspicuus est. Nam cum duo pares fuerint intelligentiâ, perspicaciâ, & fundamentorum unde eruuntur consequentiæ cognitione, non accidit inter eos, in iis quæ ratiocinando eliciunt, discrepantia; vel si aliquando contigerit, certè quàm minima est: uti non reperimus unquam differentiam inter Shammæum & Hillelem, nisi in particularibus quibusdam ritibus; quod inde inde provenit, quia modus ratiocinandi quo usus est uterque eorum, in iis quæ ratiocinando concluderunt, valde admodum similis erat; nec non fundamenta, quæ apud unum concessa, fundamentis quæ pro concessis apud alterum habebantur, similia: ubi verò elanguit discipulorum diligentia, & infirmata est ratiocinatio eorum præ ea quæ Hilleli & Shammæo præceptoribus ipsorum fuit, orta est inter ipsos inter disputandum, in multis rebus dissensio, cum esset ratiocinatio uniuscujusque eorum secundum mensuram intellectus ipsius eaque que tenebat fundamenta: ipsi interim in his omnibus minimè culpandi sunt, quoniam non requirimus, cum duo inter se disputant, ut disputent secundum intellectum Josue & Phineasi, neque ideo in dubio relinquimur, cum inter se differant, quod non sint instar Shammæi & Hillelis, vel aliorum qui ipsis præstant; cum Deus Optimus: Max: non in hoc obsequium nostrum postulet; verum hoc à nobis requiratur, ut auscultemus doctis, cujusque tandem sæculi, sicut dixit [Aut ad judicem qui fuerit diebus illis, & inquires, &c.] Atque hoc modo orta est discrepantia, non quod erraverint in iis quæ tradita sunt referendis, uno quod verum est referente, altero quod falsum. Quàm perspicuum autem est quod diximus animum advertenti, & quanti regula hæc in lege momenti?

Classis quarta [continet] decreta quæ statuerunt Prophetæ & Sapientes singulis sæculis, ut sepis & munimenti vicem legi præstarent: atque hæc sunt quæ jussit Deus constitui terminis universalibus, cum dicit, [Et custodietis custodiam meam] quod, referente traditione [sonat] Pacite custodiam custodiam meæ. Atque hæc sunt que appellant Sapientes [Gezerotb] Constitutiones. Et in his etiam accidit discrepantia; dum uni visum fuerit re aliquâ interdici, ob causam aliquam, alteri autem idem visum non fuerit: ita frequenter in Talmude [occurrit] R. N. statuit, hac aut illa de causâ. R. N. verò non statuit. Atque hæc etiam una est e causis discrepantiæ. Annon vides Carnem volucris cum lacte [non comedendam] constitutionem esse à Magistris nostris ad homines procul arcendos à transgressione? cum non vetet lex præter carnem bestię & feræ, at interdixerunt Sapientes carne volucris, ad remotius abigendos à re illicitâ. Suntque ex ipsis quibus non arridet hæc Constitutio; nam R. Josi Galilæus permittebat carnem volucris cum lacte, adeo ut omnes incolæ illius regionis eam comederent, uti manifestum est in Talmude. Cum autem contingerit ut de aliqua hujusmodi constitutionum inter omnes conveniat, tum eam transgredi nullo modo licet. Et cum passim notum sit in Israele eâ re interdici, non est ut in contrarium isti constitutioni eatur, adeo ut vel ipsis prophetis non liceat de ea detrachere, juxta expressum Talmudis testimonium, quod vel ipse Elias non possit diminuerè aliquam ex octodecim rebus quas statuerunt Schola Shammæi et Schola Hillelis; & causam ejus reddiderunt dicentes, Quia prohibitio ipsarum nota est per totam Israelem.

Classis quinta earum est constitutionum quæ factæ sunt per modum determinationis legalis & convenientiæ cum rebus que inter homines fieri solent, à quibus nec additur legi aliquid nec detrahitur: aut de rebus quæ hominibus usui sunt in præceptis legis [observandis;] atque hæc sunt quæ appellarunt Sa-

pientes Ordinationes & Ritus; quæ etiam nullo modo transgredi licet, cum inter totam [Judeorum] sectam de iis conveniat; vetat autem Salomô ea transgredi, cum ait, Et si quis perrumpat sepem, mordebit eum serpens. Hujusmodi constitutiones multæ admodum sunt in Talmude & Mishna memoriæ proditæ, quarum aliquæ circa vetita & permissa [versantur], aliæ circa res pecuniarias, aliæ ordinationes sunt à prophetis constitutæ, cujusmodi sunt constitutiones Mosis, Josue & Ezræ. Quemadmodum dixerunt, Moses ordinavit Israeli, ut interrogent & disquirant de ritibus Paschatis in Paschate &c. Dixerunt etiam, Moses ordinavit [quæ] ad alimentum [spectant] eo tempore quo descendit Manna. Constitutiones autem Josue & Ezræ multæ sunt; sunt & Constitutiones quæ particularibus quibusdam Sapientibus acceptæ feruntur, ut cum dicunt, Statuit Hillel Prozbul [seu Constitutionem de solvendo.] Statuit Magister noster Gamaliel senex; Statuit Magister noster Johannes Zacchai f: ita & passim occurrit in Talmude, Statuit Rabbi N. Statuit R. N. Aliæ sunt [rursus] Constitutiones quæ toti cœtui acceptæ feruntur, ut cum dicunt, In Ufa statuerunt: item, Statuerunt Sapientes, aut Constitutio Sapientum: atque hujusmodi passim occurrunt. Omnes autem sententiæ quæ in Mishna recensentur, in has quinque Classes distribuuntur, Ut sint ex illis interpretationes quæ Mosis nomine traduntur, ad quas in textu digitus intenditur, aut quæ ratiocinando elici possint; 2. Aliæ quæ sunt Constitutio Mosis è Sina. 3. Aliæ quæ argumentatione eliciuntur, in quibus est discrepantia. 4. Aliæ Decreta. 5. Aliæ Constitutiones. Jam verò causa ob quam recensuit discrepantiam quæ contigerit inter duos concludendi modos, in rebus circa quas accidit dissensio, hæc est, quam tibi descripturus sum: Quod sc. si receptas tantum sententias de quibus nulla est controversia recensuisset, nullâ dictorum quibus non est praxis conformis habitâ ratione, fieri posset ut veniret aliquando post ipsum qui contrarium referret ejus juxta quod formatur praxis, vel ab ipso qui sententiæ isti contradixit, vel ab alio qui idem cum illo senserit, atque ita oriatur in animis nostris suspicio, ac diceremus, Quî fit ut tradat iste, vir fide dignus, rem talem vetitam esse, cum expresse de ea statuat Mishna quod licita sit? aut è contra: at cum jam notæ sint nobis sententiæ [discrepantes] obstrueta est hæc rima, cum dixerit, qui majorum sententias refert, Audivi hoc aut illud vetitum esse; respondentibus nobis, Verum dicis, atqui ex sententia † N. at totus cœtus contrarium statuit; aut, ô d'ava contrarium asserit; & praxis est juxta sententiam ejus qui illi contradicit, vel quod melius argumentetur, vel quod aliud dictum quo ipsius sententia confirmatur invenimus. Causa autem cur sententiam unius alicujus, & sententiam [diversam] plurium recenset, est, quod consuetudo sit juxta unius [istius] sententiam; ac docere te voluerit, quod cum concludendi modus manifestus fuerit, etsi ab uno profectus, recipienda sit illius sententia vel contradicente multitudine. Quod verò aliquando recenset sententiam alicujus, deinde ab ea recedat, e. g. cum dicit, Assacla Shammæi ita dixerunt, assacla Hillelis ita: deinde, sententiâ mutatâ, Assacla Hillelis idem docuerunt quod assacla Shammæi, causa est ut te doceat inquirendam esse veritatem, atque eligendum quod rectum: cum isti Senes Magni, præstantes, illustres, magnâ scientiâ, atque intellectu perfectio præditi, cum tamen dicta ejus, qui ipsis contradiceret, meliora esse dictis suis & accuratius perpenſa animadverterent; mutatâ suâ, ipsius sen-sententiam amplexi sunt; quanto magis reliqui homines, cum viderint veritatem ab adversarii partibus stare, obsequuntur, neque amplius pertinaciter contendunt? atque hoc est quod dixit Dominus, Veritatem, veritatem, persequeris: & in eandem sententiam Sapientes, Confessionem præbe veritati, i. e. Etiam si possis te [è manibus opponentis] argumentis sophisticis eripere, cum tamen noveris sermonem alterius (quem argumento tuo manifesto premis, vel præ ipsius infirmitate, vel quod ipse valeas [alios] in errorem inducere,) verum esse, in ipsius sententiam, omisâ contentione, descendas. Cumque jam in animo haberet librum istum ad hunc modum componere, visum ipsi est ita eum distribuere ut sex ejus partes constitueret; quarum pars Prima est de præceptis quæ observanda sunt circa terræ fætus, veluti de Heterogoneis, de Intermissione, de Præputio, de Oblationibus, Decimis, aliisque Debitis. Secunda, de temporibus [anni] & festis, & circa ipsa observandis, & diversis eorum ritibus, quid in iis vetitum sit, quid gratum, quid permissum, & quæ unoquoque horum temporum ritus & præcepta conjunctim præstare deceat. Pars tertia, de mulieribus, & distincta jurum quæ inter viros & foeminas intercedunt explicatione, cujusmodi literæ nuptiales sunt, leviratio, discalceatio, sponsalia, literæ repudii, & quæ dicenda sunt in omnibus hisce capitibus. Pars quarta, de judiciis & controversiis quæ inter homines oriuntur in commerciis, pactis, communi jure fundorum, & ejusmodi aliis. Pars quinta, de oblationibus, juxta distinctos earum ritus, & diversis earum speciebus. Pars sexta, de purificationibus, & quæ ipsis contraria sunt. Unamquamque autem harum partium Seder, i. e. Ordinem, appellavit. Primam partem, Seder Zeraim, i. e. feminum. Secundam, Seder Moed, i. e. festorum. Tertiam, Seder Nafim, i. e. mulierum. Quartam, Seder Nezikin, i. e. damnorum. Quintam, Seder Kodaschim, i. e. sanctitatum. Sextam, Seder Taboroth, purificationum. Idè autem orsus est à Seder Zeraim, quoniam in eo continentur judicia de præceptis quæ propriè spectant ad ea quæ producit terra: cum terræ fœtus alimentum præbeant animalibus, neque fieri possit ut homo nisi alimento sumpto in vivis conservetur, Deum aliquo cultûs genere colat; ideòque sermonem de præceptis propriè ad ea quæ è terra nascuntur spectantibus præmisit: cui deinde adjunxit Seder Moed, quoniam is est textûs Biblici ordo; sicut dicit Dominus, Et sex annis seras terram tuam, & congregabis proventum ejus, in septimo verò relinques eam & dimittes eam, &c. & post, Sex diebus facies opera tua, &c. Tribus vicibus festum ages mihi in unoquoque anno. Deinde visum est illi judicia de mulieribus reliquis litibus præmittere, secuto vestigia textûs sacri, quoniam ita fecit Dominus [dicens] Cum vendiderit quispiam filiam suam, &c. Cum rixati fuerint viri, & percusserint mulierem, &c. Deinde, Et si cornu petierit bos, &c. quare præmisit Seder Nafim & Seder Nezikin. Hæc autem quatuor argumenta complectitur liber Exodi, scil. argumentum Seder Zeraim, Seder Moed, Seder Nafim, & Seder Nezikin. Tum à libro Exodi contulit se ad librum Leviticum juxta libri cœlitus lati feriem. Post Seder Nezikin ergò posuit Kodaschim, deinde Seder Taboroth, quoniam ita se habet ordo textûs Sacri. lutionibus & purificationibus, quoniam [præcepta] de purificationibus initium habent à [sectione], Fuit autem die octavo, &c. Cùmque jam complexus esset sex genera ista, sub quibus comprehenduntur omnia præcepta [Legis;] visum est ei parti unumquodque eorum in eas Species quas oportuit (quarum unamquàmque appellavit Maffietha;) Deinde ea quæ de unaquaque specie dicuntur, in sectiones, quarum unamquàmque vocavit Perek [i. e. Caput.] Deinde ea quæ in unoquoque capite dicuntur in Sectiones, quò facilius reddatur quod differitur, tum ad memoriâ tenendum, tum ad alios docendum: & unamquàmque harum sectionum minorum nominavit Halacah. Illa autem quæ dicta sunt in Seder Zeraim dispersit eo quo descripturus sum modo: Orsus est primò à Beracoth [i. Benedictionibus] cujus rei causa est, quod Medicus peritus, cùm ejus qui bonâ utitur valetudine, valetudinem conservare cupit eodem quo jam est statu, primo loco rectè parandum ipsius alimentum curat: visum est ergò [Doctori] isti φίλαλγος initium fumere à benedictionibus, cum non liceat cuiquam nisi præmissâ benedictione edere, quare optimum illi visum est ordiri à sermone de benedictionibus, ut ita alimentum præparatione rationali præpararet. Deinde visum est illi [quò caveret] ne sermoni [ipsius] de re aliqua, quicquam deesset, de omnibus in universum benedictionibus, quæ ad alimenta & præcepta spectant, loqui. [Quare] cùm nullum sit præceptum quod unicuique quotidie incumbit, præter Keriah Shema, i. e. [Lectionem Audi] tantùm, neque expediret loqui de benedictionibus Lectionis Shema, antequam de ipsa lectione verba fecisset, initium fuit à [capite] Quando legunt lectionem Shema; iisque quæ cum ipso conjuncta sunt: deinde reversus ad Ordinis scopum, qui est de præceptis ad terram spectantibus dicere, orsus est à Masseceth Peah [i. e. anguli] post eam de benedictionibus [præmissam;] quoniam omnia debita quæ pertinent ad semen, tum demum ad illud pertinent postquam demessum fuerit, excepto Peah [i. e. angulo pauperibus relinquendo] qui de spica adhuc in terra manente debetur, ideòque sermonem de eo primo loco posuit: post Peah sequitur Demai, de re dubia, quoniam & pauperibus ad eam jus est sicut ad angulum. Juxta illud quod dicunt, Edendum præbent pauperibus illud de quo dubium est [desumptæ sint inde decimæ annon.] Post Demai autem Cilaim, Quoniam eo ordine procedit textus Scripturæ S. in [Sectione] Sancti eritis, Non finies metere angulum agri tui: & post illud, agrum tuum non seres diverso semine. Deinde post Cilaim [subjunxit] Shebiith [i. e. de anno septimo.] Æquum autem fuerat, ut Cilaim sequeretur Masseceth Orlah, [i. e. de præputio] quoniam is ordo est quem observat Scriptura S. nisi vidisset præputium non esse [quid] necessarium: quamdiu e. non plantatur non tenetur præputii [jure;] at annus septimus necessarius est. Deinde cùm intermissio [anni septimi] peculiari capite legis præcipiatur, ideo præmisit sermonem de Intermissione. Post Shebiith autem posuit Masseceth Terumah [i. e. Oblationis] quoniam [oblatio] illa, scil. Terumah, primum est, quod è femine defumitur debitum: post Terumah autem Maasher risben [i. e. tractatum de decimis primis;] quoniam post Terumah proximè defumitur. Post Maasbor risbon, Maasber Shen, [i. e. de decimis secundis] ordine [suo.] Deinde Masseceth Challah [de placenta;] quoniam postquam exempta fuerint de femine debita ista, uti descripsimus, [scil. Terumah, Decima prima, Decima secunda,

secunda,] tunc immolito [frumento] fit ex eo farina, quæ depſitur & tenetur placentâ. Ubi autem abſolutus eſt ſermo de ſemine & ex eo debitis, cœpit ſermonem inſtituere de fructibus, ideoque poſt [tractatum] de placenta, locutus eſt de Orlab [i. e. præputio arborum.] Deinde de Biccurim [primitiis] eo ordine quem obſervat Scriptura S. uxorem ejus, inter patrem ad filiam ejus, &c. Perfectis autem jam nuptiis & admissâ in thalamum [sponsâ,] penes [virum] est vota ejus irrita facere, ideoque Nedarim subjunxit [tractatui] Cetuboth.
Tractatui autem Nedarim, Neziruth [de Naziræa-quare post Nedarim statim Neziruth collocavit.

Finitisque [quæ de] matrimonio [dicenda erant] &
quæ inde pendent de irritis faciendis votis, dicere
aggressus est de divortio; quia post matrimonium locum habet divortium, & Gittin [de libellis repu-dii] post Neziruth posuit: post Gittin autem Sotab [seu de muliere declinante,] quin & hoc sub divortio comprehenditur; cum ubi adulterium commi-serit [fœmina] compellantur conjuges ad divortium, prout loco suo explicabitur. Deinde post Sotab, Kid-

Seder Nashim. Superest autem quæstio, Quare ultimo loco posuerit [tractatum] Kiddushim, cum primo potius ponendus esset, & ante Cetuboth collocandus. Quod si responderis ipsum, eum tractatui Cetuboth ideò non præmississe, ne [tract.] Yebamoth à [tract.] Cetuboth separaret, quorum scopus idem est,
sc. Maritatio, atque ita necessariò continuandus fu-erit de iis sermo, uti diximus, at saltem ante Gittin ponendus [videtur,] ut ita ordine rerum primus locus tribuatur [tractatui] Kiddushim, deinde et Gittin est, respondendum [ergo] est, fecisse ipsum hoc quò Scripturæ ordinem imitaretur, quæ prius de divortio loquitur quàm de sponsalibus, uti in illo quod à Deo dictum est, Scribetque ei libellum repudii, &
dabit in manus ejus, & dimittet eam è domo sua, &
egredietur è domo ejus, & ibit & erit viro alteri.
È dicto ejus [eritque viro alteri] didicimus, caput de capitibus sponsalium, uti explicatur [isto Rabbi- norum dicto] Comparat permanfionem ejus cum viro, cum exitu ejus. Atque ita absoluta est partitio ejus sermonis de mulieribus, septem tractatibus.

Tum pergens partiri sermonem de Damnis, illum
in tractatu primo divisit in tres partes, ortus à Baba Kama [i. porta prima;] cujus scopus est disquirere de damnis, eaque impedire: ut [e. g. in] Bove [cornu-peta] puteo, incendio, vulnere & similibus: neque [certè] Magistratum quicquam prius curare decet, quàm ut damnum ab hominibus prohibeat. Sequitur Baba Metzia [seu porta media,] cujus scopus est disquirere de prætensionibus & depositis, de conductionibus, mutatione, & elocatione, & quæ ad hæc referri convenit; juxta illud quod fecit Scriptura, quæ post judicia de bove [cornupeta] & puteo, & incendio, & capite cum litigaverint viri, locuta est de quatuor custodibus. Deinde Baba Bathra, [porta postrema,] cujus scopus est disquirere quid de divisione fundorum, & de judiciis quæ locum ha-bent in ædibus communibus & vicinis, deque dissolutione commercii ob vitium apparens, deque verbis quæ in vendendo & emendo adhibentur, quid statuendum sit, & de fide jussione, & hæreditatibus: hanc autem classẽ ultimo loco posuit, quoniam tota à traditione [pendet,] estque de rebus quæ conjecturâ nituntur, neque in textu explicata sunt. Cùmque jam judiciorum [rationem] notam fecerat,

cerat, sermonem de iudicibus qui eadem discernunt, instituens, subjunxit tract. Baba Batbra [tract.] [Sanbedrin] [de iudicibus.] Porro tractatus Maccotb [de plagis] in [quibusdam] exemplaribus continuatur cum tractatu Sanbedrin, unusque cum eo censetur, quoniam ubi dixisset, Isti sunt qui strangulantur, continuo ei adjunxerunt, Isti sunt qui vapulant. Hoc autem rectè non fit, verùm ipse seorsim tractatus est, qui connectitur quidem cum Sanbedrin, quoniam nemo denudare terga, & [plagarum] numerum constituere potest exceptis iudicibus, quod à Domino dictum est, ^b Et prostertere faciet ipsum iudex, & plagis cadet eum coram ipso secundum mensuram impietatis ejus in numero.

Post Maccotb autem posuit [tractatum] Shebuoth [de juramentis,] quoniam inter finem istius tractatus & initium hujus similitudo quædam in judiciis accidit, quemadmodum in Talmude memoratur; cui addendum, quod hoc etiam de quo hîc agitur iudicium sit, cùm nemo ad jurandum cogere possit præter iudicem. Absolutoque jam de judiciis & iudicibus sermone, deque iis in quibus propriè versatur iudicis officium, plagis sc. & juramentis imponendis, loqui [pergit] de Edaiotb [testificationibus,] cujus tractatus scopus præcipuus est tradere omnes, quibus testimonium perhibuerunt homines fide digni, sententias, cùm ipsorum testimonium praxeos norma sit, ipsùmque iudicii species quædam; testimonia enim coram iudicibus proferuntur, eodémque modo unumquodque eorum dictorum prolatum fuit in consistorio. Hunc autem tractatum post tractatum Shebuoth posuit, quoniam iuramenta res sunt quibus perpetuò opus est; testimonia autem, declarationes decisionum quibus cùm certis quibusdam temporibus perhibitum esset testimonium coram iudicibus, ea admiserunt. Ea deinde tradere aggressus est quæ statuenda sunt de Idololatria, quoniam & ea [scire] iudici necessarium est, eoque perfectus evadit iudex, cum Idolorum istorum consuetudines, & quæ ad eas requiruntur, calleat, sciâtque quid de illis statuendum sit. Siquidem qui Saturnum cultu Veneris colit, aut Jovem eo modo invocatur quo invocandus est Mars, non est mortis reus, juxta illud quod verâ traditione ad nos delatum est; ultimo autem loco hunc [tractatum] posuit, quoniam [de rebus est quæ] rarò contingunt. Atque absolutis jam omnibus quibus opus habet iudex subjunxit [tractatum] Aboth, [i. de patrum sententiis,] idque duas ob rationes, quarum prima est, ut notam tibi faceret certitudinem allegationum, & traditionis, verè scil. illam successivè [alios ab aliis accepisse,] ideoque deberi honorem viro docto, eumque gradu eminenti collocandum, quòd ad ipsum pervenerit traditio, quia ipse seculo suo perinde est ac illi in seculis suis, atque ita dixerunt, Num inquiremus in consistorium Rabban Gamliel, &c. dixerunt etiam, Samson seculo suo. Hoc enim docentur homines, ne dicat [quis,] num iudicium [†] דאין amplectemur, aut constitutioni [†] דאין acquiescemus? Neque enim ita se res habet, neque enim iudicium [†] דאין, Iudicis est, sed Dei, qui illud nobis præcepit, sicut dixit, Quoniam iudicium Domino est. Estque iudicium unum ab uno ad alterum per continuam temporis seriem traditum. Secunda ratio est, ut in hoc tractatu præcepta omnium Sapientum (q. p.) moralia referat, ut ab illis mores laudabiles addiscamus. Omnium autem maximè his opus habet Iudex; siquidem Idiotæ, si non probè culti fu-fuerint, non hoc omnibus, sed ipsis solis nocet; at Judex, si non probè cultus & subactis moribus fuerit, perit ipse unàque homines universos in perniciem trahit: ideòque primum quod in Abotb occurrit est de instituendis iudicibus, scil. [Estote tardi in iudicio.] Cùm autem rectè instructus fuerit Judex eà, quam docet tractatus Abotb, tarditate & lentà in iudicando festinatione (quoniam si festinaverit forsàn [occurrit] in iudicio isto occultum quid, quemadmodum dicunt p. m. [Sapientes] Judicium profundum quid est,) [cavebit] etiam ne iudicium, cùm perspectum habuerit nihil superesse in eo occulti, protrahat; hoc enim illud est quod appellatur Afflictio iudicii: quinetiam multus erit in interrogandis testibus, & inter interrogandum cavebit ne arripiant è verbis ipsius quod ipsos ad illud quod volunt assequendum dirigat; neque litigantibus argumenta suggeret, quod qui [faciunt] ordinatores iudicum appellantur: neque se facilè vulgo adjunget, ne contemptui habeatur; neque difficilem sese aditu præstabit, ne pereat impotens; neque otia & delicias festabitur, ne omittantur quæ ab ipso præstari debent, & ad levitatem ipsum abducatur concupiscentia; nec aliis præire amet, [aut] præceps [sit] in sententiâ ferendâ, ne suspectus evadat, & in plerisque iudiciis suis ad lites inter partes componendas inclinet. Quod si poterit Judex [efficere] ne omninò jus dicat totâ die, aliter quàm ut lites amicè componat inter dissidentes, certè hoc longè optimum est. Quòd si nequeat [dissidentes] inter se conciliare, jus dicat, ita tamen ne violenter agat; scil. tempora longa condicat, & [illi qui reus perhibetur] se purgandi copiam faciat; imò vel si sermonem protrahat, & ineptè agat; quòd si hoc efficere nequeat, juxta ipsorum allegationes, & quod sibi visum fuerit, decernat, priùs quàm se loco moveat, sententiam ferens. Quemadmodum videmus [majores] (q. p.) fecisse, dum [juberent] ligari manus, afferri flagra, instanter cædi, vestibus nudari, scindi chirographa testibus confirmata, cùm [cuipiam] ipsorum appareret in illis quod hoc necessarium faceret, cum aliis ejusmodi multis: & de hujusmodi feveritate dicunt, Perforabit iudicium montem. Summatim, necesse est ut sit Judex instar medici periti; quoniam medicus peritus, quamdiu mederi potest alimentorum ope, non utitur medicamentis; quòd si viderit morbum fortiolem esse quàm ut sanari possit alimentis, medicamenta adhibet quæ proximè ad alimenta accedunt; qualia sunt syruipi, & electuaria aromatica dulcia; quòd si adhuc morbum invalescere perspiciat, ita ut his rebus vinci & oppugnari non possit, fortioribus ad sanandum utitur, ægroto scamnoneum, medullam colocynthidis, aloem, & alia ejusmodi medicamenta amara, ingrata, porrigens: sic & Judex concordiam [inter partes dissidentes] festabitur, quam si [efficere] nequiverit, cum lenitate iudicabit; & litigantes verbis blandis excipiet: quòd si hoc non possit ob alteriùs è litigantibus violentiam, & quòd injustè alterum vincere conetur, [tum] illum vi adiget & coget, uti descripsimus. Causa autem quòd hanc speciem in ordine Kodaschim posuerit, est, quòd ob quodcunque [peccatum] superbè commissum tenentur [homines] poenâ excisionis, ob idem ex errore commissum tenentur sacrificio pro peccato, paucis tantum, prout ibi declarabitur, exceptis. Post Cerituth sequitur [tract.] Meilah [de prævaricatione,] quoniam ea ob quæ tenetur quis oblatione Meilah [seu pro prævaricatione,] leviora sunt iis ob quæ sacrificium pro peccato offerendum est. Post Meilah autem tract. Tamid [de sacrificio jugi] quem cæteris postposuit quòd non sit in eo disquisitio legalis, neque liciti vel illiciti [determinatio,] sed modus tantum, quo offerri solebat sacrificium jûge, describatur, ut ita eodem modo semper peragi possit. Post Tamid autem [tractatus] Middotb [de mensuris,] cujus non alius est scopus, quàm ut mensuram Sanctuarii, ejûsque figuram, & structuræ rationem describat: cujus utilitas hæc est, ut cùm posthac ædificabitur, observetur in eo eadem figura, atque eadem proportio: cùm proportio fuerit ab ipso Deo accepta, sicut dixit, ¹ Omnia in Scripturâ de manu Domini super me intelligere fecit, &c. Cùm autem jura de oblationibus animalium, omnibûsque quæ iisdem annexa sunt, nec non domûs in qua offerrebantur istæ oblationes descriptionem absolvisset, his tractatum Kinnim [de Nidis] subjunxit, cujus universa intentio non est alia quàm ut ritus de mixtionibus avium, cùm miscantur oblationes avium aliæ cum aliis, tradat. Ultimo autem loco hunc posuit, quoniam est [de] quoniam totus argumentando elicitur, cum nullum sit ei in textu fundamentum manifestum. Atque hoc librum suum conclusit, cum complectatur universa partitio sermonis de Purificationibus tractatus duodecim. re non prorsus necessariâ, quia vel commisceri possunt, vel non commisceri. Deinde quod jura res istas spectantia pauca admodum sint, uti loco suo declarabitur. Atque hoc clausit ordinem Kodaschim. Continent autem partitio sermonis ipsius de ordine Kodaschim undecim tractatus.

Pergens deinde sermonem de Purificationibus partiri, orsus est, à Celim [tract.] de Vasis, cujus scopus est fundamenta immunditiarum complecti, eaque quæ polluantur & quæ non polluantur describere, ut quando postea dicturus sit de eo quod polluit, dignoscamus quæ res pollutionis capaces sint, quæ non. Post Celim posuit Oboloth [tractatum de Tabernaculis,] qui [versatur] circa jura pollutionis à [contactu] mortui; quem ideo [cæteris] præmisit, quod sit immunditiarum gravissima. Ei subjunxit [tract.] Negaim [de plagis,] qui est disquisitio juridica de immunditiâ lepræ; quoniam leprosus Tabernaculum polluit, estque in ea similitudo aliquantilli de immunditiâ à [contactu] mortui, sicut loco suo declarabitur. Deinde absoluto de immunditiâ à [contactu] mortui, & quæ ejus sunt generis [sermone,] agere cœpit de purgatione ab iis, quæ fit [ope] vaccæ rufæ, ideoque [tract.] Negaim, tractatum Parab [de vacca] subjunxit: deinde absolutâ disquisitione de pollutionibus gravioribus, & quæ ab ipsis est, purgatione, progressus ad pollutiones leviores, quibus non est ultra occasum solis [duratio,] tractatui Parab, subjunxit tractatum Tabaroth, quem appellavit Tabaroth, nomine à purificatione [sumpto,] quod in eo de immunditiis disquiratur, & quoniam immunditiarum cognitio ad munditiem incitat. Videri autem cuipiam potest hoc, quod [cum] appellatio totius Seder sit Tabaroth, singularis etiam tractatus Tabaroth. [audiat,] vitio [authori] vertendum. At non est hoc apud Logicos culpabile, quod species nomine generis appelletur. Deinde post absolutum de immunditiis gravioribus, & purgatione ab ipsis [sermonem,] & de pollutionibus insuper levioribus, addidit purgationis ab ipsis rationem, & [tract.] Tabaroth subjunxit [tract.] Mikvaoth, [de conceptaculis aquarum.] Niddah autem [de muliere menstruata] pollutionibus istis postposuit, quod non sit pollutio toti generi humano communis: Mikvaoth ergo tractatum Niddah subjunxit: huic decebat subjungere Zabim [de fluxum feminis patientibus,] præmisit tamen tractatum Macshirim, [de disponentibus ad immunditiam,] eo quod præmiserit ipsam scripturam, quoniam fundamentum [tract.] Macshirim est in [illa sect.] ^m Eritque die octavo, &c. at [tract.] de fluxum feminis patientibus, [in illa] ⁿ Hæc erit lex leprosi. Post Zabim autem, Tebul Yom [de eo qui lotus est eopse die] posuit, sicut dixit Dominus, ^o Hæc est lex fluxum patientis, Et ex quo profluat semen, &c. atque hæ prædictæ immunditiæ omnes ad totum corpus spectant, sc. ut si quis ad eas accedat, totus polluat. Deinde pergens tradere quid statuendum sit de pollutione unius tantum membri, subjunxit [tractatui] Tebul Yom; Yadaim [de manibus;] eique tract. Oketzin [de petiolis fructuum;] quem ultimo loco posuit, ipſi [tempore] propinquoſiores fuere Simeone Juſto : Uſuſque eſt in ipſa (Miſbna ſc.) ſermonis genere curto, quod multos in ſe ſenſus comprehendat ; ſibi quidem, pro acumine innato, atque ingenii bonitate, perſpicuo ; at illis qui ipſo inferiores, obſcuro. Ita ſiquidem docti, qui antiquitus floruerunt, ſibi ipſis [libros] componebant : ideoque viſum eſt cuidam e diſcipulis ipſius, ſc. R. Chaiæ, librum componere, in quo veſtigiis præceptoris ſui inſiſtens, quæ in verbis ipſius difficilia eſſent explicaret : eſtque is [liber] Toſephta, in quo propoſitum ipſi fuit Miſbnam explicare, atque [ipſi] quæſtiones addere quæ e Miſbna nonniſi adhibito labore erui poſſint ; quas tamen eruit, ut ita nobis indicaret quomodo concluſiones e Miſbna eliciamus. Eodem modo fecit R. Uſſaiab. Rab etiam compoſuit Baraitba, ſcil. libros Sifra & Sifre : nec non & multi alii, ſicut dicunt, Venit R. N. Venit, attulitque ſecum Miſbnam. Interim tamen non aſſequuntur Baraitboth [ſeu ſententiæ exoticæ] iſtæ quotquot ſunt Miſbnæ, vel ſtyli ſuavitatem, vel gravitatem ſenſuum, vel ſermonis brevitatem ; ideoque habetur ipſa (Miſbna) pro fundamento, iſta autem ſcripta omnia pro appendicibus : magnique fit ipſa apud omnes, & ubi cum iſtis collata fuerit. ^p Viderunt eam filiæ, & beatam eam prædicarunt regiæ, & concubinæ laudârunt eam. Quicunque ergo poſt ipſum ſurrexerunt & poſt iſtum cœtum illuſtrem, hoc ſibi propoſitum habuerunt ut verba Miſbnæ intelligerent, neque ceſſârunt ſibi invicem ſuccedentes generationes de ea diſquirere, atque ipſam interpretari ; quilibet ſcil. doctus ſecundum ſcientiæ atque intellectûs ſui menſuram : quin & decurrentibus annis in diſcrepantes abiere ſententias in quibuſdam ejus placitis explicandis. Nullus interim erat cœtus qui non de ea diſquireret, atque ex ea concluſiones eliceret, ſenſuſque ejus abditos rimaretur, uſque tempus Rabinæ & Rab. Aſe, qui ſapientum Talmudicorum ultimi fuerunt ; quorum Rab Aſe ſe ad ſcribendum accinxit, cum viſum ipſi eſſet idem facere in verbis eorum qui poſteriores erant Rabbenu Sancto, quod ipſe in eorum qui poſt Mofen fuerant verbis fecerat. Omnia ergo eorum, qui aliquid [hoc in genere] protulerant, dicta, de lege diſquirentium ſententias, [eandemque] explicantium interpretationes collegit, & traditionum veritatem probavit, eiſdem in unum redactis. Omniaque hæc ſcientiâ, pro ea quam ipſi conceſſerat Deus animi capacitate, & amore ſcientiæ, comprehendit. Compoſuit ergo Talmud, in quo quatuor ſibi propoſuit ; primum, ut Miſbnam interpretaretur, & diſcrepantes verborum eas admittentium explicationes [afferret,] nec non uniuſcujuſque interpretis contra alium [quempiam] argumenta, & quodnam eorum à vero [ſtaret] manifeſtum faceret. Hic primus ejus ſcopus fuit. Secundò, ut juxta alterius e duobus diſſidentibus, inter quos incidit, vel de textu Miſbnæ, vel ejus interpretatione, aut iis quæ ex ea eliciuntur, illique inſiſtunt, diſcrepantia, ſententiam ſtatuere. Tertiò, ut concluſiones ab uniuſcujuſque ſæculi doctis e Miſbna elicitas [adduceret] fundamentaque declararet, & argumenta quibus uſi ſunt in probando, quibuſque nixi ſunt Doctores qui de Miſbna diſſertârunt, donec in eum, quo jam ſunt, ordinem redacti fuerint ſermones ipſorum, nec non decreta & ordinationes quæ à tempore Rabbenu Sancti uſque ipſius ætatem conſtituta ſunt.

Quartò, ut explicationes mysticas, quæ cujusvis capituli, in quo factum est ut incideret istiusmodi explicatio, sensui conveniunt, afferret; atque hic quartus ejus scopus fuit [ut afferret, inquam] explicationes [mysticas] quas non existimare debemus, vel inferiori gradu collocandas, vel parum utiles esse, sed esse eas [in] magno præstantiæ gradu ob rara quæ comprehendunt ænigmata, mirasque elegantias; in istis enim explicationibus, cum penitus ea introspexeris, percipiuntur [multa] simpliciter, adeo ut nihil addi possit, bona, & manifestum fiet sensuum divipiorum, ac veritatum quicquid præcharum sibi habet doctorum cohors, nec non quicquid statuerunt [omnium] sæculorum Philosophi. Cum verò ipsas juxta illud quod præ se ferunt contemplatus fueris, invenies quod ab intellectu, ut nihil magis, alienum sit: hoc autem ob rationes miras fecerunt, quarum una est ut ingenia discentium acuerent; deinde ut stultis, quorum corda nunquam illuminantur, quique à veritate sibi proposita ob indolis suæ defectum divertunt, tenebras offunderent; de quorum similibus dicunt, Non revelant illis secretum, quoniam non sunt intellectus eorum in eo perfectionis gradu ut veritatem prout se habet recipiant; rursus quoniam sapientum, q. p. alii ab aliis scientiæ mysteria cohibebant. Ferunt enim doctum quandam, cum convenisset aliquos qui benè callerent Maaseb Beresbith, atque ipse calleret Maaseb Mercabab, dixisse ipsis, Docete me Maaseb Beresbith, atque ego vos docebo Maaseb Mercabab; annuunt illi, at cum illi ipsum Maaseb Beresbith docuissent, renuit ipse eos Maaseb Mercaba docere, neque illud facere voluit; quod absit ut factum putemus quod invideret illis scientiam, aut præeminere illis cuperet; cum mores isti vituperio digni sint in quolibet etiam stulto, quantò magis in viris illustribus? verum ideo hoc fecit, quod se idoneum existimaret qui illud quod illi callerent acciperet, at non existimaret eos idoneos esse ei quod penes ipsum esset accipiendo; atque hoc probavit [allegato] Salomonis dicto, Mel & Lac sub lingua tua; quod ita interpretati sunt Doctores (p. m.) ut sensus verborum sit, res jucundas è quibus dulcedinem percipit animus, instar ejus quam percipit sensus gustus à melle & lacte, enarrari non debere, neque è lingua ullo modo proferri; hoc est quod dicit, Sub lingua tua. Neque enim ejusmodi sunt res istæ quæ doceantur, atque in Scholis explicentur; verum quæ in libris indicii tantum obscuris, subinnuantur; cumque ab alicujus corde velum amoverit Deus, prout ipsi visum fuerit, ille, post operam scientiis navatam, eorum aliqua secundum intellectus sui mensuram percipiet; neque aliud cuipiam cum scientia & diligentia sua superest quam ut se ad Deum recipiat, illum orans illique supplicans ut ipsi intelligentiam tribuens, ipsumque dirigens, revelet ei, quæ in textibus Scripturarum recondita sunt mysteria, quemadmodum invenimus Davidem, cui pax, fecisse; ubi dicit, Aperi oculos meos, ut aspiciam mirabilia de lege tua. Cum autem detexerit Dominus alicui ex ipsa quod [visum est illi] detegere, [opus est ut] illud, uti diximus, recondat; quod si de eo quid indicii [subobscuris] patefecerit, [illi solùm patefaciet] cujus intellectus perfectus est, cujusque præstantia nota, quemad-modum explicarunt, multisque in Talmude exemplis notum fecerunt. Non oportet igitur virum doctum palam facere ea quæ tenet mysteria, nisi ei qui ipsum gradu vel superet vel æquet: quoniam si ea stulto exposuerit, si non ipsum ideo vituperabit, saltem non quid laude dignum fecisse existimabit: ideoque dixit Sapiens, * In auribus stulti nē loquaris, quoniam contemnet intellectum eloquiorum tuorum. Deinde, quoniam non potest doceri vulgus nisi per ænigmata & parabolæ, ut ita communis sit [ista docendi ratio] mulieribus etiam puerisque & parvulis, quo cum perfecti evaserint intellectus ipsorum, parabolarum istarum sensus dignoscant. Atque hoc innuit Salomo, ubi dicit, * Ad intelligere faciendum parabolam & facundiam, verba Sapientum & ænigmata eorum: atque has ob causas ænigmaticè locuti sunt Sapientes, quibus pax, de rebus Theologicis; ideoque decet quempiam, ubi occurrerit ipsi in verbis illorum quicquam quod ipsius opinione abhorreat intellectus, non verbis istis, sed intellectui suo defectum imputare, & ubicunque aliquam è parabolis ipsorum, cujus sensus literalis ab intellectu ipsius valde alienus sit, viderit, ob intellectum suum, qui scopum non attingit, adeo ut res veræ ipsi longissimè [à vero] remotæ videantur, plurimum angere, siquidem intellectus alii aliis juxta præstantiam mutuam temperamentorum præstant, & quemadmodum unius temperamentum melius est & proprius ad æqualitatem quàm alterius temperamentum accedit, ita & unius intellectus perfectior est & præstantior intellectu alterius, neque dubium est, quin aliter se habeat ejus, qui rem aliquam præstantem noverit, quàm ejus qui illam ignorat, intellectus, cum sit unus in actu, alter in potentia intellectus: unde fit ut res quædam, quæ apud nonnullos valdè certæ & perspicuæ sunt, aliis impossibiles videantur juxta gradus [ipsorum] in scientia rationem. Cujus rei exemplum tibi perspicuum proponam, hoc scilicet ut fingamus dicere nos viro artis Medicæ, Arithmeticæ, & Musicæ perito, necnon rerum naturalium scientiam callenti, ingenii insuper perspicacis, & bonæ indolis, at Geometriæ, & Astronomiæ prorsus rudis, Quid dicis (heus N.) de viro, qui asserat corpus, solis istud, quod nobis circulus parvus videtur, esse corpus sphaericum cujus sphaera magnitudine sit instar Sphaeræ terræ centies sexagies sexies [sumptæ] cum tribus octavis, atque esse globum terræ quo [eam] metimur sphaeram cujus circumferentia sit 24000 miliarium; ut hoc modo percipiatur quot contineantur in mensura magnitudinis sphaeræ solaris miliaria? Proculdubio ille quem diximus ingenii perspicacis vir, quique eas quas diximus scientias callet, nullo modo in animum inducet ut veram esse dicat istam sententiam; quin futurum est hoc totum apud ipsum res quæ nullo modo percipi possit; ac primo quidem intuitu hoc se illi suggeret argumentum, rationi consentaneum, falsam esse hanc sententiam, Quomodo fieri potest, ut quis terræ, spithamæ unius magnitudine, insistsens, quantitatem globi ejus, circumferentiam, & superficiei mensuram dignoscant, nisi ipsa eodem modo circumdatâ, quo particulam ejus aliquam quam metiri vult compefitur? ipforum abhorre, nisi qui cupiditati indulgeat, & sensibus grata scētur, cujusque cor clari-ori aliquo lumine illustratum non fuerit. [Doctores autem nostri] quod scirent vera esse verba ip- forum, totam iis ætatem infumiserunt, jusseruntque iis noctis horas, & extremas diei partes impende- re: atque hoc finem ultimum, prout revera est, sta- tuerunt. Ita dixerunt, Non est Deo Opt. Max. in mundo suo [quicquam] præter quatuor Sbel Ha- lacab [i. e. constitutionum Talmudicarum] cubitos. Cui dicto animum adverte, quoniam si ipsum prout ad litteram sonat perpenderis, quam maximeâ vero alienum esse putabis; ac si quatuor tantum Constitutionum cubiti unicus essent finis, reliquæ autem artes & scientiæ rejiciendæ, ac temporibus Semi & Eberi eorumque qui post ipsos fuerunt, cum nondum esset Constitutio Talmudica, certissi- mum fuerit nullam omnino sortem Deo in mundo fuisse. Quod si dictum hoc penitiùs introspexeris, videbis ipsum admirandam sapientiam continere, resque intellectu pulcherrimas complecti reperies. Ego igitur ipsum tibi explicabo, ut reliquorum, quæ apud Doctores Talmudicos occurrunt, exemplar sit, tūque de ipso prout decet judices. Scias ergo Majores nostros pro ea quâ erant scientiâ, & præ- stantiâ Ingenii, res mirâ diligentia scrutatos pro comperto habuisse, unicuique rei quæ existit ne- cessariò finem esse ad quem existentia ejus dirigat- ur. Nihil enim frustra existere: cūque certò constaret ipsis hæc conclusio generalis, cœperunt distinctim de quolibet existente inquire, ut unius- cujusque speciei finem notum haberent. Viderunt autem uniuscujusque rei artificialis finem notio- rem esse, quam ut eum altius rimari opus sit. Cum artifex ipsum non nisi post conceptum prius animo ipsius finem fecerit: e. g. dico, Serram nequaquam fecisse fabrum, nisi postquam secum reputans quo- modo ligni hujus partes inter se continuatas diri- meret, animo apud se conceptâ ferræ formâ, eam demum facere aggressus fuerit ut eâ ferraret. Quare finis ferræ est ferrare, similiter finis securis findere, acūs vestes consuere, eodemque modo in omnibus artis ope productis. At eorum quæ artificio di- vino, & sapientiâ naturali producentur, veluti di- versæ fructuum, herbarum, metallorum, lapidum & animalium species, quædam sunt quorum finis facili inquisitione reperitur, alia quæ majori egent indagine, alia verò quorum finis obscurus atque occultus est adeò ut penitus ignoretur, nisi per re- velationem aut divinationem innotuerit, cum per disquisitionem scientialem non possit. Neque e- nim in potestate hominis est indagare quam ob cau- sam produxerit natura formicarum alias alis in- structas, alias absque alis: quamobrem etiam ver- mium alios pluribus pedibus, alios paucioribus produxerit: quisve sit hujus vermis & hujus for- micæ finis. At è rerum his majorum, & quarum operationes magis conspicuæ sunt, finis scientiâ gloriam captant scientiæ studiosi, & quo quis doc- tor est majorique diligentia & ingenio acutiori, plurium rerum fines perspicit.  tas capiant utilitates. Neque fieri potest ut quis omnium plantarum virtutes comprehendat, quod experienciâ probatur atatum sibi invicem succedentium. At dices forsan, quare creata sunt ve-nena Lethalia, veluti herba Bish & [herba fanguis] Hafbisbatol dam, quibus perditio hominibus, non utilitas infertur. Sciendum est ergo tibi, in-esse ipsis utilitates, quoniam etsi interficiant si comedantur, cum tamen exteriori corporis parti applicantur non interficiunt. Quod si constet tibi magnam esse homini utilitatem è viperâ, quanto magis ex iis quæ minus noxia sunt? Cum ergo invenerint horum omnium finem esse ut existat homo, necesse est ut quæramus etiam, quare extiterit homo, quisque sit ipsius finis. Postquam igitur multum hæc de re quævisissent, invenerunt homini multas esse admodum operationes, nam omnibus animalium arborumque speciebus vel unica tantum est actio, vel ad plurimum binæ, ea-rumque finis unus. Quemadmodum videmus non esse palmæ operationem aliam quam ut dactylos producat, quod & in reliquis arboribus fructiferis ita se habet. Atque ita animalium alia reperimus quæ texunt tantum, ut araneam, alia quæ ædifi-cant, ut hirundinem, alia quæ sibi ad victum ne-cessaria recondunt, ut formicam; homo verò multas ac diversas actiones producit, quas omnes sigillatim explicantes, ut ita perspectum haberent quisnam esset ipsarum finis, invenerunt finem ipsius unam tantum actionem esse, reliquis ad ipsius conservationem [directis,] quò melius una ista ac-tio in eo perficiatur, quæ est intelligibilium appre-hensio, & veritatum, prout se reverâ habent, cognitio. Siquidem impossibile est ut finis ho-minis sit edere, bibere, rem veneream exercere, parietem extruere, aut Regem esse, cum advenientia, quæ substantiæ ejus nihil addunt;

dunt; cùmque hæ actiones omnes ei cum aliis animalium speciebus communes sint: at scientia illud est quod substantiam ejus auget, ipsumque à statu humili ad sublimem transfert. Cum qui homo fuerit in potentia jam homo actu evaserit. Homo si quidem antequam scientiâ præditus sit instar bestiarum est. Neque enim à reliquis animalium speciebus aliter quam ratione distinguitur, quòd scil. ipse Animal sit rationale. Per rationem autem intelligo rerum intelligibilium apprehensionem: rerum autem intelligibilium præcipua est unitatis Dei Opt. M. apprehensio cum aliis quæ cum ipsa conjunctæ sunt, rebus Theologicis. Cæteræ enim scientiæ [eò tendunt] ut iis exerceatur [homo,] donec ad Theologicam pervenerit. His autem de rebus sermonem plenè pertexere longum foret valdè. Verùm unà cum apprehensione intelligibilium necesse est ut excessum in voluptatibus corporeis vitet, cùm primum intelligibile quòd apprehenditur, sit, quòd destructio animi sit cum cura corporis [conjuncta,] animi autem cura cum destructione corporis. Quamdiu enim sectetur homo cupiditates, sensui obvia eligens, & intellectum suum cupiditati suæ subjiciens, seque instar bestiarum habeat & pecorum, (quæ nihil aliud concipiunt quàm quæ esu & potu idonea, quæque ad Venerem spectant,) nondum apparet in ipso potentia divina, viz. Intellectus, sed mera est materia in mari τῆς ὑλῆς natans. Ex his præmissis patet, mundi nostri, eorūque quæ in ipso sunt, finem esse Virum scientiâ præditum, eūque bonum. Cùm ergò verè sint in individuo aliquo generis humani scientia & opera, (per scientiam autem intelligo apprehensionem veritatum prout se re verà habent, & affectionem omnium quæ fieri possit ut assequatur homo; per opera autem, moderatum rerum naturalium usum, & fugam excessus, néve ex iis capteret nisi quo sustentetur corpus, & rectius disponantur habitus [ipsius] universi) ille, qui ita se habet, finis est propositus: quam sententiam non solum notam fecerunt Prophetæ, verùm & è sectis antiquis docti, iique qui neque viderunt unquam prophetas, neque sapientiam eorum audierunt, idem docuere; scil. non esse quempiam hominem perfectum, nisi qui scientiam & opera simul conjunxerit: & quàm præclarum est dictum Philosophi istius excellentis, Scopum Dei in nobis esse, ut intelligentes simus & boni. Si quis enim scientiâ & intelligentiâ præditus cupiditates sectetur, non est ille revera sciens, cùm scientiæ initium [in hoc consistat] ut non capteret quis è voluptatibus corporeis, nisi quo sustentetur corpus. Quæ autem huc spectant fusius tractantes in explicatione tract. Aboth, eadem, prout decet atque opus est, elucidabimus. Atque hoc modo invenimus Prophetam redarguisse illum, qui cùm scientiam sibi attribueret, legem interim transgrederetur, animique sui cupiditatibus indulgeret, hoc ipse dicto, Quomodo dicitis, Sapientes sumus, & Lex Dei nobiscum est? &c. Pari ratione si quis devotus fuerit, & abstemius, voluptatum, nisi quantum corpori sustentando sit, fugiens, inque omnibus naturæ viis modum teneat, necnon omnia ad probitatem morum [spectantia] complectatur, nisi quòd scientiâ careat; neque hic (quamvis priori perfectior) perfectionem affecutus est, cùm nondum vera & firma sint ista ejus opera, ideòque dicunt Sapientes, p. m. Brutus non est peccati metuens, quem admodum explicavimus. quique Idiotam pium esse affirmaverit, ille Sapientes qui hoc præcisè affirmârunt, nec non & ipsam rationem mendacii arguit: quare & per totam legem præceptum invenies, Et discetis ea; & deinde, Et facietis ea, præmissâ operibus scientiâ, quia scientia ad opus perducit, non autem opus ad scientiam; atque hoc est quod dixerunt [Doctores] q. p. Doctrinam ad opera per-ducere. Una autem hîc supereft quæstio, cûm dicere possit aliquis, Affirmâtis vos sapientiam divinam nihil frustra fecisse, omniûmque creaturarum sublunarium nobilissimam esse hominem, finem autem generis humani esse intelligibilia apprehendere, quare ergo fecit Deus homines [istos] omnes qui non apprehendunt intelligibilia, cûm videamus maximam hominum partem scientiâ carere, cupiditates autem sectari, virûmque scientiâ & rerum mundanarum contemptu præditum, ra-rum quid ac peregrinum esse, qualis vix unus sæculo aliquo reperiat? Respondetur autem om-nes istos duas ob causas reperiri, quarum prima est, ut Uni isti inserviant. Nam si omnes scientiæ dediti ac philosophiæ studiosi essent, periturus esset mundus, & in cassum abiturus, penitûsque ex ipso deleteretur genus humanum quàm brevissimo temporis spatio. Homo enim egenus admodum est, rebûsque multis opus habet, adeo ut necesse illi esset arandi, metendi, tritrandi, commolendi, pinfendi, & instrumenta his omnibus [inservientia] conficiendi artem discere, quò pararetur ipsi cibus; eodémque modo necesse esset illi discere nendi ac texendi artificium, quò sibi contexeret quod indueret; nec non architectonicem, ut sibi strueret quo tegetetur, & modum instrumenta his omnibus [idonea] conficiendi, neque sufficeret Metbusalechi ætas ad perdiscendas artes istas quibus universis necessario intra vitæ suæ terminum opus habet homo, ac quando tandem vir iste sapientiam acquireret, & scientiæ operam daret? Illi ergo omnes conditi sunt, ut hæc opera præstent, quibus in civitate opus est, conditus est autem vir scientiâ præditus sui gratiâ; atque ita [simul] colitur terra, & reperitur sapientia; quàm scitè ergo dixit ille, quisquis fuit, Nisi essent stulti, desolaretur terra? Quæ enim stultitia huic par est, ut homo, animo debilis, [corporis] structurâ infirmus, à principio climatis fecundi, usque ad principium sexti profectus, maria hieme & deserta per ventos æstatis urentes pertranseat, sêque ferarum & serpentium [periculo] objiciat, quò forte pecuniam lucretur, deinde cûm nummorum istorum, quibus tres animas suas impendit, summam collegerit, eam distribuere incipiat architectis qui ipsi fundamentum firmum è gypso & lapidibus in terra solida struant, super quod parietem erigat qui annos centenos perduret, cûm certò sciat non supereffe sibi vitæ quantum vel parietem junceum absumeret? quæ[inquam] stulti-tia hâc major est? Sic & voluptates & cupiditates mundanæ mera sunt stultitia, [quæ tamen] ad terræ conservationem [spectant] ideoque appellârunt Sapientes, quibus pax, scientiâ vacuos, Populum terræ, q. d. eos qui ad terram colendam creati sunt, quare & illos ipsi affines statuerunt. Quòd si di-cat quis, Atqui videmus virum levem & fatuum [aliquem] in mundo quiete frui, neque in ipso angi, aliis ipsi servantibus & negotia ejus peragentibus, imò & aliquoties virum scientiâ præditum negotiis ejus occupari; non ita se res habet,

לאנה

prout ipsi videtur, verum ideo stultus iste tranquillitate fruitur, quoniam & ipse servus est viro isti quem scopum proposuit creator: Ille enim [ope] tranquillitatis sui, magnæque facultatum aut possessionum suarum copiae, servos suos arcem sublimem extruere, vel vineam magnam plantare jubet, uti facere solent Reges Regumque similes; arx interim ista viro alicui præstanti paratur, qui venturis sæculis aliquando sub aliquo parietum ejus umbram captans hoc pacto à perditione liberetur; fumeturque aliquando è vinea ista mensura vini, quâ conficiatur theriaca, quâ vir quispiam perfectus à vipera morfus fanetur: ita enim Dei Omnipot. gloriosi œconomia & sapientia quibus servire fecit naturam, * Consilia sunt à longinquo, veritas, firmitas. Atque hanc sententiam explicarunt Sapientes, quibus pax. Ferunt enim Ben Zoma stantem super montem domus [sacræ,] cum cerneret Israelitas ascendentes dixisse, Benedictus sit qui creavit hos omnes ut mihi inservirent, cum ipse p. m. esset sæculi sui Phoenix. Causa autem secunda ob quam facti sunt scientiæ expertes, est quod illi qui scientiâ præditi sunt, pauci admodum sint, idque necessariò ita se habeat ex sapientia divina: jam verò de iis quæ necessaria fecit sapientia prima, non est dicendum, Quare necessarium est hoc? sicut non est dicendum, Quare fuerunt sphaeræ coelestes novem, planetæ septem, elementa quatuor? quoniam hæc, & quæ eodem modo se habent, primâ productione necessaria facta sunt; quod explicasse vides sapientes q. p. Dixit enim R. Shimeon Ben Yuchai de συγγεγοις suis, eo quo fuerunt gradu [non obstante,] Vidi filios cœnaculi paucos esse; si duo sunt, Ego & filius meus illi sumus. Ideoque facta est turba hominum ut consortes essent filiis cœnaculi. Tu forsan hanc utilitatem parvi pendendam existimabis, at certè priori potior est. Annon vides Deum infideles in terra retinuisse, ut piis focii essent? hoc est quod dixit, Omnip. glor. † Non expellam eos coram te uno anno, ne forte sit terra desolata: quam sententiam explicarunt sapientes, dicentes, ‡ Quid est quod dicit, Quia hic [est] omnis homo? Omnis mundus creatus est ut cum ipso consocietur, i. e. ut ipsi [justo scil.] focios se præbeant. Patet ergò ex omnibus quæ diximus, omnium quæ sunt in mundo hoc generationi & corruptioni obnoxio finem esse Virum perfectum qui scientiam & opera conjunxerit, uti descripsimus. Cum ergò ex ipsorum verbis duo ista perceperimus, scil. scientiam, & praxim, [partim] ex iis quæ expressis verbis, [partim] ex iis quæ ænigmaticè protulerunt, verum esse constat quod dixerunt, Non esse Deo Sancto Benedicto, in mundo suo, quicquam præter quatuor Halacæ cubitos. Atqui longè digressi sumus ab eo quem proposuimus scopo, ita tamen ut res quæ & fidem adornent, & diligentiam in sapientiæ studio [excitent,] nec levi pendendæ sint, uti ego existimo, adduxerimus: nunc autem ut ad propositum meum revertar. Cum jam perfecisset Rab Asbe Talmud eo quo se habet modo; mira ordinis, quo compositum est, pulchritudo, & utilitatis magnitudo testimonium ipsi perhibuerunt fuisse in ipso † Spiritum Deorum sanctorum: quod autem de Talmud à Rab Asbe composito reperitur, triginta quinque tractatibus constat; non enim extat ipsi sermo in Seder Zeraim,

Quem tamen ordinem possit quis post difficultatem multam, & molestiam gravem, ope Tosifptæ & Baraitoth, sententiâsque decretorias ex illo per totum Talmud adductas colligendo, & ex iisdem tractatum fundamenta & scopum elicendo, explicare, prout in nostra istius Seder explicatione, volente Deo, percepturus es. Mortuis autem Sapientibus istis omnibus, quorum ultimi fuerunt Rabbina & Rab Ashe, perfectoque Talmude, omnium qui ipsis successerunt unicus hic erat scopus, ut verba ab ipsis composita intelligerent, nihil illis addendo, vel detrahendo. Multos ergo commentarios scripserunt Al Geonim, nemine tamen eò perveniente (quantum quidem sciam) ut universi Talmudis expositionem absolveret, quosdam impediante vita [brevitate], alios hominum in judiciis importunitate. Libros etiam de decisionibus sententiarum composuerunt, alios linguâ Arabicâ, alios Hebraicâ; veluti Halacoth Gedoloth [i. constitutiones magnæ] & Halacoth Ketuoth [i. sententiæ decisæ], & Halacoth pesukoth [i. sententiæ decretoriæ], & Halacoth Rabbi Achæ Misshabcha, cum aliis. Halacoth autem quas compilavit Doctor insignis Rabbenu Isaac, p. m. præstiterunt ne istis omnibus opus haberemus, cum omnia in decisionibus & decretis utilia, quibûsque nostris temporibus, scil. tempore exilii, opus est, contineant; cumque in iis omnes qui illis qui ante ipsum fuere acciderant, in decisionibus suis, errores patefecerit, neque ipse interim in illis, paucis exceptis sententiis, quæ numerum denarium non attingunt, ullatenus arguatur. Omnium autem Geonim expositiones quæ extant, se mutuo excellunt juxta intellectûs eorum præstantiæ rationem, adeo ut Talmudis studiosus quispiam intellectu præditus, Geonim istos, qualis unus quisque fuerit, è dictis & expositionibus ipsorum dignoscere possit. Ubi autem ad nos deventum est, ei insistentes quæ in iis qui præcesserunt invenimus, inquisitioni, diligentiae ac studio, [accinximus] nos pro modulo virium nostrarum ad omnia illa quibus profecturos nos apud Deum speramus, conquirenda: collegi ergo quicquid incidit in manus meas ex iis quæ pater meus p. m. aliique accepta tulerunt Dñi nostro Josepbo Levitæ, cum viri istius in Talmude peritia ad stuporem (novit Deus) redactura sit illum qui ipse dicta & profundas speculationes perpenderit, adeo ut parum absit quin dicam, ^b Ante eum non fuit qualis ipse rex, in via ejus ista. Collegi etiam quascunque apud ipsum inveni in explicatione sua, sententias, una cum iis, quæ mihi occurrerunt, juxta imbecillitatem virium nostrarum, eamque quam affecuti sumus scientiam, interpretationibus, atque ita in tres Sedarim, scil. Moed, Nafim,

Nafim, & Nezikin expositionem confeci, quatuor exceptis tractatibus, de quibus jam in animo est aliquid scribere, sed nondum ei rei otium invenimus. Scripsimus etiam in tract. Cholim ob magnam ejus necessitatem: atque hic labor noster fuit quo occupati fuimus, unā cum eo quod aliis rebus impendimus studio. Visum est deinde in Mishnam commentarium scribere, cujus necessitas qualis sit, absoluto hoc sermone meo, declaraturus sum. Ad quod faciendum incitatus sum, eò quod viderem Talmud illud in Mishnah facere, quod nemo unquam conjectando assequi poterat, dum fundamentis adductis, hic (inquit) Mishna [textus] tali vel tali modo superstructus est: aut in hac Mishna sententiā deest verbum, sensus autem ejus est iste: vel ista Mishnah est ṭ N. cujus sententia ita se habet. Deinde verbis ejus addens, & detrahens, ejus causas reddit. Existimo autem ubi comprehenderit opus hoc illum quem declaraturi sumus scopum in totam Mishnam, futurum ipsum quatuor magni momenti rebus utile: Prima est, ut inde veram Mishnae explicationem, verborumque ipsius interpretationem percipiamus: si enim maximum ṭ Geonim de interpretatione alicujus in Mishnah consuetudinis, interrogaveris, non potest ille quicquam tibi de ea respondere, nisi Talmudicam ejusdem explicationem memoriā teneat, aut dicat, Age, videamus quid de ipsa occurrat in Talmude dictum: impossibile autem est ut quis universum Talmud memoriā teneat; præcipuè cum una sententia Mishnica quatuor aut quinque foliis explicetur, dum dicta dictis intermisceantur, probationes nempe, objectiones, & responsa, adeo ut non possit, quid in explicatione istius Mishnae clarum sit, elicere, nisi qui judicii sit admodum perspicacis; atque hoc, etiam si non fuerit ejusmodi sententia ista, cujus explicatio judiciorumque ad eam spectantium decisio, non nisi è duobus tribusve tractatibus perficiatur. Secunda est, decisionum [cognitio,] cum in explicatione uniuscujusque sententiæ, ad cujus opinionem conformetur praxis, ostensurus sim. Tertia, ut introductionis vice sit ei qui [his rebus] studere incipiat, dum ejus ope pateat ipsi ratio verba explorandi, atque explicandi, ut perinde sit ac si universum Talmud calleret; atque hoc magno ipsi adjumento futurum est ad totum Talmud [percipiendum.] Quarta demum, ut sit [vice] Anamnestæ illi qui legerit, & sciverit, quò præstò sit quodcunque legerit, continuè ante oculos ipsi positum, sintque Mishnah & Talmud ipsius in ore ejus rectè disposita. Hæc cum apud me animo concepissem, accinxi me ad librum, quem mihi proposui, componendum. Scopus ergò mihi in hoc libro propositus est, Mishnam, eo modo explicare, quo [illam] explicavit Talmud; ac sententias veras tantum recensere, omittis iis quæ in Talmude manifestò rejiciuntur; nec non rationes reddere ob quas prolata sunt ista verba, & eas ob quas inciderunt inter discrepantes quibusdam in controversiis differentiæ, & ad cujus sententiam dirigatur praxis, prout in Talmude explicatum est; in quibus omnibus verborum compendio studui: quò tamen nulla lectori difficultas relinquatur, cum non ideò hæc composuerimus ut lapides, sed ut eos qui intellectu præditi sunt, intelligere faciamus. Visum est autem mihi eodem ordine librum meum disponere quo

inde quæ ad explicationem istius sententiæ faciant, pro instituti nostri ratione, loquar: tum ad secundam, atque ita usque ad finem Mishnae
pergam: omnem interim sententiam manifestam describimus [quidem,] at nullum de ea sermonem instituiamus. Scias autem ubicunque discrepent asseclæ Shammæi & asseclæ Hillelis, constitutionem esse juxta Hillelis sequaces, exceptis rebus qui-busdam notis, in quibus obtinet sententia domûs Shammæi. In istis igitur tantum sententiis dico tibi inter explicandum, sententiam esse juxta domum Shammæi. Similiter in omni Mishna simpliciter positâ de qua nulla est controversia, praxis est secundam illud quod in textu expresum est, paucis quæ raro accidunt exceptis. Quare in istis raro occurrentibus, dico tibi, hoc quod
hic simpliciter ponitur, rejici, neque in more esse.
Quod ad reliquas autem discrepantias, ad nullum te de iis scrupulum adigo, ostendens tantum juxta cujus sententiam consuetudo obtineat, licet inter unum aliquem & plures [sit discrepantia,] dico tamen, Halacah est secundum sapientes. Dirigat autem [nos] Deus erga veritatem, & ab eo quod ipsi contrarium est, pro auxilio suo divino, aver-
tat. Visum est autem mihi decem sectiones præmittere, antequam explicationem [meam] aggrediar, quæ certè non sunt magni ad ea quæ nos facere instituiamus momenti, verum ejusmodi quæ illi, qui perfectè Mishnam [callere] velit, tenere expedit. Sectio prima est, De sapientum, quorum mentio in Mishna incidit, quibusque nominatim acceptæ feruntur traditiones, numero. Secunda, de numero Sapientum, quorum mentio facta est in Mishna, facti alicujus quod tempore cujuspiam ipsorum accidit, aut sententiæ moralis quam pro-tulit, aut expositionis mysticæ quam docuit, gra-
tiâ. Tertia, de Genealogiis Sapientum Mishnicorum notis. Quarta, de Synchronismis eorum.
Quinta, de iis quos notum est ex illis habuisse se ut Discipulum & Præceptorem. Sexta, de ali-quorum ex ipsis nominum nudè positorum, quò meliùs dignoscantur, declaratione. Septima, de gradibus eorum, quibus ipsos disposuit Author.
Octava, de ipsorum ad regiones, personas, & tribus respectu. Nona, de quibusdam inter quos in plerisque accidit discrepantia. Decima, de tra-ditionum ab ipsis [acceptarum,] prout rariùs aut frequentiùs occurrunt, partitione.

Sectio prima, De numero Sapientum, quorum mentio facta est in Mishna, quibusque traditiones nominatim acceptæ feruntur.

Diximus initio sermonis nostri, Authorem Mishnae, eorum tantum è traditionum authoribus nomina recensuisse, qui à Simeone justo ad ipsius usque ætatem floruerunt; & traditiones omnes Simeoni

Tationis, & Samuel parvus, & R. Eliazar fil. Peratæ, & R. Eleazar fil. Damæ, & Chananiab fil. Chacinai, & R. Judab f. Abæ.

Secunda Classis eorum qui post excidium vixerunt. R. Tarphon, R. Akiba, R. Eleazar fil. Azariæ, R. Ismael, R. Josua fil. Karchæ, Chanania vir ex Ono. Simeon fil. Nanefi, Fuchanan fil. Barukæ. R. Ismael fil. ejus. R. Fuchanan fil. Gudgudæ, R. Eleazar Chasma, R. Judab fil. Temæ.

Classis quarta. Rab. Judab Princeps, Rabban Gamaliel, Rabban Simeon fil. ipsius, R. Simeon fil. Fuchai, R. Eleazar fil. ipsius, Rab. Simeon, fil. Eleazari, Rab. Ismael fil. Josi, Rab. Jonathan, atque hæc ultima est Sapientum Misnicorum Classis.

Sectio quinta. De iis quos inter eos notum est, se invicem habuisse ut Discipulum & Præceptorem. Jam initio sermonis nostri diximus Rabbeni Hakadosh Misbna compilatorem fuisse Discipulum patris sui, eodèque modo ex avis ipsius filios discipulos fuisse patrum suorum usque ad Hillelem, usque ad Simeonem justum, uti memoravimus; similiter Rabban Fuchanan filius Zaccæi discipulus fuit Hillelis, & discipuli Rabban Fuchanani, filii Zaccæi, fuerunt quinque, scil. Rab. Eliezer, filius Hircani notæ famæ Vir, Rab. Josuah fil. Chaninæ, Rab. Josi Sacerdos, Rab. Simeon fil. Nathanielis, & Rab. Eleazar, filius Araci: Atque hic est cœtus quibus annuntiata est vita futura, (prout è Talmude notum est) ipsis sc. cum discipulis suis, & discipulorum discipulis. Rab. Akiba item fuit discipulus Rab. Eliezeris fil. Hircani. Fuit is scil. præceptor ejus præcipuus. Legerat etiam aliquid Rab. Akiba iste apud Rab. Tarphonem, qui tamen ejus præceptor non fuit, sed socius. Magnum interim honorem detulit Rab. Akiba, Rab. Tarphoni, vocabátque ipsum Rabbi, cùm Rab. Tarphon vocaret ipsum [simpliciter] Akiba. Solebat insuper Rab. Akiba dicere, Rabbi, sinas me proferre coram te aliquid ex iis quæ me docuisti, [prout] declaratum est in Sifra. Et Rab. Meir, & Rab. Simeon fil. Fuchai fuerunt discipuli Rab. Akibæ; is enim præceptor eorum præcipuus erat. Dixerat enim R. Meir à Rabbi Ismaele aliisque. Rab. Juda studuit apud Rab. Eleazarum fil. Azariæ, atque is præceptor ejus præcipuus fuit. Ubi cunque autem legeris in Misbna R. ḥōvā, nomine Rab. ר' הווא, scias illum hujus discipulum fuisse, ideòque ipsi acceptam tulisse [sententiam.] Rabbeni Judab sanctus autem apud R. Eleazarum f. Schemuæ lectioni operam dedit. Et Samecus discipulus fuit R. Meiri, cui quod in votis fuit, ut à Rab. Juda post mortem Rab. Meiri disceret, assequi non contigit.

Sectio sexta. De Declaratione nominum nude expressorum, plenioris explicationis gratiā. R. Eliezer ita simpliciter appellatus, cujus mentio fit in Misbna, est R. Eliezer fil. Hircani, R. Fuchanani fil. Zaccæi discipulus. Et R. Josua simpliciter, est R. Josua f. Chaninæ discip. R. Fuchanan f. Zaccæi, & R. Judab

Alii, de quo in Talmude indefinite dictum est, Factum pii cujusdam, atque illud nomen ejus apud ipsos notum est: Et R. Eleazar simpliciter, R. Eleazar filius Shemui Sacerdot. qui συνέχευε erat R. Gamalielis, apud quem cum desideraret legere Rabbenu sanctus, non siverunt eum discipuli ipsius nisi parum quid legere. R. Shimeon simpliciter in Mishna commemoratus est, R. Shimeon fil. Juchaii, discip. Rabbi Akiba, ob illud quod ipsi cum Cesare intervenerit celebris: R. Eleazar Ben. R. Simeon est filius ipsius; & Ben Azaii & Ben Zoma, & Ben Nanefi sunt illi, Simeon fil. Azaii, & Simeon fil. Zoma, & Simeon fil. Nanefi; Ben Batira est, R. Josuah f. Batiræ; & Ben Bagbagi, R. Juchanan fil. Bagbagi; & Juchanan Sacerdos maximus est, Juchanan f. Matatbie celebris, cujus mentio fit in precibus in Historia victoriæ in Reges Græciæ. Cum autem voluissent R. Meir, & R. Nathan ad pudorem redigere Rabban Gamalielē patrem Rabbenu Hakkadosh in re quam longum esset narrare, ipsos à confessu suo amovit: quare cum ab alterutro ipsorum sententia aliqua referatur, si R. Meir accepta ferenda sit, dicitur, Alii dicunt; quod si R. Nathani, dicitur, Sunt qui dicunt. Verum quod dicit in Misna, Nomine R. Ishmaelis dixit Discipulus quidam coram Rab. Akiba, [intelligendum] est de R. Meir. Quod autem dicunt, Judicantes coram Sapientibus, sunt isti quinque viri, scil. R. Simeon fil. Azai, R. Simeon fil. Zoma, R. Simeon fil. Nanefi, Chanan, & Chananiah vir Ono. R. Meir, aliàs appellatur R. Naburai, (quorum utriusque idem est significatus,) nomen autem ejus primariò fuit R. Nebemiah. Cum autem in Mishna dicit, Sapientes; aliquando hoc titulo designatur unus tantum eorum quorum nomina præcesserunt, aliàs autem totus cœtus; ita frequenter in Talmude explicationis gratià dicit, Quinam sunt Sapientes isti? R. ε δ' αὖτα. Hoc autem facit, quando invenerit multos quod ab isto Sapiente dictum fuerit amplexos esse, ideòque cum multi fuerint qui eam sequantur sententiam, Sapientes indigitat, licet ille cui accepta fertur unus sit. Ubi autem dicit, Domus Shammai, & Domus Hillelis, innuit cœtum qui Shammai & Hillelis sententiam amplectuntur, cum discipuli alicujus domestici ipsius [habéantur.] Rabbi autem est Rabbenu Hakkadosh: éstque ille R. Judah princeps, sextus ab Hillele sene, Author Mishnæ. Ubicunque autem dicit in Mishna, Reverá, est constitutio Mosis è Sina; ubi simpliciter dicitur Mishna, illud est in quo concurrunt, atque idem sentiunt universi, ita ut nulla sit de eo controversia; aut illud quod alii ad alios [successivè] usque à Mose derivarunt, uti initio sermonis nostri explicavimus. Proximus autem Kabbalistarum, cui acceptum fertur dictum illud, est R. Meir, atque hoc est quod volunt cum dicant, Mishnab absolutè positum est R. Meir, nisi in quibusdam locis absolutè positis, quæ [exhibent sententiam] R. Meir solius, in qua ab eo discrepat, aut [sententiam] alius à R. Meir; quæ explicat Talmud. Cumque nos sententias decifuri simus ex ejus mente, cujus obtinet sententia, in finquantum tibi quod ad hoc propositum sufficiat hagulis per totam Mishnam, consuetudinibus biturus es.

Seccio

Sectio septima. De Gradibus ipforum, prout Author [Mishnae ipfos] disposuit. Distribuuntur illi quorum facta est mentio in Mishna, (qui sunt, uti praemisimus, centum viginti octo) in tres gradus. Cum quis apud ipsum in magno honore fuerit, atque omnium supremus, illum nomine suo appellat, ex. grat. Hillel, Shammaeus, Shemaiah, Abtalion, quod magnitudinis ipforum [indicium] est, cum non potuerit reperiri Epitheton aliquod quo fama ipforum illustrior redderetur, uti neque Prophetae Epitheto aliquo celebrantur. At qui apud ipsum gradu his inferiori fuerint, illos appellat Rabban, ut cum dicit, Rabban Gamaliel, & Rabban Tushman fil. Zaccai. Qui his denique gradu inferiores, audiunt apud ipsum Rabbi, ut cum dixit, R. Meir, R. Juda. Appellat etiam eos qui hoc gradu sunt Aba, ut cum dicit, Aba Saul: aliquando tamen ultro omittitur ipforum titulus, veluti cum dicit, Simeon frater Azariae, & Eleazar vir Bartutae. Omnes autem illi quos honoris gratia nominibus suis appellavit, hi sunt, Simeon Justus, Antigonus, vir Soco, Josi f. Jozeris, Josi f. Tushman, Tushman Sacerdos Summ: Josua f. Perachia, Nathaeus Arbelita, Honi Hammagel, Elihoini f. Hakkaphi, Chana-meel Aegyptius, Juda fil. Tabbai, Simeon fil. Setabi, Akabiah filius Mahaleelis, Semaiah, Abtalion, Chanan, Admon, Hillel, Shammai, Nabum Hallablar, Hananiab f. Hezekia, f. Garonis, Baba fil. Butae: si quos autem praeter hos nominibus suis indigitatos reperies, Epitheta à nominibus ipforum ultro separata esse [scias].

Sectio octava. De Descriptione ipforum respectu habito ad patriam, artes, personas, tribus. E numero Authorum quos majoris explicationis gratia descripsit [aliis] modis, alii sunt quos ab artibus suis descripsit, quò notiores ipfos faceret, ut cum dicit, Nabum Hallablar [i. Librarius], & R. Simeon Hasbazuri, alii, quos à patria, ut cum dicit, vir Hadid, vir Ono, vir Bartuta [oriundus], at cum dicit, vir Zeredae, vir Jerusalemi, aliorumve locorum, hoc innuit fuisse ipsum doctissimum atque celeberrimum è loci illius [incolis], ac si diceret Personam istam è loci istius incolis, meritò appellari Virum; alii quos à nomine patris, vel fratris, ut cum dicit, R. N. f. R. N. aut R. N. frater R. N. quod saepe occurrit; alii denique quos à tribu sua, ut cum dicit, יהודה Sacerdos.

Illi, quos invenies in Mishna in plerisque inter se discrepare, sunt, R. Meir, R. Juda, R. Simeon, & R. Josi, inter utrumvis horum par, imò & inter singulos quatuor, discrepantiam reperies. R. Eleazarem etiam reperies ab unoquoque ipforum discrepare, verum rarius quàm ipsi inter se discrepent. Similiter R. Akibam, & R. Eliezerem, & R. Josuam, reperies unumquemque à cæteris dissentire, nec non singulos tres invicem, rarius tamen quàm praedictos quatuor. Reperies etiam differentiam inter R. Akibam, R. Ismaelem, R. Tarphonem & R. Eleazarum f. Azariae, sed minorem discrepantiâ praedictâ. Proximi his in discrepando sunt Domus Shammaei, & Domus Hillelis; post hos autem *Rabban Gamaliel, aut Rabban Simeon, f. שרח אלפרק אלעאשר מן מסכת סנהדרין לד' משדה בר מימון:

OMNI Israelitæ in futuro seculo sors est, sicut dictum est, Et pop. tuus omnes iusti in æternum possidebunt terram. Hi tamen ex Israelitis vitæ æternæ exsortes erunt : Qui negat in vitam revocandos esse mortuos : legem esse à cælo : Epicureus. R. Akiba ait : Is quoque, qui libros extraneos legit : qui adfussurrit plagæ hæc verba : ‘ Omnem morbum, quem imposui Ægyptiis, non imponam tibi. Nam ego Dominus medens tibi. Abba Schaül ait : Is quoque, qui nomen [tetragrammaton] suis literis pronunciat.

Visum est mihi hic de multorum magni admodum momenti articulorum fundamentis loqui. Scias eorum qui Legem amplectuntur sententias de beatitudine, quam affecutus est homo mandata ista, quæ præcepit nobis Deus per manus Mosis Doctoris nostri, præstando, & de miseria quæ nos ob earum transgressionem consequetur, pro diversitate intellectuum, valdè discrepare: quin & multùm in hac [materia] confundi intellectus, adeò ut vix reperiās quempiam cui hoc argumentum liquidò innotuerit; imò haudquaquam reperiēs de eo sermonem ab aliquo liberius institutum qui non sit admodum confusus.

Quidam ergo existimant Beatitudinem esse hortum Edenis ; eum autem, locum esse in quo sine ulla corporis molestia aut labore edatur & bibatur, & in quo domus sint è lapidibus preciosis, & lecti holoserici, fluvii vino & unguentis odoratis fluentes, cum multis ejusmodi aliis.

Miseriam autem esse Gebennam, eamque locum igne, qui in ipso corpora torreat, aestuantem, in quo cruciuntur homines variis pœnarum generibus, quæ longum esset explicare. Quam sententiam suam confirmat hæc secta multis Sapientum dictis, quorum sensus literalis iis, quæ ab ipsis dicuntur, in plerisque saltem, convenit.

Alii, secundò, profitentur, & putant Beatitudinem quæ speratur, esse Dies Messiaë, (qui citò manifestetur;) atque eo tempore futuros homines Reges perpetuò victuros, procerâ corporis staturâ, qui terram totam, usque in æternum obtineant. Quin & Messias iste, ex ipsorum sententia, victurus est quamdiu duraverit ipse Creator Benedictus; proferetque tunc temporis terra vestes contextas, & panem coctam, cum multis ejusmodi quæ fieri non possunt. Miseriam autem in eo consistere, quòd non sit homo istis temporibus [victurus] neque dignus habeatur qui ea videat: ad quæ etiam probanda multa afferunt, quæ apud Sapientes occurrunt dicta, nec non Sacræ Scripturæ textus, qui primâ fronte sententiæ eorum (in parte saltem) favere videntur.

Alii, tertio, autumant Beatitudinem quæ speratur, esse Resurrectionem mortuorum: scil. ut, post mortem, vitæ denuo restitutus homo domesticis suis & propinquis [comitatus] redeat, edâtque & bibat non ampliùs; miseriam vero hoc quod non sit quis denuo victurus. Quod etiam

videtur; dicente ei præceptore, Lege, ut tibi

probare nituntur dictis Sapientum, & quibusdam in textu locis huic sententiæ consentaneis.

Alii, quartò, asserunt Beatitudinem quam assecuturi sumus, præstando mandata, esse quietem corporis, & spes hujus mundi in eodem fruendas; veluti fertilitatem terræ, facultatum & liberorum copiam, longitudinem vitæ, sanitatem corporis, statum securum, quodque regno apud nos stabilito in hostes nostros dominaturi sumus. Infelicitatem autem, quæ nos, cum transgressi fuerimus, invadet, esse his quæ diximus contraria, qualia nos hoc exilii tempore patimur. Quin & hoc sibi probare videntur ex omnibus in Lege textibus, qui benedictiones & maledictiones continent, aliisque pluribus, nec non omnibus quæ in Scriptura afferuntur narrationibus.

Alii, quintò, qui & plures sunt, hæc omnia conjungunt, dicentes illud quod speratur, esse, venturum Messiam, & mortuos resuscitaturum, qui Paradisum ingressi ibi comedent & bibent, bonâ fruente valetudine quamdiu duraverint cœli ac terra. Verùm quod ad articulum hunc admirandum (viz. Mundum futurum,) paucos omnino reperies quibus in mentem venerit, quive de eo cogitent, vel pro fundamento sumant, aut de nominibus istis interrogent cuinam rei competant; & num ille, vel alius aliquis juxta sententias prædictas finis sit, aut qui inter finem & causam quæ ad ipsum perducit, distinguant: neque invenies prorsus qui de hoc sciscitetur, aut qui de eo aliquid dicat. Verùm illud de quo quærent universim, tum vulgus, tum melioris notæ homines, est, Quomodo resurrecturi sint mortui, nudi an amicti? & num iisdem quibus sepulti erant, vestibus, iisque eodem quo fuerant modo acupictis, variegatis, ac pulchrè confutis? an velamento quod ipsis operiendis tantum sufficiat? & cum venerit Messias, num æquales fient dives & pauper? aut futuri sint sub ipso alii fortes, alii infirmi? Cum multis ejusmodi quæstionibus omni tempore [ventilatis]. Tu verò [Lector] hanc à me parabolam accipias, quò deinde animum ad ea quæ mihi in his omnibus dicenda restant, audienda apponas. Fingas puerum minorem ad præceptorem deductum, quò eum legem edoceat, quod certè magnum illi, ob eam quam inde assequetur perfectionem, bonum est; nisi quòd ipse, præ annorum defectu & intellectus sui imbecillitate, magnitudinem boni istius, quantamque ad perfectionem ipsum perduciturum sit, haud percipiat: coget necessitas præceptorem istum, qui ipso perfectior est, illum ad legendum de re aliquâ, quæ ipsi pro eâ quâ est ætate tenerâ desiderabilis videatur, provocare. Dicet ergò illi, Lege, ut tibi juglandem, aut ficum, aut saccari portiunculam demus; ita fiet ut legat & studeat, non ipsius lectionis gratiâ, (cum ipsius dignitatem non intelligat) sed ut edulium istud, (cujus efus ipsi lectione præstantior & majus bonum sine dubio videtur,) accipiat: ideoque lectionem molestiam putat & laborem, quem tamen suscipit ut eo finem istum desiderabilem assequatur, scil. nucem juglandem, aut saccari portiunculam. Cumque grandior jam & intellectu auctus, minoris æstimet illud quod antea præfererat, atque aliud jam eligat, allicietur etiam eo quod jam ipsi optabilius calceos pulchros, aut istiusmodi vestem emamus; non ipsius lectionis gratiâ, sed istius indumenti; cum cùm vestis ista præstantior ipsi scientiâ videatur, sitque lectionis finis. Porro cùm intellectu adhuc perfectior evaserit, adeo ut minoris pendatur ipsi hoc etiam pretium, allicietur aliquo adhuc hoc majori; dicente ipsi præceptore suo, Discas hanc Sectionem, aut hoc Caput, quò tibi aureum aut duos aureos donemus. Leget enim rursus, & diligentiam adhibebit, quò nummos istos accipiat, cùm lucrari nummos ipsi tunc temporis præstantius videatur lectione. Fins enim Lectionis apud ipsum est ut aurum, quod sperare jubetur, accipiat. Cùm autem majoris adhuc fuerit iudicii, ut hoc etiam pretium ipsi vilius habeatur, cum ipsum spernendum quid esse perceperit, alliciendus erit eo quod hoc potius erit; ac dicetur ipsi, Disce, ut Doctor sis, aut Judex, & magni te faciant homines, tibi que assurgant, & iussis tuis obsequantur, ac celebre sit nomen tuum, & dum vivis & post mortem tuam, qualis hic vel ille; atque ita leget, & studebit, ut assequatur gradum istum, eritque ipsi finis, ut magni ab hominibus fiat, celebreturque, ac laudibus evehatur. Hæc interim omnia vituperio digna sunt, ad quæ tamen confugitur ob imbecillitatem intellectus istius, qui finem scientiæ alium ab ipsa scientia facit, dicens, Quorum disceremus hanc scientiam, nisi ut eâ aliquid acquiramus? quod reverâ stultitia est. Hoc autem est quod apud Sapientes dicitur, Sbelo Lifomab, Non sui ipsius gratiâ [discere,] viz. ut quis obsequatur præceptis, eaque faciat, legâtque & studeat, non ejus rei ipsius gratiâ, sed aliis cujuscumque, quod vetârunt Sapientes, q. p. dicentes, Ne facias ea coronam, ut iis glorieris, neque securim, ut iis fodias, [quibus verbis] digitum intendunt ad illud quod tibi explicavi; scil. ne statuât [quis] finem scientiæ, vel ut magni fiat ab hominibus, vel opes acquirat, neque cultum Dei victus parandi instrumentum faciat, neque sit ipsi alius scientiæ finis quàm ipsum scire: eodémque modo ne sit alius ipsi veritatis finis, quàm ut sciat ipsam veram esse, & præcepta vera esse, & finem ipsorum esse ea præstare: neque convenit homini perfecto dicere, Si fecero bona ista, & fugero turpia ista, quæ vetuit Deus, quâ re remunerabimur? Perinde enim hoc foret, ac si diceret puer, Quando legero, quidnam mihi dabitur? ac diceretur ipsi, Res ista talis. Videntes enim infirmitatem intellectus ipsius, qui gradum istum non apprehendit, sed finis [veri] finem [alium] quærit, respondetur ipsi secundum stultitiam ipsius [sicut dicitur] ⁴ Responde stulto juxta stultitiam suam Vetuerunt autem hoc etiam Sapientes, scil. ut statuât homo finem cultus sui, & obsequii erga mandata, rem aliquam. Quò spectat dictum [viri] præstantis, perfecti, qui verum optimè perspexit, Antigoni [nempe] Socensis, Ne sitis instar servorum, qui serviunt Domino eâ conditione ut accipiant mercedem, sed sitis ut servi, qui serviunt Domino etiam nullâ expectatâ mercede; quo voluerunt amplectendam veritatem veritatis ipsius gratiâ: atque hoc est quod innuunt cum dicunt, Serviens [Deo] ex amore. Dixerunt etiam, quibus pax, In præceptis ejus delectatur valde. Dixit Rab. Eleazar, Præceptis ejus, Et non mercede præceptorum ipsius. Quantum autem, & quàm perspicuum est hoc argumentum? Est enim ratio manifesta illius quod in superioribus diximus. Hoc tamen ipso majus est dictum ipsorum in textu libri Sifre, Ne fortè dicas, Ecce ego disco Legem ea propter ut sim dives,

ea propter ut vocer Rabbi, ut accipiam mercedem in seculo futuro: docemur dicere ad diligendum Dominum, quicquid feceritis, ne faciatis nisi ex amore tantum. Manifesta ergo est hæc sententia, constatque eam Legis scopum esse, & fundamentum ejus quod profitentur Sapientes, nec adeo cæcus est quis, ut eam non perspiciat, nisi stultus, hebes, quem cogitationum ineptarum & imaginationum vitiofarum suggestus perdidit. Fuit autem iste gradus Abrahami patris nostri, quod scilicet fuerit Seviens [Deo] ex amore, & ad hanc viam sedulò nitendum est. Cum autem perspectum haberent Sapientes, quibus pax, obscuram admodum esse hanc sententiam, quamque non omnes capiunt; & si intellexerint, non tamen ei statim assentiunt, neque pro vera habendam esse censent. Neque enim facit quis opera aliqua, nisi ut iis consequatur utilitatem, aut repellat damnum, sin minus, futura est actio ipsius frustranea. Quomodo ergo dicetur ei qui Legem amplectitur, Facias hæc opera, aut, hæc ne facias, non ob metum pœnæ [à] Deo, neque spe mercedis ab ipso consequendæ. Durum admodum hoc erit, quia non omnes rerum veritatem capiunt, ut sint Abrahamo patri nostro similes. Ideo permiserunt vulgo ut in opinione sua maneant; scilicet faciendâ esse bona spe præmii, & mala metu pœnæ fugienda; utque ad hoc excitentur, & in sententia sua hac de re confirmantur, donec rebus melius apprehendendis [valeat] qui eas intelligere vult, ac quid verum, & quæ via perfectior sit dignoscat, quemadmodum cum puero inter docendum, juxta similitudinem præmissam, agimus: quare Antigono Socensi vitio verterunt, quod sententiam suam palam coram vulgo protulerit, ideoque dixerunt Sapientes, Cavete verbis vestris, &c. uti in Abotb explicaturi sumus. Nec tamen prorsus operam perdunt isti è vulgo dum Legi, metu pœnæ, & spe præmii obsequuntur, verum nondum sunt perfecti: probaturque in ipsis illud, quò ita acquiratur ipsis habitus atque exercitatio in obedientia Legis, ut indè ad veritatem transitum facientes, servi ex amore evadant. Atque hoc est quod dicunt, Semper det homo operam Legi, etiamsi non ipsius gratiâ, quoniam ex hoc [quòd præstet ipsam] non sui gratiâ, eò perveniet [ut &c.] sui gratiâ [præstet.] Ex iis autem quæ scire debes, est, in verbis Sapientum, quibus pax [interpretandis,] distribui homines in tres classes, Prima (atque hi plurimi sunt eorum quos vel quorum scripta vidi, aut de quibus audiavi) eorum est, qui ea juxta sensum literalem intelligi volunt, neque ea ullatenus interpretantur, adeo ut his impossibilia quævis necessario existere videantur. Hoc autem fecerunt, quòd scientiarum prorsus rudes sint, & à disciplinis alieni, neque in eo perfectionis gradu ut ipsi sibi monitores sint, nec alium qui eos moneret, invenerint. Putant ergo isti noluisse Sapientes in omnibus indubitatae veritatis dictis suis aliud, quàm quod ipsi ex iisdem perceperint, eaque prout sonant verba intelligenda, etiamsi quod primò multis in ipsorum dictis apparet prorsus absurdum sit, adeo ut si juxta illud quod præ se ferunt verba considerantes, dicentque, Quomodo fiet, ut quot in mundo sunt hominum quispiam hoc imaginetur, & pro verâ habeat sententiam? tantum abest ut illud laudare velit. [Digna] autem est misera hæc secta, cujus defleatur stultitia; nam dum se Sapientes extollere putat, in infimum eos gradum dejicit: nesciens interim se ita facere. Quinimo certissimè secta ista religionem honore suo spoliât, ejusque splendorem obfuscat, Legemque Dei in contrarium ei ad quod ipsa dirigitur, detorquet. Nam cum Deus in ipso legis textu dicat, Qui audient omnia statuta ista, & dicent, Tantum populus sapiens & intelligens, gens magna ista, genus hoc hominum contexit è sono verborum Sapientum illud quod si audierint gentes [aliæ] dicerent, Certè populus stultus & fatuus est gens ista parva. Qui autem plurimum hoc faciunt, sunt Homiliaistæ, qui ea hominibus explicant, quæ ipsi non intelligunt, atque utinam cum non intelligant, tacere vellent, Quis dabit tacendo tacere-tis, & esset vobis ad Sapientiam? aut dicerent saltem, Nescimus quid velint Sapientes hoc dicto, aut quomodo exponendum sit; verum ipsi illud se intelligere putant, atque hoc fatagunt, ut hominibus explicant illud quod ipsi intellexerint, non quod dixerint Sapientes; coram vulgo explicationes [tract.] Beracoth & capitis Chelek, prout verba ad literam sonant, proferentes.

Classis secunda numerosa etiam est, istorum scil. qui cum dicta Sapientum legerint aut audierint, atque juxta sonum verborum acceperint, rati nòluisse Sapientes aliud quàm quod præ se ferunt verba, incipiunt stultitiæ, fœditatis & absurditatis incusare illud quod absurdum non est; ac frequenter verbis Sapientum illudunt, se illis sapientiores & perspicaciores esse judicantes, atque illos, quibus pax, deceptos fuisse, judicii expertes, omnium rerum ignaros, adeò ut nihil prorsus intelligerent. Eorum qui hanc opinionem amplectuntur plerique sunt ex iis qui se medicos profitentur, quique circa astrorum effectus ineptiunt. Sunt enim hi, opinione suâ, acuti, Sapientes, Philosophi; at quàm longè absunt ab eo ut pro hominibus habeantur apud vere Philosophos. Sunt autem hi stultiores Classe priori, magisque fatui. Secta certè maledicta, quòd hæc effutiat contra viros magnos de quorum scientia apud doctos liquidò constat. Quòd si disciplinis operam navarent, ut scirent quomodo de Theologicis & ejusmodi rebus sermo, tum apud vulgus, tum apud doctiores, instituendus sit, & partem Philosophiæ practicam tenerent, tum demum constaret fuerintne Sapientes [nostri] viri docti, annon: & manifestus esset ipsis eorum quæ ab illis dicta sunt, sensus. Secta tertia paucorum admodum est, adeò ut non aliter secta audiat quàm sol species: sunt autem illi apud quos de merito Sapientum, & bonâ ipsoꝝ intentione, inde constat, quòd dictis ipsoꝝ involuta reperiantur verba, quæ sensus admodum veros innuant, quæ pauca licet fuerint, eaque sparsim in [diversis] locis librorum ab ipsis compositorum posita, indicant quâ fuerint perfectione, ipsosque rerum veritatem apprehendisse. Constat etiam ipsis de eorum quæ fieri non possunt impossibilitate, ejusque quod necessarium est necessitate, noruntque illos, q. p. non locutos fuisse de eo quod fieri non possit, undè certò statuunt subesse verbis ipsoꝝ exterius [quid] & interius, ac quotiescunque loquantur de rebus impossibilibus, habere verba ipsoꝝ rationem ænigmatis & parabolæ; iste enim mos fuit Sapientum magnorum, ideòque orsus est princeps Sapientum librum suum, dicendo, Ad intelligendum parabolam & facundiam, verba Sapientum, & ænigmata eorum. No-

^b 2 Sam. xxiii. 20.

ⁱ Ib. v. 15.

^k Ecclef. xii. 10.

[sententiâ] conceditur, ut Angelis, stellis, & sphaëris, nullam esse voluptatem asseramus. Quinimo magna admodum iis, ex eo quod de Creatore intelligunt, oritur voluptas: atque inde fit ut perpetuâ fruantur & quæ nunquam cessat voluptate: non est tamen ipsis voluptas [aliqua] corporea, nec eam percipiunt, cum non sint illis, ut nobis, sensus, quibus ea quæ nos percipimus assequantur: eodémque modo, cum è nobis quis dignus factus fuerit qui gradum istum post mortem consequatur, non ampliùs voluptates corporeas percepturus est, easve appetiturus, magis quàm Rex, magni regni Dominus, regno suo exui cupiat, ut ad pili lusum in plateis redeat, etiam si fuerit tempus quo sine dubio lusum istum pili regno anteferet, viz. cum adhuc puer utramque rerum istarum simul expertus non fuisset: sicut & nos hodie voluptatem corpoream, ei quæ animæ propria est, anteferimus. Cum autem voluptatum istarum binarum qualitatem perpenderis, unius vilitatem, & alterius dignitatem, etiam in hoc mundo, facillè dignoscas. Homines enim plerisque, vel potius omnes, cernimus animis ac corporibus suis molestiam & laborem, quo nullus gravior esse potest, imponere, ut gradum sublimem consequantur, aut magni ab hominibus fiant; non est autem hæc voluptas eadem cum illa quæ à cibo aut potu provenit. Similiter multi vindictam de inimicis sumendam multis corporis voluptatibus præferunt: quin & multi etiam maximas inter corporis delectationes fugiunt, vel opprobrii & dedecoris ipsas secuturi metu, vel famæ consequendæ desiderio. Cum ergò ita comparatæ sint res in hoc etiam mundo corporeo, quanto magis in futuro, ubi animæ nostræ de Creatore, quantum corpora cœlestia, aut etiam ampliùs, percepturæ sint. Neque enim voluptas ista in partes distribuitur, neque enarrari potest, neque reperitur similitudo aliqua quacum comparari possit; verum, uti dixit Propheta, ejus magnitudinem admiratus, Quàm magna est bonitas tua, quam recondisti timentibus te, & fecisti sperantibus in te! Atque ita dixerunt, q. p. In mundo futuro nec est esus, nec potus, nec lotio, nec unctio, neque usus lecti conjugal, verum sedent iusti coronas in capite gestantes, & voluptatem è splendore majestatis divinæ capientes; ubi verbis istis, Coronas in capite gestantes, innuit duraturam esse animam duratione objecti scientiæ suæ, efféque ipsam & ipsum rem unam, sicut & à Philosophis peritioribus multis modis, quos hîc explicare longum esset, declaratum est: eo autem quod dicit, Voluptatem capientes è splendore divinæ Majestatis, animas istas eo quod de Creatore intelligunt, oblectari, quemadmodum animalia sancta, & reliqui angelorum ordines, eo quod de essentia ipsius percipiunt. Beatitudo autem & finis ultimus est, ut quis ad hunc cœtum supremum pertingat, & gradum istum consequatur, durétque anima in eo quem descripsimus statu, in æternum, juxta durationem Creatoris gloriosi, qui causa est durationis ejus, eo quod ipsum apprehendat, quemadmodum in Philosophia prima traditum est: atque hoc certè bonum est magnum, cui æquari aliud non potest, cuique nulla voluptas similis est. Quomodo enim comparabitur quod perpetuum est sine termino, rei quæ finem habet? atque hoc est quod dixit Deus, Ut benè sit tibi, & prolonges dies: cujus dicti explicalem eoque torrefacturum, ad quod probandum adhibent dictum ipsius, Quia ecce dies venit, ardens instar fornacis, &c. Autumant alii, æstum mirum in corporibus ipsorum oriturum, qui ea com-

tionem traditione accepimus, Ut bene fit tibi, in sæculo quod totum est bonum, & prolonges dies, in sæculum quod totum est longum. Miseria autem perfecta est, ut excisa pereat anima, ne durationem consequatur, quod est Cereth, cujus in lege fit mentio. Significatus autem Cereth est, Excidium animæ, quemadmodum explicavit, dicens, Exscindendo exscindetur anima ista: dicunt autem q. p. Exscindendo in hoc sæculo, Exscindetur in sæculo futuro: dicitque Scriptura, Sit anima Domini mei colligata in fasciculo vitæ, &c. Quicunque enim voluptates corporeas sectatur, & rejectâ veritate, quod falsum est amplectitur, gradu isto excelfo excidit, & materia tantum separata remanet. Sæculum verò futurum sensibus corporeis nequaquam apprehendi indicat Propheta hoc ipsius dicto, Oculus non vidit, O Deus, præter te quid faciat expectanti ipsum. Ad quod explicandum dixerunt, Omnes Prophetæ universim non prophetarunt, nisi de diebus Messia, at quod ad mundum futurum, oculus non vidit, ô Deus, præter te. Quod autem ad promissa & minas quorum mentio est in lege, eorum interpretatio hæc est quam tibi indicaturus sum: scil. dicere ipsum, si obsecutus fueris istis præceptis, opem tibi feremus ad ea præstanda, & perfectionem iis [acquirendam] omniâque quæ te impediunt tollemus: neque enim potest quis ipsi cultum præstare, si vel morbo laboret, vel fame opprimatur, vel siti, neque bello [vexatus]. Hæc igitur omnia se amoturum promittit, ipsosque bonâ valetudine & tranquillitate fruituros, quo perficiatur ipsis scientia, & vitâ mundi futuri digni fiant. Neque enim is legis finis est, ut uberes proventus faciat terra, & producantur hominum vitæ, ac convalescant corpora, verum ut his rebus omnibus adjuventur homines ad ipsam præstandam. Eodemque modo, si transgressi essent, hoc erit ipsis in pœnam, quod contingerent ipsis ista impedimenta omnia, adeo ut bonum facere non possent, ut & dixit, Propterea quod non colueris Dominum, &c. Ubi autem sententiam hanc admirandam perpenderis, invenies perinde se habere ac si dixisset, Si quædam horum præceptorum ex amore fedulò præstiteris, opem tibi ad ea omnia [præstanda] feremus, à te obstacula & impedimenta auferendo. Quod si aliqua ipsorum neglexeris, ea villi pendens, impedimenta tibi quæ ab iis omnibus impediunt, immisuri sumus, adeo ut perfectionem consequi non valeas neque durationem: atque hic sensus est ejus quod dicunt, q. p. Merces præcepti præceptum, & merces transgressionis transgressio. Quod autem ad Paradisum, locum, scil. fertile in sphærâ terræ, aquis irriguum, fructibus abundantem, quem futurum est ut Deus hominibus detegat, iisque viam ad ipsum monstret, ut in eo oblectentur, ac in quo forsitan reperientur plantæ admodum miræ, magnæ utilitatis ac suavitatis, ab his quæ nobis notæ sunt, diversæ; hæc omnia ejusmodi sunt quæ fieri possunt, neque longe ab intellectu remota, sed concessu facilia, etiamsi eorum non meminisset lex, multo magis cùm in lege expressa fuerint, & manifesta. Quod ad Gehennam verò, est illud nomen cruciatus quo torquendi sunt mali, cujus descriptio manifesta in Talmude non habetur. Dicunt autem nonnulli, appropinquaturum ipsis so-burat,

burat, quod probant dicto ipsius, ⁱ Spiritus vester, ignis comedet vos. Quod ad resurrectionem autem mortuorum, est ea fundamentum è fundamentis legis Mosis; quam si quis non credat, non est ipsi in Judæorum Religione fors aut locus. Pertinet ea ad solos virtute præstantes. Expresse enim dicitur in Berebith Rabba, Demissio pluvie justorum simul est & injustorum, at resurrectio mortuorum justorum tantum. Ac quomodo victuri sunt injusti, cum mortui sint etiam dum vivunt? ita dixerunt, q. p. Mali etiam dum vivunt mortui appellantur: at justi etiam post mortem vivi audiunt. Scias autem hominem necessariò mori, & in illud è quo compositus est resolvi. Quod ad dies Messie autem, sunt illi tempus, quo restituendum est Israeli regnum, ipseque in Palæstinam redituri. Erit autem Rex iste potens, cujus regni metropolis erit Zion, cujus nomen celebre ac ultimas terræ partes famâ impleturum, Salomone major ac ditior, quocum pacem inituræ sunt gentes & obsequium ipsi præstitutæ provinciæ, ob insignem ipsius justitiam & quæ ab ipso fient miracula. Quod si quis in ipsum insurrexerit, perditum illum in manum ipsius tradet Deus. Omnes autem scripturæ textus, tum ipsius, tum nostram quam per eum [consequemur] felicitatem prædicant. At non mutabitur in rerum natura quicquam ab eo quo nunc est statu, nisi quod regnum penes Israelem futurum sit. Ita expresse dixerunt Sapientes, Non est inter sæculum hoc & dies Messie [discrepantia] præter subjugationem regnorum tantum. Eruntque sub ipso alii aliis fortiores & debiliores; verum istis diebus facilis admodum paratu hominibus erit victus, adeò ut quam minimâ fieri possit molestiâ magnum quis assequatur lucrum; atque huc spectat quod dicunt, Futurum est ut producat terra Israelis placentas & vestes sericas: dicunt enim vulgo, cum quis remi faciliè & in promptu invenerit, Invenit & d'ava panem pistum & cibum coctum: quod ut indicant Scripturæ verba, Eruntque alienigenæ agricolæ vestri & vinatores vestri; ita simul futuram tunc temporis arationem & messem probant; quare iratus est Sapiens ille qui hanc sententiam protulit Discipulo suo, qui hanc ipsius sententiam non intelligens, verbis prout sonant acceptis, ipsi pro modulo captus fui responsum, quod revera nullum est, reddidit. Neque enim ipsum prout veritati consentaneum est respondisse, argumento est quod reponit, Ne respondeas stulto juxta stultitiam suam. Magna autem temporum istorum fœlicitas erit, quod tunc à jugo regni mali, quod nos ab omnium virtutum studio retinet, liberabimur, ac multiplicabitur scientia, sicut dixit, ⁱ quia replebitur terra scientiâ Domini, tollenturque lites & bella, ut & dixit, ⁱ Nec tollet gens in gentem gladium, concessâ illis qui tunc vivent perfectione magnâ quâ ad vitam sæculi futuri pertingant. Morietur autem Messiah, regnabuntque post ipsum filius & nepotes. Morituum enim ipsum indicat Deus, ⁲ Non caligabit, nec frangetur, donec ponat in terrâ judicium, &c. At diutissimè duraturum est regnum ipsius, ac longævi tunc homines futuri. Sublatis enim doloribus & molestiis prolongantur vitæ: neque certè alienum à vero est, ⁱ Isa. xxxiii. 11. ⁲ Prior Editio sic habuit, [vestes, Melotas, sericas]. — Melotas autem in Margine ponendum, ut vocis Hebraicæ sonum magis quam sensum hoc loco exprimat, quamvis enim Heb. מילת, Vestes Sericæ, à μυλῶν formari videatur, aliter tamē à Judæis exponitur, scil. קמאש חריר ומרקוב בנקש ותואויק ונחו דלך. Supellex serica, & opere variegato, aurōque ornata, & ejusmodi. Verba sunt R. Tanchum, qui מילת & מילת synonymia esse ait, נקש ותואויק, res opere variegato, aurōque, sive picturâ exornare, denotantia. Ita correxit Cl. Auctor in not. ad finem hujus tractatus.

rum exempla tibi aliquot in hoc sermone meo dedi, è quibus de reliquis conjecturam facias. Ne autem mihi vitio vertatur illud, quod in oratione mea accidit, ut verbis quibusdam & notionibus, quæ improbant sapientes, liberiùs utar; hanc enim mihi libertatem indulgi, quò intelligere fa-

est, duraturum regnum ipsius ad quædam annorum millia. Afferunt enim, Bonorum consortium, ubi coaluerit, non facile dissolvi. Non autem adeo desiderandi sunt dies Messiae, ut vel multiplicentur frumentum & opes, vel ut equis vehamur, aut adhibitis instrumentis musicis compotemus, ut existimant qui confusi sunt intellectu; verum eos optarunt Prophetæ & avidè expectarunt viri præstantes ob illam, quæ tunc futura est, bonorum societatem, conversationem probam, & scientiam, Regisque justitiam & insignem scientiam, gradumque quo ad creatorem suum est, propinquum (sicut ipsi dixit, ^a Tu es filius meus) quòdque tota Mosis Lex sine fastidio, perturbatione aut coactione præstanda sit, sicut promissit, ^b Non docebunt quisque proximum suum, &c. quoniam omnes me cognoscent à magno eorum usque ad parvum eorum: ponamque Legem meam in corde ipsorum, & auferam cor lapideum è carne vestra, &c. (cùm multis ejusmodi Scripturæ locis eodem spectantibus :) quibus moribus firmitè apprehenditur sæculum futurum. Quod autem ad finem ultimum, est ille sæculum futurum, quò enitendum. Ideòque finem illum respiciens [Doctor] iste veridicus, omiſſis aliis, Omni Isralitæ (inquit) sors est in sæculo futuro. Quamvis autem sit ipsum finis, non tamen debet ille, qui se servum ex amore præstare velit, ideò Deum colere ut mundum futurum acquirat; uti in præcedentibus explicavimus; sed eàquam descripturus sum ratione: sc. quod ubi crediderit collatam prophetis à Deo scientiam quæ eos docuit ita se habere virtutes, ita vitia, oporteat ipsum, quæ hominem rectè dispositum, virtutes sectari, vitia autem fugere: quod cùm fecerit, impletum est in ipso illud quod hominis nomine innuitur, ipseque à bestiis distinctus. Cùmque jam evaserit homo perfectus, est è differentiis hominis, cui non obstat impedimentum aliquod, hoc, ut anima ipsius duratione ejus quod scit, perduret, quod est (uti explicavimus) sæculum futurum. Atque hùc spectat illud quod dicit, ^c Ne sitis ut equus & mulus quibus non est intellectus, &c. i. e. quibus, illud quod eos retinet, ne liberè evagentur, aliquid est exterius additum, frænum putà aut capistrum; homini verò non ita, cùm quod ipsum retineat ipse sit; viz. forma ipsius humana, quæ, ubi perfecta fuerit, ipsum retrahet ab eo quod perfectioni ipsius obstat, qualia sunt quæcunque Vitiorum nomine appellantur: at è contra incitabit ad illud quo perficiatur; nimirum Virtutes. Atque hoc est quod ex iis omnibus, quæ de insigni hoc ac magni momenti argumento locuti sunt, liquere arbitror. Compositurus sum autem librum, in quo explicationes mysticas, quæ in Talmude aliisque libris reperiuntur, omnes simul collectas explicabo, atque interpretatione veritati congruà exponam, quam etiam totam ex ipsorum verbis confirmans, indicabo quænam ex illis prout sonant [accipiendæ;] quænam parabolæ sint; quænam, cùm in somno acciderint; oratione tamen liberiori enarrentur, quasi vigilantibus contigissent: quo etiam explicaturus sum tibi opiniones multas, resque non paucas, quæ dedi, è quibus de reliquis conjecturam facias. Ne

^a Psal. ii. 7.^b Jer. xxxi. 34.^c Psal. xxxii. 10.

cerem illum, qui non prius in aliquibus ad materiam hanc sublimem, quam non omnes capiunt, spectantibus, institutus fuerit.

Quod ad nomen Epicurus, vox est Syriaca, cujus significatus est, Despectus & contemptus legis aut eorum qui legem præ se ferunt; ideoque nomen hoc generaliter ei qui fundamenta legis non crediderit, quive Sapientes, aut quemlibet ipsorum discipulum, aut præceptorem suum contemptui habuerit, attribuitur. Libros exoticos vocant, libros hæreticorum, eodémque modo libros Ben Siræ. Fuit autem ille vir quidam qui libros de rebus futilibus ad artem conjectandi spectantibus, quibus nulla inest vel scientia, vel utilitas, sed inane temporis dispendium, composuit: quales sunt & libri isti qui reperiuntur apud Arabes, Historici scil. & de rebus gestis Regum, Arabumque genealogiis, & Cantilenarum, cum ejusmodi aliis, in quibus neque ulla est scientia, nec utilitas ad corpus redundans verum mera temporis jactura.

Qui adfufurrat plagæ: eâ nempe conditione, ut cum emissionem sputi fiat; quoniam in hoc est contemptus nominis divini. Et qui pronuntiat nomen literis suis: ut scil. proferat Yod, He, Vau, He, quod est nomen expressum. Quin & alia recensent quæ qui fecerit nullam est [ibi] habiturus partem. Dicunt enim, Qui pudore afficit socium suum coram multis, non est illi pars in mundo futuro: neque ei qui socium suum agnomine appellat: aut qui contemptu socii sui sibi gloriam querit. Neque enim horum factorum aliquod, etiam si parva alicui videantur, aliunde procedit, quàm ab animo vitioso neutiquam perfecto, quique vitæ sæculi futuri idoneus non sit. Porro, ex iis quæ opus est ut hîc tibi commemorem, (est enim hic locus illi commemorando aptissimus,) est articulos legis nostræ, ejusque fundamenta numero tredecim esse.

Fundamentum primum est, Esse Creatorem (cui laus:) Scil. Esse qui sit perfectissimo efficiendi modo; quique sit causa quod sint ea quæ sunt omnia, quodque sustineatur essentia ipsorum, & à quo durationem habeant, [adeo ut] si supposuerimus sublatam esse essentiam ipsius, tolleretur protinus essentia omnium quæ sunt, nec duraret quicquam sibi ad hoc ut esset sufficiens: Quod si supposuerimus sublata esse quæ sunt omnia præter ipsum, non tolleretur essentia ipsius, nec defectum pateretur. Est siquidem Ipse celsissimus nullius indigens ad hoc ut sit, cum quicquid præter ipsum est, sive Intelligentiæ, (Angeli, scil. & orbes cœlestes) sive quæ infra eas sunt omnia, ipso, ad hoc ut existant, indigeant. Atque hoc est fundamentum primum, quod innuitur voce, Ego Dominus, &c.

Fundamentum secundum est Unitas Dei. scil. Illum [qui] omnium causa est, unum esse; non tamen ut unum genere, vel specie, vel ut individuum unum compositum quod in unitates multas dividitur; vel ut corpus simplex unum numero quod divisionis & distributionis in partes infinitas capax est, verum eum unum esse unitate cui non sit alia aliqua ullo modo similis. Atque hoc est fundamentum secundum, quod indicatur dicto ipsius, Audi Israel, Dominus Deus tuus unus est.

Fundamentum tertium est, Amotio corporeitatis à Deo; scil. quod Unus iste non sit corpus, neque potentia in corpore, neque accidant ipsi corporum accidentia, veluti motus, & quies, vel per per se, vel per accidens: ideoque negarunt, q. p. ipfi attribuendas esse conjunctionem & separationem, dicentes, Neque sessus, neque statio, neque Oreph, neque Ippui, id est, neque separatio (quod per Oreph intelligunt) neque conjunctio: quoniam nomen Ippui defumptum est ab eo quod dicitur, ^a Et volabunt in humerum Philistæorum: i. impellent illos humero utpote iis conjuncti. Dicit autem Propheta, Cui assimilabitur Deus, &c. & cui assimilabitur me ut sim æqualis, &c. quod si corpus esset, assimilaretur corporibus. Sicubi igitur in Scripturis epithetis corporum propriis describitur, e. g. motu à loco ad locum, quod surgat & quod sedeat; aut loquatur, & quæ hujusmodi sunt, esse ea omnia Metaphorica, & quemadmodum dicunt, Locuta est lex linguâ hominum. Multa autem de hoc argumento dixerunt homines. Hoc igitur fundamentum tertium est, quod innuitur eo quod dixit, ^e Quia non vidistis omnem similitudinem, &c. i. e. non apprehendistis ipsum sub aliquâ similitudine, cum ipse (ut diximus) neque sit corpus, neque potentia in corpore.

Fundamentum quartum est, Æternitas: scilicet: Unum hunc quem descripsimus, esse simpliciter æternum, quicquid autem præter ipsum existit, non esse, respectu ipsius, æternum. Hujus probationes in Scripturis multæ sunt, atque ad ipsum intenditur digitus, eo quod dixit, ^f Habitaculum est Deus æternus.

Fundamentum quintum, Illum esse qui colendus fit, cûjunque veneratio & obsequium prædicanda, neque hoc alicui [eorum] qui ipso essentiâ inferiora sunt, Angelorum nempe, stellarum, orbium cœlestium, elementorum, aut quicquid ex iis componitur, præstandum; cùm hæc omnia naturâ ad opera sua peficienda ordinata sint, neque sit ipsis arbitrium aut electio, sed amor Dei tantum; neque assumenda esse ea pro mediatoribus, quorum ope ad ipsum accedamus, verum ad ipsum [unum] dirigendas esse cogitationes, & ab omnibus, ipso excepto, avertendas. Atque hoc Fundamentum quintum prohibitio est cultûs Idololatrici, in quo vetando maxima legis pars occupatur.

Fundamentum sextum est Prophetia, scilicet. sciendum esse, reperiri in genere humano quosdam indole admodum præstanti magnâque perfectione præditos, quorum cùm animæ ad recipiendam formam intellectûs dispositæ fuerint, ac deinde intellectus iste humanus cum intellectu agente jungatur, nobilis quædam ab eo in ipsos influentia derivatur; sunt autem hi Prophetæ, hæc prophetia, hîcque ejus significatus; quod Fundamentum plenè dilucidare longum foret valdè. Neque verò hoc nobis demonstratum est, ut horum fundamentorum singula demonstrationibus probemus, aut quomodo percipi possint ostendamus, cùm hoc omnium esset scientiarum aggregatio, verum ut historicè tantum ea enarremus. Scripturæ autem loca quibus Prophetarum muneri testimonium perhibetur, multa sunt.

Fundamentum septimum est Prophetia Moysi doctoris nostri; scilicet. ut credatur, ipsum omnium Prophetarum, qui vel ante ipsum vel post ipsum fuerint, patrem esse, qui omnes gradu sunt ipso inferiores, ipsumque è toto genere humano à Deo electum

electum esse qui de ipso plus quàm apprehenderit, aut apprehensurus est, alius quispiam qui vel fuerint, vel futuri sint hominum, apprehendit; ipsum autem eò ultra humanæ naturæ terminos evectum, ut ad regni [cœlestis] gradum pertigerit, & in Angelorum ordinem relatus fuerit, adeò ut non restaret ipsi velum quod non perumperet, neque obstarat illi remora aliqua corporea, neque admistum ei fuerit quicquam omnino, sive minus sive plus, defectus. Quin & sublatae sunt ab eo potentiae imaginatrices & sensitiva cum suis apprehendendi modis, obstupuitque facultas ejus appetitrix manente tantum intellectu; quam ob rationem, indè quòd Deum allocutus sit sine mediatione, Angelorum cognomen accepit. Porro sententiam istam miram hoc loco elucidare, unaque textus Legis obferatos recludere, necnon [verborum, istorum] Ore ad os, intellectum cum toto isto contextu, aliisque eodem spectantibus enodare voluissimus, nisi viderem notiones istas valde subtiles esse, quæque fusiori tractatione, præfationibusque & similitudinibus indigeant; priusque probandum esse dari Angelos, & Ordines, in quos à Creatore distincti sunt, diversos; ac de animâ, omnibusque ejus facultatibus dicendum: atque hoc pacto ampliatum iri circulum, adeo ut loquendum esset etiam de formis quas tribuerunt Prophetæ Creatori & Angelis. Neque sufficerent ad absolvenda quæ ad hanc solam spectant materiam, etiamsi quàm compendiosissimè agerem, vel centum folia; quare illud loco suo relinquam, sive in lib. explicationis allegoriarum quem promisi, sive in lib. Prophetiæ in quo jam defixus sum, aut in lib. quem de explicatione horum fundamentorum compositurus sum. Jam autem ut ad septimi hujus fundamenti scopum revertar, Dico prophetiam Mosis distinctam esse à prophetia reliquorum Prophetarum quatuor differentiis. Prima est, Quòd quemlibet [aliorum] Prophetarum non allocutus fuerit Dominus, nisi per mediationem, at Mosen sine mediatore, sicut dixit, Ore ad os alloquar ipsum. Secunda, quòd ad cæteros prophetas omnes non perveniret visio nisi inter dormiendum, sicut dixit in diversis locis, in somnio, noctu; & somniavit: In somnio in visione noctis, &c. cujusmodi multa sunt: aut tempore diurno, post soporem, qui Prophetæ obtingeret, aut statum quo cessantibus ab officio suo sensibus vacuæ relinquerentur cogitationes ipsius, ut in somno fieri solet, qui status vocatur Machazeh, & Mareeh, i. Visio, de quibus dicit, In visionibus Dei: at ad Mosen interdiu delatus est sermo stante ipso inter binos Cherubin, sicut promisit ipsi Deus, ^h Et conveniam te illic, ibique loquar tecum, &c. Dixit Deus, ⁱ Si fuerit è vobis Propheta, Dominus in visione ipsi fiam notus, in somnio loquar ad eum. Non sic servus meus Moses, &c.

Tertia differentia, quòd cùm ad Prophetam facta esset revelatio, etiamsi in visione & mediante Angelo, infirmari tamen natura ipsius, & debilitari corporis status irruente in ipsum conflatione admodum magnâ, quòd parum aberat, quin animam ageret; uti in Daniele, alloquente ipsum Gabriele per visionem, liquet; dicit enim, ^k Neque remansit in me fortitudo, &c. Necnon, Fui ego soporatus super faciem meam, & facies mea ad terram. Dicit etiam, ⁱ In visione conversi sunt dolores mei in me. At cum Mose non ita se res habuit, quem, veniente ad ipsum alloquio; nulla prorsus apprehendit perturbatio, sicut dicit, ^m Et allocutus est Dominus Mosè facie ad faciem, sicut alloquitur vir socium suum, i. quemadmodum nulla accidit homini commotio ab alloquio focii sui, ita nec ille, c. p. alloquente ipsum [Deo,] etiam facie ad faciem, commotus est, quod ob arctam cum intellectu conjunctionem, uti explicavimus, factum. Differentia quarta. Quod cæteris prophetis haudquaquam ad arbitrium suum afflatus divinus contingeret, sed fluere aliquando prophetæ alicui anni aliquot, quibus nulla ipsi visio patefieret, quin & sæpe ut quid de re aliquâ revelaretur, ostenderet, rogatus, non nisi post dies aliquot aut menses prophetiam ederet, aut fortè nihil omnino de ipsa notum haberet. Videmus etiam aliquot ex ipsis, quo animam suam recrearent, ac cogitationes defæcarent adhibendo se parasse, sicuti fecit Elisba cum diceret, ⁿ Afferte mibi nunc fidicinem, quò facto spiritu prophetico afflatus est, nec tamen necesse erat ut vel ita parato patefieret aliquid. Mosès autem Doctor noster quandocunque liberet, dicere [solebat] ^o Subsistite & audiam quid præcepturus sit vobis Dominus. Et dictum est, ^p Alloquere Abaronem fratrem tuum ne intret omni tempore. Dixerunt, Abaron omni [tempore] ingrediebatur, & Mosès non ingrediebatur.

Fundamentum octavum est, Lex è cælo [demissa.] scil. ut credatur, universam Legem istam, quæ apud nos hodie reperitur, esse ad Mosè [cælitus] demissam, totamque ex ore Dei profectam, viz. pervenisse eam totam ad ipsum à Deo eo perveniendi [modo] quem formâ loquendi Metaphoricâ Sermonem appellat, cum qualitate modi istius haud alius præter ipsum c. p. ad quem pervenit, noverit: fuisse autem ipsum instar Scribæ qui ipsam sibi dictatam totam describeret; ejus [scil.] historias, narrationes, & præcepta, unde Mechokek [Scriba] audit: nec ulla est differentia inter [verba] ^q Et filii Chami, Cush, & Mitsraim, & Put, & Canaan, &c. & nomen uxoris ipsius Mahtabel, f. Matred, & [ista] Ego sum Dominus, &c. & Audi, Israel, Dominus Deus tuus Dominus unus. Omnia enim ex ore Omnipotentis profecta sunt, suntque omnia Lex Domini perfecta, pura, sancta, veritas. Ideoque ipsorum sententiâ omnes infideles, infidelitate & hypocrisi superabat Manassès, quod putaret esse in lege medullam & corticem, atque genealogias istas & historias nulli rei utiles esse, ac ab ipso Mosè fuisse, quod illis innuunt verbis, Non est Lex de cælo; ille, inquiunt, qui confessus fuerit totam Legem ex ore Domini profectam esse unico excepto versiculo quem non protulit Deus Sanctus, Benedictus, sed ipse Mosès; atque hoc est quod dicitur, ^r Verbum Domini sprevit, (longè elatus est Deus supra infidelium dicta,) verum unusquisque apex ejus judicia & res miras suppeditat illi qui ipsum intelligit, nec certè apprehendi potest terminus sapientiæ ejus, ^s Longa est præ terra mensura ejus, & latior mari; nec quid homini superest, quàm ut Davidem unctum Dei Jacob imitetur, qui precatus est, ^t Aperi oculos meos, ut vi- tavit, cùm nobis nuntium ab ipso ferens se in eo ferendo fidelem præstiterit. Dictum autem quo ad hoc Fundamentum digitus intenditur est illud quod dixit, * Hoc scietis quòd Dominus miserit me, &c. quòd non è corde meo, &c.

Fundamentum nonum est, [de abrogatione Legis] scil. Non abrogatum iri legem istam Mosis, neque aliam præter ipsam à Deo datum iri, neque additum ipsi quippiam, neque diminutum, five in textu, five in interpretatione: Dicit, e. Non addetis illi, nec diminuetis ab eo. Jam autem explicavimus quod explicare convenit de hoc fundamento in hujus operis præfatione.

Fundamentum decimum est, Deum nosse hominum facta, neque ea neglectui habere, neque res se habere juxta sententiam ejus qui dixit, * *Reliquit Dominus terram, sed quemadmodum dixit, * Magnus consilio, & multus opere, quia oculi tui aperti super omnes vias filiorum hominis, &c.* Dixit etiam, * Et vidit Dominus quòd multa esset malitia hominis in terra. Rursum, * Clamor Sodomi & Gomorræ quia multiplicatus est. Atque hæc fundamentum hoc decimum probant.

Fundamentum undecimum, Deum remuneraturum eos qui præstiterint mandata Legis, & poenas iis qui eadem vetita patrauerint inflicturnum, maximum autem præmium esse Mundum futurum, & maximam poenam Excidium. De hoc autem hoc ipso capite diximus quantum sufficiat. Locus Scripturæ quo probatur hoc Fundamentum, est illud ipsius dictum, * Et nunc si auferes peccatum eorum; & si non, dele me nunc de libro tuo, &c. Et responsum Dei, Qui peccavit mihi, delebo eum è libro meo, quo indicat hoc obventurum obedienti & rebeli, ut ille mercedem, hic poenam ferat.

Fundamentum duodecimum est Dies Messie, viz. ut credat quis & persuasum habeat venturum ipsum, neque illum tardare putet, * Si tardaverit expectes eum, nec illi terminum constituat, aut ita exponat textus Scripturæ ut ex iis tempus adventus ipsius eliciat. Dicunt Sapientes, Infletur sententia eorum qui periodos temporum computant. Et ut credat celebrandum ipsum, honoréque, amore & comprecationibus excipiendum, juxta ea quæ de ipso ab omnibus Prophetis, à Mose usque ad Malachiam, tradita sunt. Quòd si quis de eo dubitaverit, aut ipsum parvi penderit, [illum] mendacii legem arguere, quæ ipsum [venturum] expresse promisit in Sectione Balaam, & [Sect.] * Vos statis. Sub hoc Fundamento comprehenditur etiam, Non esse Israëli Regem nisi Davide oriundum, eumque è progenie Salomonis. Quicunque autem hujus familiæ imperio obtiterit, Deum & verba Prophetarum ejus diserta abnegare.

Cùm autem fidem obtinuerint apud aliquem omnia hæc fundamenta, ipsumque ea amplecti confiterit, admittitur ille in cœtum Israëlitarum, ipsumque amore & affectu prosequi decet, & erga illum quicquid nobis mutui amoris & fraternæ charitatis præcepit Deus, exercere. Quòd si contigerit illum in aliquibus, præ concupiscentiæ & naturæ vitiosæ prævalentiâ, transgredi, poenas dabit juxta transgressionis suæ rationem, futura tamen est illi fors [in vitâ futurâ] cùm sit ex iis

Sive Octo Capitula à R. MOSE MAIMONIDE Commentario suo in PIRKE ABOTH præmissa.

JAM initio hujus operis declaravimus, quænam causa impulerit Authorem ut hunc Tractatum in hac Classe collocaret; magnas etiam hujus Tractatûs utilitates commemoravimus, nec non sæpius in præcedentibus polliciti sumus, nos in eodem de rebus [quibusdam] utilibus, idque paulò fusiùs dicturos, quoniam etsi intellectu perspicuæ & faciles fuerint, quod ad corticem, illud tamen quod in iis continetur operibus exprimere non adeo facile est omnibus, neque insuper totus eorum scopus absque explicatione idonea intelligi potest, cum interim ejusmodi sint quæ ad magnam perfectionem & veram felicitatem perducant; quare visum est mihi pluribus de ipsis differere. Dixerunt enim [Doctores nostri] q. p. Quicumque vult sanctus esse, Patrum verba præstare debet: Jam verò nullus est supra sanctitatem, Prophetiâ exceptâ, gradus, quin & illa ipsa ad hanc perducit, sicut dixerunt, Sanctitas ad [consequendum] Spiritum Sanctum perducit. Constat ergo ex ipforum dicto opera hujus Tractatûs monitis consentanea ad prophetiæ [gradum] perducere; cujus veritatem, cum magnam partem eorum quæ ad mores spectant contineat, explicaturi sumus. Verùm antequam singularum sententiarum explicationem aggrediar, visum est mihi præmittere capita aliquot non inutilia, quæ homini præcognoscenda quædam suggerent, eruntque ipsi instar clavis ad eam quæ sequetur explicationem: Scias autem illa quæ & in his capitibus & sequentibus commentariis dicturus sum, non esse res cujus ego ipse auctor fui, neque explicationes à me primò excogitatas, verùm sententias, è sermonibus sapientum, in Midrasboth, Talmude, aliisque ipforum libris, nec non è Philosophorum, tam antiquorum quàm recentiorum dictis, hominûmque variorum operibus collectas. Amplectere autem veritatem à quocunque tandem prolatam. Est etiam ubi proferam dictum integrum quod expressè habetur in libro aliquo minimè ignoto: atque his omnibus nihil ineest incommodi, nec ipse mihi vendico quod ab alio ante me dictum fuerit, cum jam illud confessi simus, etiamsi non subinde repetamus, Dixit N. Dixit N. cum hoc prolixitatis planè inutilis esset. Præterea nomen personæ appositum scrupulum non rarò minus intelligenti injiceret esse dictum illud minùs sanum, ac in se mali aliquid, quod ipse non noverit, continere: ideoque visum est mihi dicentis nomen subticere, cum is mihi scopus sit, ut ad Lectorem utilitas perveniat, eique sensus in hoc Tractatu reconditos patefaciat. Jam autem incipiam recensere capita, quæ hîc pro instituti mei ratione præmittere visum est, sũntque ea octo capita.

Caput primum, De Anima hominis, ejusque facultatibus. Scias animam hominis unam esse animam, cujus actus plures sunt & diversi, quorum aliqui animæ etiam appellantur, adeo ut videatur [nonnullis] plures esse homini Animas, quemadmodum opinantur Medici: unde scribit Princeps ipforum, Animas tres esse, Naturalem, Animalem, Spiritualem. Appellantur etiam Facultates, & partes, adeo ut dicant, Partes Animæ: Atque his nominibus frequenter utuntur Philosophi, non tamen ita ut dum dicant partes [Animæ] velint illam dividi in partes, sicut dividuntur corpora; verum ut actiones ejus diversas, quæ ad animam totam ita se habent ut partes ad totum ex ipsis compositum, enumerent. Nôsti autem rectam morum institutionem esse sanationem animæ, ac facultatum ipsius: Sicut ergo Medico, qui corporum valetudinem curat, opus est ut prius corpus illud quod curat cognitum habeat, & totum & quænam sint partes ejus (corpus humanum intelligo,) nec non quænam res illi morbum inducant, quod vitentur, & quæ illud sanum conservent, quod appetantur; ita [ei] qui animæ medetur ac mores rectè formare [vult] necesse est ut tum animam totam, tum ejus partes sciat, quidquæ illi morbi causa sit, quid sanam eam præstet. Dico igitur partes animæ quinque esse, Nutritivam, Sensitivam, Imaginatricem, Appetitricem, Rationalem. Jam autem diximus, hoc ipso capite, sermonem nostrum de anima hominis institui; quoniam nutritio (e. g.) quæ est homini, non est eadem nutritio quæ asino & equo, cum homo nutriatur parte nutritivâ animæ humanæ, at asinus parte nutritivâ animæ asini, & palma parte nutritivâ animæ propriæ; dicitur interim Nutritionem capiens, de omnibus, communicatione nominis tantum, non quod una eademque sit omnium significatio. Similiter de homine & bruto dicitur Sensibile, nomine tantum utrique communi, non quod sensus qui est in homine idem sit ac ille qui est in bruto, neque sensus qui est in hac specie, idem cum eo qui est in alia specie, verum unaquæque species animatorum animam sibi peculiarem habeat, ab alterius anima distinctam, ita ut ab hujus animâ fluant actiones [suæ,] & ab illius animâ actiones [suæ,] cum interim similis sit actio actioni, adeo ut duæ actiones res prorsus una existimentur, cum re vera non sint. Atque hoc exprimitur similitudine trium locorum obscurorum, quorum unus oriente super eo Sole, secundus Lunæ radiis, tertius accensâ in eo face illustratur; horum in singulis reperitur lux, cujus tamen [in uno] causâ & efficiens est Sol, in alio Luna, in tertio ignis: eodem modo efficiens sensûs hominis est anima hominis; efficiens sensûs asini, anima asini; efficiens sensûs vulturis, anima vulturis; neque est aliquid in quo conveniant, præter nomen omnibus commune. Hoc autem animadvertas, quia non adeo omnibus perspectum est, in quo labuntur multi Philosophantium, adeo ut ad absurda cogantur, & opiniones minimè sanas amplectendas. Ut autem ad institutum nostrum de partibus animæ revertar. Dico, partis nutritivæ esse facultatem attractricem, retentricem, concoctricem, expultricem superfluum, austoricem, generatricem similis, distinctricem humorum quæ separet illud quod nutritioni inservit ab eo quod expelli debet. Loqui autem de his septem facultatibus, quidque, & quomodo, agant, & in quibus corporis membris actiones ipsarum maxime conspicuae sint & manifestae, quaeque ex ipsis perpetuae sint, & quae tempore determinato perficiantur, de his (inquam) omnibus [loqui] spectat ad artem Medicam, nec hoc loco ius opus est. Partis sensitivae facultates sunt illae quinque omnibus notae, Visus, Auditus, Gustus, Olfactus, & Tactus qui in tota superficie corporis reperitur, nec ullum sibi membrum, ut [reliquae] quatuor facultates, appropriatum vendicat. Pars Imaginatrix est facultas quae species rerum sensu perceptarum retinet, postquam à vicinia eorum quibus percipiuntur sensuum remota fuerint, eorum invicem alia cum aliis componens, alia è contra ab aliis separans, adeo ut è rebus quas percipit, res quas nunquam percepit, quaeque reverà percipi non possint, componat; ut si, e. g. imaginetur quis navim ferream in aere natantem; aut hominem aliquem, cujus caput in coelo, pedes in terra sint; aut animal quoddam mille oculis praeditum; cum multis ejusmodi aliis quae cum fieri non possint componit facultas imaginatrix, atque in imaginatione existere facit. Hic autem lapsi sunt Scholastici errore foedo & crasso, cui fundamentum errorum suorum in distinctione Necessarii, Possibilis, & Impossibilis superstruxerunt, dum vel putarunt, vel opinari fecerunt homines, quicquid imaginatione concipi possit possibile esse; ignorantes hanc facultatem res quae fieri non possit ut existant (uti diximus,) componere. Pars appetitrix est facultas, quae vel desiderio feratur homo in rem aliquam, aut eam aversetur. Porro ab hac facultate profluunt actiones istae, Appetitus, & fuga, rei alicujus electio & detestatio, ira & complacentia, metus & audacia, crudelitas & misericordia, amor & odium, cum multis hujusmodi animae affectibus. Instrumenta autem harum facultatum sunt omnia corporis membra, velut potentia manûs, quae [inservit] praeceptioni; potentia pedis, quae incessui; potentia oculi, quae visui; potentia cordis, quae quis audax est aut timidus: quemadmodum & reliqua membra interiora & exteriora, ipsa, eorumque potentiae, instrumenta sunt hujus facultatis appetitricis.

Pars rationalis facultas est quae reperitur in homine existens, quae speculatur, quae acquirit scientias, quaeque distinguit inter actiones turpes & honestas. Harum autem actionum aliae sunt practicae, aliae speculativae: practicarum aliae artibus acquirendis subserviunt, aliae excogitando occupantur. [Operatio] autem speculativa ea est quae scit homo res mutationi non obnoxias, prout se habent; atque hae sunt scientiae absolute dictae. Ea quae artibus inservit est facultas quae artes acquirimus, veluti architectonicam, agriculturam, medicinam, artem navigandi. Quae cogitando occupatur ea est, quae de re quam facturum est, [quis] cum eam facere vult, deliberat, an fieri possit necne; & si fieri possit, quomodo debeat fieri. Estque hoc, quantum hoc loco in medium proferre expedit, de iis quae ad animam spectant. Scias autem animam istam unam, cujus facultatum aut partium descriptionem praemisimus, se habere instar materiae, cui forma est intellectus; quae dum ei non advenerit, vana est quae in ea ad eandem recipiendam reperitur dispositio, ac instar rei prorsus frustraneæ, sicut dicit, «Etiam ut sine scientia sit anima non est bonum, viz. ut existat anima formam suam non consecuta, verum scientiæ expers permaneat, non est bonum. Verum de forma, & materia, & intellectibus, quod triplices sint, & quomodo acquirantur, differere, non est hujus loci, neque ad illum quem de moribus instituimus sermonem necessarium, sed magis ad librum Prophetiæ, cujus meminimus, spectat. Hic igitur finem huic capiti imponentes, ad aliud pergemus.

Scias transgressiones & obedientiam legales reperiri in duabus tantum animæ partibus, scil. parte sensitiva, & appetente : ac ad duas has partes [referri] transgressiones & præcepta. Quod ad partem nutritivam, & imaginatricem, nec est in illis obedientia nec rebellio, quia nullus est omnino in iis deliberationis aut electionis actus : neque potest quis vi consilii sui actionem ipsarum suspendere, aut ipsas ad unam tantum actionem determinare. Annon vides has duas partes (scil. nutritivam & imaginatricem) solas ex omnibus animæ facultatibus inter dormiendum operari? Quod ad animam rationalem, est de ea dubium ; verum dico reperiri quidem in hac etiam facultate obedientiam & transgressionem, prout sententiam aliquam falsam aut veram amplectitur ; non esse autem in ipsa opus aliquod cui aut obsequii præstiti, aut transgressionis attribuitur nomen ; ideòque in præcedentibus dixi in istis duabus partibus reperiri præceptorum transgressionem, aut præstationem. Quod ad virtutes autem, sunt eæ duplicis generis, morales, & rationales : ut & ipsis contraria duo vitiorum genera. Virtutes intellectuales parti insunt rationali ; ex iis sunt, Sapientia, quæ est scientia causarum remotarum & propinquarum cognitâ prius existentia rei de cujus causis quæritur ; & Intellectus, qui est intellectus speculativus, ille scil. nobis à natura insitus, scil. intelligibilia prima, & intellectus acquisitus, (qui hujus loci non est ;) & perspicacia & præstantia intellectus, scil. præstantia de rebus quam celerimè conjectandi, nullâ prorsus vel minimâ saltem morâ interjectâ. Vitia hujus potentiæ secus aut contra se habent. Quod ad virtutes autem morales, reperiuntur eæ in parte appetitrice tantum : Pars autem sensitiva, hoc respectu, parti appetitrici famulatur. Ac virtutes hujus partis multæ admodum sunt, veluti castitas, liberalitas, æquitas, mansuetudo, humilitas, animus contentus, fortitudo, magnificentia, aliæque. Ejusdem vitia in horum defectu vel excessu [consistunt.] Jam verò quod ad partes altricem & imaginatricem, non dicitur de iis virtus aut vitium, verum dicitur, rectè eas aut secus procedere ; veluti aliquem probè concoquere, aut eundem non facilè digerere, & vitiatam esse alicujus phantasiæ, aut ipsum ευφρασιασλον esse, at his omnibus nec inest virtus nec vitium. Atque hoc est quod hoc capite tradere voluimus.

Caput tertium, De morbis Animæ.

Dixerunt antiqui esse animæ, perinde ac corpori, sanitatem & agritudinem. Sanitas animæ est, dispositionibus necessariò profluunt istæ actiones, exempli gratiâ, Temperantia quæ est dispositio media inter intemperantiam, & insensibilitatem voluptatis; Estque Temperantia ex actionibus bonis & dispositionibus animæ à quibus necessariò profluit temperantia, quæ est virtus moralis. Intemperantia autem extremum est primum, insensibilitas voluptatis omnimodæ, alterum, quorum utrumque malum est simpliciter, sũntque duæ dispositiones animæ à quibus necessariò profluunt intemperantia, quæ est dispositio modum excedens, & insensibilitas, quæ est dispositio defectu peccans, sũntque pariter duo è vitiorum moralium numero. Similiter, Liberalitas media est inter avaritiam & prodigalitatem; & Fortitudo inter temeritatem & timiditatem: Urbanitas inter scurrilitatem & rusticitatem: Humilitas inter superbiam & sui vilitatem: Magnificencia inter profusionem & sordes: Contentatio inter cupiditatem & torporem: Mansuetudo inter iracundiam & lentitudinem: Pudor inter impudentiam & vitiosum pudorem; & in reliquis [similiter,] nec opus est hic recensere nomina iis imposita, cum res significatæ in promptu sint & omnibus intellectæ. Errant autem homines frequenter in his actionibus, putantes extremorum alterum bonum esse & virtutem animæ quandam. Aliàs quidem primum extremorum, bonum putant, quemadmodum temeritatem pro virtute habent; dum temerè audacem fortem appellant, & si aliquem extremo gradu audaciæ viderint, qui in pericula ruat, seque sponte in perniciem conjiciat, verùm casu evadat, eum ob illud laudant, dicentes, Hic fanè fortis est. Aliàs verò alterum melius existimant; ita dicunt illum qui animo est lentiori, mansuetum, & torpidum, virum forte suâ contentum, eumque qui nullo voluptatum sensu capitur pro indolis suæ stupore, temperatum; & consimili errore prodigalitatem & profusionem inter facta laude digna numerant, sed hoc totum erroris est. Illud vero quod meritò laudatur est, ut quis medium teneat, ad quod etiam tendere hominem oportet, atque ita semper omnes actiones suas perpendere, ut eò [inclinent.] Scias autem virtutes & vitia ista moralia acquiri & firmari in anima iteratione actionum ab istis moribus fluentium [idque] pluribus vicibus, tempore longo, & dum iisdem assuefaciamus. Quod si bonæ fuerint actiones istæ, illud quod nobis iisdem acquiritur virtus erit; sin malæ, erit illud quod ex illis provenit, vitium. Homo enim naturâ suâ à principio neque virtute, neque vitio instructus est, uti Capite octavo ostensuri sumus; ipse autem sine dubio actionibus [quibusdam] à pueritia sua juxta consuetudinem familiaræ, aut patriæ suæ assuescet; erũntque aliàs actiones istæ mediæ, aliàs ejusmodi quæ modum excedant, aut deficiant, uti descripsimus. Erit ergo ei necessarium, cum animam ipsius corripuerit morbus, eandem rationem adhibere in ea curanda quæ in curatione corporum adhiberi solet. Sicut ergo cum è temperamenti sui æqualitate migraverit corpus, observamus in quam partem inclinaverit, & quò exierit, ut ei rebus ipsi contrariis occurramus, donec redeat ad temperamentum æquale, ad quod cum redierit, ab isto

Eodem modo ubi viderimus aliquem opes prodigè effundentem, illi præcipimus ut avaritiæ opera præſtet eaque repetat, neque tamen ipſi frequentem operum avaritiæ iterationem præcipimus, ut alteri iſti opera prodigalitatis ſæpius exercenda injunximus. Subeſt enim hîc aliquid argutius, quod medicinæ [hujus] Canon & myſterium eſt, ſcil. Facilius patribiliuſque eſſe, ut quis à prodigalitate ad liberalitatem revertatur, quam ut avaritia ad liberalitatem redeat. Eodémque modo ut qui nullo voluptatum ſenſu tangitur temperans evadat, quam qui cupiditatibus indulget, ideóque magis frequentare jubebimus intemperantem opera ejus qui nullo voluptatum ſenſu tangitur, quam ἀναδυσίον iſtum opera intemperantis, atque ita injungemus meticuloſo audaciam, magis quam audaci, timiditatem; & fordidum ad prodigentiam magis inſtituemus, quam profuſum ad ſordidam parſimoniam: atque hic Canon eſt medicinæ morum quem obſerves velim: atque hanc ob rationem non ſolebant [viri virtute] præſtantes animi ſui affectus ita ordinare ut in medio prorfus ſtatu eſſent, ſed aliquantulum ad exceſſum aut defectum inclinarent cautelæ gratiâ, ex. gr. à temperantia ad ἀναδυσίον voluptatum, & à fortitudine temeritatem verſus, & à magnificentia aliquantillum verſus prodigentiam & ab humilitate aliquantillum verſus ſui vilitatem: eodémque modo in reliquis, atque hoc innuitur dicto ipſorum, Infra menſuram juris. vis inscius, ea quæ malorum propria sunt, & ad extremorum alterum relicto prorsus medio pertinget. Est autem sapientibus, in hunc sensum, dictum quo non aliud magis mirum [ad aures] meas unquam pervenit, quod habetur in ⁹ Gemara Occidentalium, Capite nono Nedarim, ubi vituperantes illos, qui se juramentis & votis obstringunt, adeo ut captivorum instar sint, hæc habent verba, Rab. Adai nomine Rab. Isaac, Annon sufficit tibi illud quod illicitum fecit lex, nisi & ipse alia tibi illicita feceris? quæ ipsissima est, quam commemoravimus, sententia, sine additione aut diminutione. Ex omnibus autem quæ hoc Capite jam dicta sunt constat, actiones medias secundas esse, nec ab iis ad alterutrum duorum extremorum, præterquam medicinæ gratiâ, & ut contrario occurratur, desistendum. Et quemadmodum medicinæ peritus aliquis, ubi temperamentum suum vel aliquantillum immutatum esse viderit, nequaquam illud negliget, aut morbum invalescere sinet, donec medicamento admodum forti opus habeat; aut si noverit aliquod corporis sui membrum imbecillius esse, illud semper tuebitur, ea quæ illi noceant fugiendo, & quæ illi profint sectando, donec ad sanitatem redeat, aut saltem non magis infirmetur: ita & virum perfectum mores suos assidue ad examen revocare decet, viasque suas perpendere, atque in animi sui inclinationem quotidie inquirere, & quotiescunque ipsum ad aliquod extremum propendere viderit, quam primum medelam adhibere, ne dispositiones pravæ malarum actionum iteratione confirmari sinat, quemadmodum diximus: eodemque modo sibi ob oculos quoscunque mores vitiosos apud se [reperit] statuens, eos assidue curare fataget, uti præmisimus; cum fieri non possit, quin sit homo vitii obnoxius. Ita dixerunt Philosophi, difficile, aut vix possibile, esse ut reperiat qui naturâ comparatus sit ad omnes virtutes, tam morales quàm intellectuales; quin & prophetarum libri multa habent eodem [spectantia:] Dixit enim, Ecce in servis suis non ponit stabilitatem, &c. et, Num justificabitur natus muliere, &c? [ita] & Salomo de homine in genere dixit, Non est homo justus in terrâ, qui faciat bonum & non peccet. Nôsti etiam Domino priorum & posteriorum Mosi Doctore nostro dixisse Deum excelsum, Quoniam non credidistis mihi, &c. quia rebellastis dum non sanctificaveritis, &c. Hoc totum, cum culpa ejus esset, quod inclinaverit versûs unum duorum extremorum à virtute quadam morali, scil. Manfuetudine, dum ad iracundiam propenderet, dicendo, Auscultate, quæso, rebelles, severè illi imputavit, quod istiusmodi vir ad iracundiam, coram toto Israelitarum cœtu, ibi moveretur ubi irasci non decuit, cujusmodi factum respectu talis viri profanatio erat nominis divini, cum omnes ejus gestus & verba imitarentur [homines,] iisque se ad felicitatem tum temporalem tum æternam perventuros sperarent. Quomodo ergo appareret in illo iracundia, quæ (uti ostendimus) est ex actionibus malorum [propriis,] nec aliunde quàm è pravis animi dispositionibus oritur? Quod autem de [facto] isto dicit, Rebellastis in me, hoc eâ, quam explicaturi sumus, ratione [intelligendum] est; scil. quod non idiotas aut virtutis expertes alloqueretur, verum populum ita comparatum ut vel contemptissima foemina esset instar Ezekielis f. Buzi, prout locuti sunt Sapientes, qui omnia quae diceret aut faceret perpendere; qui ergo ipsum facile ad iram provocari videntes dicerent, Non est ille, c. p. ex iis in quibus vitium aliquod morale reperitur, nisi ergo Deum nobis irasci sciret ideo quod aquam petierimus, nosque ad furorem Dominum provocasse, haudquaquam iracundiâ commotus fuisset, cum tamen non inveniamus ipsum [Deum, sc.] dum cum illo hac de re sermonem habuit, furorem vel iram prae se tulisse, verum hoc tantum dixisse, Sume baculum, &c. & bibendum praebe cœtui, & jumentis ipsorum. Verum digressi fumus à Capitis hujus scopo, ita tamen, ut unum solverimus ex iis quae in lege occurrunt dubiis, de quo multum differitur ac disputatur, quodnam, sc. peccatum commiserit Mose? Perpende igitur & quid nos dixerimus, & quid dici de eo [soleat.] Veritas sibi viam parabit. Ut autem ad institutum meum revertar, Cum quis perpetuò facta sua trutinaret, & quae in medio posita sunt sectetur, futurus est in summo eorum quae in hominem cadunt gradu, eademque ratione ad Deum quam proximè accedet, ac præmium apud ipsum repositum accipiet; atque hic est perfectissimus cultus [divini] modus. Quam sententiam commemorarunt etiam Sapientes, ac literis consignarunt, dicentes, *Quicumque disponit vias suas, dignus censetur qui videat salutem Domini, sicut dictum est; * Et qui disponit viam suam, ostendam ei salutem Dei. Ne legas* [inquit] vesam derec [& disponens viam] sed Skam [scil. à Skum Rabbiorum.] Shumma autem est aestimatio & conjectura. Atque hæc eadem prorsus est, quam per totum hoc Cap. explicavimus, sententia; atque hoc summa est eorum quae ad scopum hunc necessaria putavimus.

Oportet hominem omnes animæ suæ facultates juxta consilii præscriptum subjugare, prout Cap. præcedente præmisimus, sibi que ante oculos unum semper finem statuere, hunc nempe, ut apprehendat Deum Omnip. Glor. quantum eum apprehendere homini datur, sc. ut ipsum sciat, itaque actiones suas omnes, motus, quietem & dicta ordinare, ut ad hunc finem perducant, adeò ut non sit in omnibus ipsius factis frustraneum aliquod; ullum nempe factum quod ad hunc finem non tendat, e. gr. ut in cibo, potu, conjugio, somno, vigilia, motu, quiete, fanitatem corporis sui tantum sectetur, cujus deinde scopus sit, ut sint animæ instrumenta sua sana & perfecta, quod scientiarum studio incumbat donec ad finem istum pertingat. Interim verò, juxta hanc regulam, non sectabitur voluptatem tantum, adeò ut in cibo & potu quod jucundissimum est eligat, ut nec in reliquo sui regimine, verum illud quod utilissimum est appetet, quod five contigerit simul jucundum esse, five ingratum, perinde est; aut saltem illud quod jucundissimum est respectu quodam medico, appetet; ut si cum langueat ipsi appetitus cibi, eum cibis desiderabilibus, jucundis, dulcibus excitet: similiter ut si ebullierit in ipso humor melancholicus, eum auditu cantus & diversis melodiarum generibus, sive hortorum & ædificiorum elegantium conspectu oblectando, formisque pulchris assidendo, aliisque ejusmodi rebus, quibus delectetur animus, & tollantur ex eo cogitationes quas suggerit melancholia, in quibus omnibus erit illi scopus, corpus suum sanum conservare; corpus autem ideò sanum conservare, ut scientiam acquirere valeat. Eodem modo cum acquirendis opibus operam ac studium impendat, eum ad finem in iis congerendis collimabit, ut in res præstantes easdem eroget, & ad corporis sui sustentationem, ac conservationem diuturniorem, paratas habeat, quò de Deo quicquid sciri possit perceptum ac cognitum habeat. Ac juxta hanc regulam magnus erit artis medicæ in virtutis studio, cognitione Dei, veraque felicitate assequenda usus, studiumque ejus è præcipuis cultûs partibus, neque jam instar texturæ, aut architecturæ erit, cum eâ actiones nostras metiamur, ut sint humanæ naturæ [consentaneæ,] & ad virtutes veras perducant. Si enim temerè quis comedat cibum, palato dulcem, odoris boni, gratum, qui [interim] insalubris & noxius sit, adeò ut sæpè morbi gravis, aut mortis subitanæ causa sit; hic sanè bestiarum instar censendus est: neque hæc hominis, quâ homo, actio est, sed quâ animal assimilatum bestiis quæ pereunt: verum tum demum actio hominis propria erit, cum illud tantum quod saluberrimum est sumferit, illo quod jucundissimum relicto, adeò ut quod minus gratum est comedat, dum quod utilius est quærat: atque hæc est actio ex consilii præscripto, quo solo in actionibus suis ab aliis [animalibus] distinguitur homo. Eodem modo si quis Venere utatur quotiescunque ejus desiderio tangatur, nullâ damni aut commodi ratione habitâ, hæc ejus actio est quâ animal, non quâ homo. Fieri autem potest ut in sui regimine, illud quod maximè utile est, uti diximus, sectetur, ita tamen ut sibi interim finem statuatur solam corporis sanitatem, atque à morbis immunitatem. Sed neque hic interim virtute præditus est, quoniam sicut hic bonæ valetudinis, ita & alter cibi aut Veneris suavitatem prætulit, quorum neutrum verus est actionum finis. Recta ergò methodus hæc est, ut omnium operationum suarum finem statuatur, corpus suum sanum & integrum conservare, quò instrumenta facultatum animæ, quæ sunt corporis membra, integra ipsi permaneant, atque hoc pacto anima ipsius sine ullo impedimento in virtutibus moralibus & intellectualibus exercere se possit: similiter de omnibus, quas addiscit, scientiis & disciplinis, quibus ad istum finem tenditur, nulla est controversia. Quod etiam ad eas in quibus nihil est quod ad istum finem conferat, e. g. Problemata Algebraica, librum sectionum Conicarum, [quæstiones] Mechanicas, magnum problematum Geometricorum numerum, deque attractione ponderum, cum aliis hujusmodi multis, vel horum etiam omnium scopus est intellectum acuere, & facultatem rationalem in demonstrationis regulis exercere, ut inde accedat homini habitus scientiæ, quò argumentationes demonstrativas ab aliis dignoscat, quique sit illi via quâ ad scientiam veritatis existentiae Dei excelsi pertingat: eodemque modo quod ad omnes hominis sermones, non aliud loqui decet, quàm quo aut sibi utilitatem aliquam afferat, aut malum aliquod ab anima sua vel corpore repellat, aut quod ad scientiam aliquam, vel virtutem aliquam, vel virtutis alicujus, aut viri virtute præstantis, laudem, vel vitii aut vitiosorum vituperium spectet. Sugillatio enim vitii deditorum & viarum ipsorum vituperatio, si eò tendat ut eos apud homines in contemptum adducat, quo ab ipsis caveant, neque facta ipsorum imitentur, necessaria est, & virtus. An non vides quid dixerit Deus, Instar factorum Egypti, &c. & Instar factorum terræ Canaan, & quomodo describat Sodomæos? Quicquid enim occurrit in Scriptura, [vel] ad hominum sceleratorum contumeliam & vituperium ab ipsis factorum, vel ad laudem ac commendationem bonorum spectans, illud ad eum quem dixi finem tendit, viz. ut sequantur homines horum viam, illorum fugiant. Cùmque hujusmodi scopum sibi proposuerit homo, multa admodum eorum quæ facere solet omittet, verbaque sua diminuet. Quisquis enim ad hunc scopum tendit, non in illud incumbet ut parietes auro ornet, aut vesti auream fimbriam affuat, nisi eo forsitan fine ut animum suum recreet, quo sanum eum conservet, aut ab ipso ægritudinem repellat, adeò ut tersus ac mundus sit ad recipiendas scientias, juxta illud ipsorum dictorum, Domus pulchra, mulier pulchra, & lectus mollis, discipulis Sapientum [conveniunt:] quia, scil. mens continuâ rerum difficultium contemplatione obtunditur, atque hebescit, non secus ac delassatur corpus labores difficiles tolerando, donec, postquam confederit ac quieverit, ad temperiem suam redeat: Ita opus est etiam ut requiescat animus & sensibus recreandis operam det, picturis puta, rebûsque pulchris contemplandis, quò tollatur ab eo hebetudo, quemadmodum dixerunt, Ubi lassati fuerint Doctores nostri studendo, locuti sunt verba hilaritatis, adeò ut penè hac ex parte, non sint ista in genere malorum, neque actionibus nihili accensenda: scil. ut quis ædificiis, vasis, aut vestibis opere variegato & picturâ ornandis, operam det. Scias autem hunc gradum altum admodum & arduum esse, adeò ut cùm occurrerit quis qui ita se habeat, non dicam eum esse infra prophetarum gradum, qui, scil. omnes animæ suæ facultates moderetur, earumque finem Deum solum statuatur, neque opus aliquod, five magnum five parvum, præstet, aut verbum proferat, aliter quàm ut factum illud aut verbum ad virtutem aliquam, aut ad illud quod ad virtutem tendit, perducatur, idemque cogitet ac deliberet in omni actione & motu, ut videat num ad istum finem perducatur necne, ac tum demum illud faciat. Atque hoc est quod requirit à nobis Deus, ut ei studeamus, eo ipsius dicto, Et amabis Dominum tuum toto corde tuo, & totâ animâ tuâ, & totis viribus tuis, i. e. omnibus animæ tuæ partibus, ut uniuscujusque partium ejus unum statuas finem, viz. amare Dominum. Quinetiam ad hunc scopum [appetendum] incitârunt prophetæ. Ita dicit, In omnibus viis tuis cognosce ipsum, &c. Quod explicantes Sapientes dixerunt, Etiam si in re [cui ineest] trans- præfationum ratione.

Caput sextum, De differentia inter virtute præstantem, & eum qui se continet, [seu; Tem-perantem & Continentem.]

Dicunt Philosophi, illum qui se continet, etiamsi edat actiones præstantes, ita tamen ipsum facere bona ut interim desiderio feratur ad opera mala, eaque appetat, contendat licet cum cupiditate sua, & contraria faciat illis ad quæ ip-sum impetus suus ac desiderium animique affectus incitent, adeò ut dum faciat bona iis faciendis affligatur. Virtute autem imbutum in agendo sectari illud ad quod incitetur, desiderio & affectu suo, eaque quæ faciat bona appetere, & cupere. Communi autem Philosophorum consensu virtute præstans excellentior & perfectior est eo qui se continet: Fieri tamen (inquiunt) potest ut qui se continet virtute præstantis multis
in rebus locum occupet, cum tamen gradu ne-cessario ipsi inferior sit, eò quod desiderio feratur ad malum faciendum. Quamvis enim illud non fecerit, desiderium tamen quo ad ipsum propendet, prava est in anima dispositio. Habet autem Salomo quæ huc spectant, dum dicit, Anima perversa desiderat malum. Déque gaudio, quo afficitur virtute præstans dum facit bona, & dolore, quem concipit qui non est virtute imbutus, hoc protulit dictum, Latitia est iusto facere iudicium, at contritio facientibus iniquita-tem. Atque hoc quod manifestum est è verbis Legis ei quod dixerunt Philosophi consonum est.
Quod si inquiramus in verba Sapientum huc spec-tantia, reperiemus ipsos [affirmare,] Illum qui desiderio ad peccata fertur eaque appetit, præ-stantiorem ac perfectiorem esse illo qui nullo eorum desiderio tangitur, neque quod ea relin-quere debeat dolore afficitur, adeo ut dixerint, quo quis præstantior sit & perfectior, eo majori cupiditate ad illicita ferri, & majori dolore affici quod ea vitare debeat: quam in sententiam at-tulerunt & apophthegmata quædam, dicentes, Quicumque major est socio suo, ejus etiam concupiscientia major est. Neque hoc contenti addide-runt, mercedem ejus qui se continet magnam esse juxta dolorem quo afficitur in se continendo, dicentes, Secundum molestiam, merces. Imo & hoc majus est quod homini præceperunt ut se contineat, vetantes dicere, Ego naturâ meâ haud-quaquam desiderio in hanc transgressionem propenderem; atque hoc est quod dixerunt, Rabban

y Prov. xxi. 10.

z Ibid. ver. 15.

voluntas mihi induere vestem heterogeneam, non est voluntas mihi rem habere cum Consanguineâ; verum voluntas mihi est, at quid faciam cum pater meus qui in cælis est contra statuerit? Jam, juxta sensum apparentem verborum primo intuitu videntur duæ istæ sententiæ contrariæ, at non ita se res habet, verum utraque vera est nullâ inter eas penitus discrepantiâ, idque quia illa apud Philosophos mala de quibus dixerunt quod qui ea non cupiat præstantior sit cupiente, licet se ab illis contineat, istiusmodi sunt quæ apud omnes homines in confesso est mala esse, qualia sunt effusio sanguinis, furtum, ira, metus, damnum inferre ei qui nullum fecerit malum, beneficienti malum rependere, contemptus parentum, & his similia; atque hæc sunt præcepta quæ appellant Sapientes, quibus pax, Res quæ si non essent scriptæ, oporteret scribi; quæque nominant quidam doctorum nostrorum recentiorum, qui Scholasticorum morbo infecti sunt, Præcepta intelligibilia; nec dubium est quin anima quæ hujusmodi rem aliquam appetat, & desiderio ejus moveatur, anima sit defectu laborans, & animam virtute imbutam nullam prorsus harum rerum appetituram, neque dolore affectum iri quod ab iis arceatur. Illa vero de quibus dicunt Sapientes quod qui se ab iis continet præstantior sit, ejusque præmium majus, præcepta sunt ab auditu pendentia, de quibus quod dicunt verum est. Utpote quæ nisi ob legem [intervenientem] nullo prorsus modo mala essent habenda. Atque de hujusmodi [rebus] est quod dicunt Sapientes, oportere hominem ut permittat sibi illa amare, nec aliud sibi quo ab illis cohibeatur statuatur, præter legem. Animadvertite autem sapientiam eorum, quibus pax, & unde exemplum sumpserint: neque enim dicit, Ne dicas, Non est voluntas mea occidere hominem, non est voluntas mea furari, non est voluntas mea mentiri, verum voluntas mea est, at quid faciam, &c. sed quæ recensuit omnia [è] præceptis sunt quæ ab auditu pendent; [viz.] caro cum lacte, vestes heterogeneæ, & fæminæ ob consanguinitatem prohibita. Atque hæc aliæque ejusmodi præcepta ea sunt quæ vocat Deus Chukkotbai, statuta mea, Decreta (inquiunt) quæ decrevi tibi, nec licet tibi de iis scrupulum movere, cum gentes mundi contra ipsa objiciant, & Satan accuset ea; qualia sunt Vacca rufa, & hircus ἀποκομπᾶ, &c. Ea verò quæ vocant posteriores Intellectualia, vocantur Mitzvoth, quemadmodum explicarunt Sapientes. Ex his ergo quæ diximus omnibus patet quænam sint transgressionibus illæ quas qui non appetit præstantior est eo qui, cum eas appetit, se ab iis continet, & in quibus se res contrā habeat. Hic autem articulus est non vulgaris, & qui duas sententias miro modo inter se conciliat; expressa autem duarum sententiarum verba explicationis nostræ veritatem ostendunt, atque hîc absolutum est, quod in hoc Capite propositum fuit.

Caput septimum, De velo, ejusque significatione.

Frequenter occurrit in Midrasboth, & Haggadoth, nec non aliquando in Talmude, fuisse ex Prophetis quosdam qui Deum ponē vela multa, & alios qui ponē vela pauca viderent, juxta propinquitatis suæ ad Deum, & celsioris prophetiæ gradûs rationem, adeo ut dixerint Mosen Doctorem nostrum vidisse Dominum ponē velum unicum terfum, i. e. pellucidum, atque hoc est quod dicunt, Vidit in speculari quod oculos illuminat.

[Deum] vidisse. Neque negari potest quorundam morum defectum gradum prophetiæ diminuere, cum invenerimus quædam vitia moralia ipsam penitus tollere, veluti Iracundiam. Dicunt, Quicumque irascitur, si propheta fuerit, tollitur ab ipso prophetia ipsius: quod confirmarunt exemplo Elisæ, qui cum irâ excandesceret visione prophetica privatus est, donec eandem deposuisset: hoc est, quod ipse dixit, Nunc autem sumite mibi fiduciam, &c. nec non anxietatem & tristitiam. Quamdiu enim mœrore affectus est Jacobus pater noster ob Iosephum filium suum, sublatus est ab eo Spiritus Sanctus, donec lætum vitæ ejus nuntium ipsi afferretur. Et vixit (inquit) Spiritus Jacobi patris ipsorum: ubi dicit Targum (quod explicat sententias à Mose per traditionem acceptas) Et resedit spiritus prophetiæ super Jacobum patrem ipsorum. Dictum etiam est Sapientum, Non habitat prophetia vel cum pigritia, vel cum tristitia, sed cum re gaudii [causâ.] Cum autem nôset Moses Doctor noster, non superesse sibi velum quod non dirumpere, & perfectas in se esse omnes virtutes tam morales quàm intellectuales, petiit ut Deum secundum veritatem essentiae suæ, cum nullum jam superesset impedimentum, apprehenderet, dicens, Ostendas mibi, quæso, gloriam tuam; Docuit autem ipsum Dominus, fieri hoc non posse, cum esset ipse intellectus in materia existens, i. in quantum homo esset; atque hoc est quod dicit, Quia non videbit me homo & vivet. Non restabat ergo inter ipsum & apprehensionem Dei secundum veritatem essentiae suæ aliud quàm velum unicum pellucidum, quod erat intellectus humanus, nondum separatus; gratiam tamen illi faciens Deus, indulgit illi post petitionem istam clariorem sui apprehensionem quàm illi antequam petiisset fuerat; docens interim illum, ad summum gradum ab ipso perveniri non posse quamdiu corpore indutus maneret. Veram autem apprehensionem, visionem faciei, appellavit. Cum enim viderit quis faciem amici sui, imprimetur ipsi in animo forma quâ cum alio non confundetur. Quod si ipsum à tergo viderit, licet illum [ope] istius visionis aliquatenus dignoscatur, non tamen sine omni dubio, adeo ut apud ipsum cum aliis adhuc confundatur: ita apprehensio Dei secundum veritatem est ut concipiatur de veritate essentiae ejus in animo aliquid quod non fit rei cuiusdam alii cum ipso, [respectu] istius essentiae, commune, adeo ut inveniat in animo suo essentiam istam firmam, distinctam ab eo quod in animo suo de essentia rerum aliarum conceperit. Non est autem possibile ut eò pertingat apprehensio humana. Moses verò apprehendit quod parum admodum infra hoc esset; illud nempe quod describit dicens, Videbis posteriora mea. Plenius autem de hac re acturi sumus in Libro de Prophetia. Cum ergo scirent Sapientes, quibus pax, has duas vitiorum species, scil. Intellectualium & moralium, ea esse quæ veli vicem inter hominem & Deum præstent, earumque respectu Prophetarum alii aliis gradu superiores essent, dixerunt de quibusdam ipsorum, ob illud quod de scientia & moribus ipsorum perspectum habuerunt, Dignos fuisse ipsos super quos resideret majestas divina, æquæ ac super Moysen Doctorem nostrum. statuerent. (Abst.) Similiter dixerunt de aliis, ut, Æquè ac super Josuam, eo quo diximus mo-
do. Atque hoc est quod in hoc Capite explicandum proposuimus.

Caput octavum. De indole humana.

Fieri non potest ut producat^r homo ab ortu suo naturâ vel virtute vel vitio præditus ; uti neque possibile est ut producat^r naturâ artis alicujus præticæ peritus ; hoc autem fieri potest, ut producat^r aptus natus sive ad virtutem aliquam sive vitium, adeo ut actiones ad ea spec-tantes faciliores ipsi sint quàm quæ ad alia. Ex-empli gratiâ, si fuerit quis temperamenti ad siccitatem vergentis, cui substantia cerebri sit defæcata non adeo humida, huic facilius erit res memoriâ tenere, & earum sensus percipere, quàm phlegmatico cuiuspiam cui cerebrum est valdè hu-midum : quòd si relictus fuerit ille temperamento suo ad virtutem istam dispositus absque ulla omnino disciplina, neque excitetur illa [quâ præditus est] facultas, mansurus est sine dubio stultus ; eodémque modo, si institutus fuerit, & ad intelli-gendum eruditus, alter iste naturâ hebetior hu-miditate abundans, discet ille, & intelliget, quamvis non sine difficultate & labore : eodem prorsus modo, si cui fuerit temperamentum cordis æquo aliquantum calidius, erit ille fortis, hoc est, ad fortitudinem dispositus, adeò ut, si fortitudi-nem edoctus fuerit, facilè fortis evadet. Alius autem, cui temperamentum cordis justo frigidus, dispositus erit ad timiditatem, & metum, eâque si didicerit usque assuefactus fuerit facilè imbibet. Quòd si ad fortitudinem institutus fuerit, non sine difficultate aliqua fortis evadet, longo tamen usu proculdubio & talis evasurus est. Hoc autem ideo tibi declaravi, ne futilia ista, quæ falso comminiscuntur Astrologi, pro veris habeas, cum à nativitatibus suis homines virtute aut vitio præditos constitui asserant, eosque ad actiones istas necessariò & vi adigi. Verùm scias rem in quam consentiunt & Lex nostra, & Græcorum Philosophia, verisique probationibus confirmatam, esse, hominis actiones omnes in ipsius potestatem traditas esse, sine ulla omnino ad eas coactione, neque esse exterius aliquod impellens, quod ipsum ad virtutem aut vitium inflectat, præter unam temperaturæ dispositionem, (sicut ostensum est)
quâ fit ut res illi facilior sit aut difficilior : verùm ut necessaria illi fiat, aut impossibilis, hoc nullo pacto [concedendum.] Quòd si homo actiones suas coactus ederet, cessarent jam præcepta & prohibitiones legales : essentque ea omnia penitus frustranea, cum nulla superesset homini in eo quod agit electio. Indè etiam sequeretur frustra esse eruditioni & institutioni operam dare, artèsvè ullas practicas addiscere : quasi hæc omnia nullius essent usus, cum fieri non possit, quin homo ob illud quod exterius ipsum incitat, juxta senten-tiam eorum qui ita putant, istiusmodi actionem præstet, aut istiusmodi scientiam addiscat, aut istiusmodi moribus imbuatur. Eandémque ob rationem nihil aliud essent præmium & poena, quare punietur Simeon? & quomodo Deo, qui justus & rectus est, conveniet de ipso pœnas sumere ob rem sibi factu necessariam, quàmque non potuit non facere, etiamsi studuisset ne faceret? Quin & frustranea penitus reddentur quæ ab hominibus parantur omnia, dum domos extruunt, victum parant, cum periculi metus sit fugiunt, &c. quoniam quod decretum est ut sit, fieri non potest quin sit. Hoc autem totum impossibile & absolutè falsum est, quòdque & intellectui & sensui contradicit, legisque maceriam diruit, & in Deo injustitiam statuit, à quâ ille quàm longissimè abest. Veritas autem, de qua nullum est dubium, est, actiones hominis omnes penes ipsum esse, adeò ut si velit faciat, si velit omittat, sine coactione aut vi, quâ ad illud adigatur, ideòque expedire, ut ei præcepta imponantur; dicit [ergò,] ^d Ecce posui coram te hodiè vitam & bonum, mortem & malum, ut eligas vitam, nobis in hoc ipso electionem permittens; pœnamque imposuit ei qui contrà fecerit, præmium ei qui obedierit. Si auscultaveritis (inquit) &, si non auscultaveritis: injunxit etiam tum docere tum discere, ^e Et docebitis ea etiam liberos vestros, &c. &, Discetis ea, & observabitis facere: cum cæteris omnibus quæ jubent præcepta, & docere, & iis asfuefacere. Quin & apparatus omnes, qui cautelæ gratiâ fiunt, injunxit, uti in libro veridico diserte dixit. ^f Et facies lorica; ne decadat quis: &, ^g Ne fortè moriatur in prælio: ^h in quo cubabit: non accipiet pignora, metam & catillam perquam multa autem reperiuntur in Lege, & in libris Prophetarum huc spectantia, scil. ad majoris cautelæ gratiâ apparatus faciendos. Quod autem ad sententiam illam quæ apud Sapientes habetur, dictum, scil. ipforum, Omnia sunt in manu Dei excepto timore Dei: est illa certè vera, & eòdem tendit quòd ea quæ diximus, nisi quòd multum in ea [interpretenda,] errent homines, existimantes [hominem] ad quædam è factis suis quæ sub electione cadunt, vi adigi, v. g. ut hanc talem in uxorem ducat, aut sint hæ opes in manu ipsius; quod minimè verum est, nam si mulierem istam libello contractûs & sponsalibus acceperit, est ea ipsi licita, eamque duxit ad crescendo & multiplicandum, quod est præceptum. Deus autem non decrevit ut faciat quis præceptum: quòd si sequius factum fuerit aliquid in eâ ducendâ, est illud transgressio. Deus autem non decrevit ut fiat transgressio; similiter, qui rapinâ aut furto opes alterius abstulerit, aut eas fraude detentas abneget, & falsò illi ob eas juret, si dixerimus decrevisse Deum de isto ut in manus ipsius pervenirent opes istæ, aut è manu alterius istius elaborerentur, jam transgressionem decreto stabilierit: at non ita se res habet, verum in omnibus hominis actionibus quæ sub electione cadunt, est sine dubio Obedientia & Transgressio. Jam enim explicavimus, c. 2. præcepta & interdicta legalia esse de factis in quibus homini est electio ut faciat ea vel non faciat. Atque in ista parte animæ est Timor Domini, nec est in manu Dei, sed permissa libero hominis arbitrio, uti explicatum. Eo ergò quod dicunt Haccol, Omnia, volunt res naturales in quibus non est homini liberum arbitri-um: v. g. ut sit procerus aut brevis, aut ut de-scendat tempestas, aut sit annonae caritas, aut corruptio aeris, aut salubritas, & ejusmodi in omnibus quæ sunt in mundo, exceptis hominum motibus, & quiete. In sententia autem ista quam explicant Sapientes, scil. quod obedientia & trans-gressio non sint à decreto Dei, neque voluntate ipsius, verum arbitrio hominis, secuti sunt diser-tum Jeremiae textum, ubi dicit, ^k *Ex ore excelsi non egreditur malum & bonum: quoniam malo [in-nuuntur] malæ actiones; & bono, bonæ: ac si diceret, Deum non decrevisse ut agat homo mala, neque ut faciat bona. Cùm autem se ita res habeat, oportet hominem tristitiâ affici & plangere ob ea quæ commisit peccata & scelera, cùm libero arbitrio suo peccaverit; ita dicit, ^l Cur dolet homo vivens, vir super peccato suo? deinde, sermonem convertens, dicit remedium hujus morbi esse in manibus nostris, quoniam sicut sponte peccavimus, ita & penes nos est ut poenitentiam agamus, & à malis operibus nostris revertamur: dicit ergo postea, Scrutemur vias nostras, & inquiramus, & re-vertamur ad Dominum, elevemus cor nostrum cum manibus ad Deum in caelis. Quod autem ad dictum omnibus notum, cui & similia reperiuntur in dictis Sapientum, necnon literis consignata, scil. Ut surgat homo vel sedeat, omnésque ejus motus, fieri voluntate Dei atque arbitrio ejus; est & hæc sententia vera, sed certo modo, idque ut si projiciente quopiam lapidem in aerem qui deor-sum descenderit, dicamus descendisse illum voluntate Dei, verum est hoc dictum, quia voluit Deus ut terra tota in centro esset, ideó-que cùm sursum projecta fuerit aliqua ejus pars, ea centrum versùs movetur; eodémque modo quælibet pars è partibus ignis mo-vetur sursum eâ voluntate quâ factum est ut ignis moveretur sursum; non quod Deus nunc demum, cùm mota fuerit hæc pars terræ, voluerit ut deor-sum moveretur. Atque hac de re discrepant Scholastici, quos audivi dicentes, voluntatem esse in omni re, de tempore ad tempus perpetuò; nos autem non ita sentimus, verum voluntatem fuisse sex diebus Creationis, ac [exinde] res omnes juxta naturas suas continuè fluere, quemadmodum dicit, ^m Quod fuit, idem est quod erit, & quod futurum est, jam fuit; non est quid novum sub sole. Atque hoc est quod Sapientes adegit ut dicerent, De omnibus miraculis quæ ab ordi-nario rerum cursu defleunt, quæ vel fuerunt, vel futura vi promissi sunt, præcessisse de ipsis voluntatem sex diebus Creationis, ac tunc temporis naturæ rerum istarum inditum fuisse ut contingeret quod in illis contigit; quod cùm tempore illi præstituto contigit, visum est esse rem

citur de homine cùm surgat aut sedeat, illum voluntate Dei surrexisse ac sedisse, nempe, Deum posuisse in natura ipsius, cùm primùm crearetur homo, ut pro arbitrio suo surgeret & sederet; non quòd nunc [de novo] cùm surgat, voluerit ut surgeret aut non surgeret: sicut nec voluerit nunc cùm decidit lapis iste, ut caderet, vel non caderet. Summa ergò rei est, ut credas Deum, sicut voluerit ut esset homo crectâ staturâ, lato pectore, digitis præditus, ita etiam voluisse ut pro libitu suo moveretur & quiesceret, & actiones sub electione cadentes, nullo ipsum ad eas cogente, vel ab iisdem cohibente, faceret; uti in libro veraci explicatum est, ubi hanc sententiam explicans dicit, "Ecce homo factus est ut unus è nobis ad sciendum bonum & malum, &c. Paraphrasis autem Chaldaica ita interpretatur sensum, ut vis [verborum] E nobis ad sciendum bonum & malum, hæc sit, quòd ipse jam factus fuerit unus in mundo, scil. species, cui nulla alia similis esset, quæ cum ipsa hoc respectu qui jam illi contigit communicaret: quânam autem fuit ille? scil. quòd ipse pro arbitrio suo nota haberet bona & mala, ut utrum eorum vellet, facere posset, nullo ipsum ab eo cohibente: quòd cùm ita esset, extendere posset manum ut de ista [arbo-re] sumens ederet & viveret in æternum. Cùm ergò hoc necessariò sequatur existentiam hominis, scil. ut pro arbitrio suo actiones bonas aut malas præstet, quodocunque voluerit, necesse est ut in boni rationibus instituat, utque præcipiatur ipsi & interdiciatur, nec non puniatur & remuneretur; atque; hoc totum æquitati [consentaneum] est, ipsumque oportet assuefacere se actionibus bonis quibus acquirantur ipsi virtutes, malas autem fugere, quò amoveantur ab ipso vitia, si in ipso fuerint, neque dicat, Insedit mihi affectus qui mutari non possit, cùm omnis affectus mutari possit & à bono in malum, & à malo in bonum, atque hoc ipsius arbitrio permissum sit. Et juxta hanc sententiam, ejusque gratiâ, attulimus omnia quæ de obedientiâ & transgressione diximus. Unum nobis superest hoc in argumento explicandum, scil. quòd occurrant quædam Scripturæ loca, quibus in suspicionem adducuntur homines Deum decrevisse de hominibus ut transgrediantur, ipsosque ad hoc cogere, quod planè falsum est. Ut ergò ea explicemus, quia multum in iis errârunt homines, in eorum numero est quod dicit ° Abrahamo, Et servient illis, & affligent eos, &c. dicunt, Vides ipsum decrevisse de Ægyptiis, ut injuriâ afficerent semen Abrahami, quare ergò vindictam de iis sumpsit, cùm necessariò & inevitabiliter illos in servitutem redigerent, prout ipse decreverat? Responsum ad hoc est; hoc perinde esse ac si dixisset Deus, ex iis qui postea nascerentur futuros transgressores & obsequentes, virtute præditos & malos, quod verum est: neque hoc dicto cogitur ὁ δ' αἴνα malus ut sit inevitabiliter malus, neque ὁ δ' αἴνα virtute præstans, ut necessariò virtute præstet; verum quisquis ex ipsis malus est, sponte suâ talis est; quòd si vellet virtute præstare, posset, neque enim est quod ipsum impediatur: eodémque modo quisquis virtute præstat, si vellet, malus esse posset, nullo impediante; historiæ enim istæ non adducuntur de decretum fuisse, verum generaliter affirmantur;

ita ut permittatur unusquisque arbitrio suo, prout
à natura comparatus est: atque ita unicuique Aegyptiorum, qui eos opprefferunt, & injuriâ af-fecerunt, si voluisset injuriâ illos non afficere, fuit equidem ipsi quod ad illud electio, quoniam non erat de individuo aliquo decretum ut injuriam faceret. Atque idem hoc responsum quadrabit [& alteri illi loco,] Ecce tu cubabis cum patribus tuis, & surgens populus iste fornicabitur post Deos terrae, &c. Nihil enim aliud hoc est, quàm si dixisset, Illis, qui coluerunt Idola, ita faciemus, vel ita eos tractabimus. Nam si non esset omnino qui transgrederetur, frustra essent minæ, frustra etiam maledictiones omnes, nec non & pœnæ quæ in Lege occurrunt. Neque ideò quod judicium lapidationis in Lege invenimus, dicemus istum, qui fabbatum profanaverit, coactum fuisse ad illud profanandum; neque ob maledictiones opus est ut dicamus illos, qui Idola coluerunt, adeò ut ca-derent in ipsas maledictiones, coactos fuisse ad ea colenda, verùm sponte suâ coluit ea quicun-que coluit, & in quem descendit pœna. Eti-am illi [inquit] elegerunt vias suas, &c. ego etiam, &c. Verùm quod ad dictum ejus; Et indurabo cor Pharaonis, &c. post quod vindictam de eo sum-psit, ipsùmque perdidit, est in illo sermone [dila-tando] locus; & ab eodem magnum oritur fun-damentum. Perpende ergò quid in hanc senten-tiam dicturus sum, illique animum appone, cumque omnium qui de eo locuti sunt dictis conferas, ut tibi quod optimum videtur seligas. Hoc autem est, scil. quòd si Pharaoni & asseclis ejus non fuisset aliàs culpa nisi quòd Israelem non dimitterent, esset res sine dubio difficilis; quoniam ipse [Deus scil.] cohibuit illos ne dimitterent, sicut dixit, Quoniam ego induravi cor ejus, & cor servorum ejus, &c. Deinde petiit ab ipso ut illos dimitteret quos coactus fuit non dimittere, ipsùm-que quòd non dimitteret unà cum populo suo punivit ac perdidit; quod cum speciem habet injustitiæ, & contradicere [videtur] omnibus à nobis præmissis, restat dicendum non ita se rem habuisse, sed Pharaonem & populum ipsius libero arbitrio suo transgressos fuisse sine ulla omnino vi aut coactione, & peregrinos qui inter ipsos erant, oppreffisse, illisque injuriam manifestam intulisse,
prout disertè asserit, Et dixit ad populum suum, Ecce populus filiorum Israelis, &c. Agite, prudenter agamus cum ipsis, &c. Hoc autem factum ab ipsis sponte suâ & malo ipsorum consilio prodiit, neque ulla ipsis quod ad hoc coactio incubit: ideòque hæc ipsis à Deo ob illud inflicta est pœna, ut ipsos à pœnitentia cohiberet, quò cade-ret in ipsos pœna justitiæ ipsius consentanea. Illud enim pœna ipsorum, & cohibitio à pœnitentia, fuit ut non dimitterent ipsos. Atque hoc decla-pœnitentia ipsos detinuerunt, sicut dicit, Quia nunc immittam manum meam, &c. Ac certè propter hoc suscitavi te, &c. Neque ad absurdum cogemur, dum dicimus, Deum hoc punire aliquem, ut non resipiscat, neque permittat ipsi liberum arbitrium ad resipiscendum, cum & Deus peccata noverit, & sapientia & iustitia ipsius pœnæ mensuram statuunt. Punit autem aliàs in hoc mundo tantum, aliàs in futuro tantum, aliàs in utroque simul. Discrepat etiam pœna ejus in hoc mundo, dum aut in corpore, aut facultatibus, aut utrisque simul punit; aut dum aliquem è motibus hominis voluntariis ratione pœnæ tollit. e. g. cum manum ejus ineptam reddit adprehendendum, ut fecit in Feroboamo; aut oculum ipsius ad videndum, ut fecit in Sodomæ incolis qui contra Lotum congregati fuerant: eodem modo tollit etiam ab eo libertatem pœnitentiæ, ne ad eam ullo modo moveatur, sed in peccato suo pereat. Neque opus est nobis ut perspectam habeamus sapientiam ipsius adeò ut sciamus quam ob causam hunc hoc pœnæ genere, non autem alio, afficiat, uti nec sciimus quid in causa fuerit ut sit huic speciei hæc forma, non alia. Verùm summa hæc est, quòd Omnes viæ ipsius judicium sint, & de peccatore pœnas juxta mensuram peccati sui sumat, & bene facientem pro ratione bonorum ipsius operum remuneret. Quod si dixeris, Quare ergò illum dimittere Israelem vice post vicem jussit, cum ab ipso cohibitus esset? Ut nempe descenderent in ipsum plagæ perstante ipso in obduratione sua (sicut diximus hoc punitum fuisse ipsum, ut persisteret in pertinacia sua;) neque enim ab ipso frustra requiringendum erat [illud] quod facere non potuit; hoc etiam ipsum fuit à sapientia divina, ut doceret ipsum, potuisse Deum etiam liberum ejus arbitrium cum vellet tollere. Dicit ergò illi, Requirō ego abs te, ut dimittas illos, & si dimiseris illos, evasurus es, tu autem non dimittes, ut perdaris: oportebat ergò ipsum gratiam illis facere, ut ita manifestò contraheret dicto Prophetæ [affirmantis] ipsum cohibitum fuisse ne illis gratiam faceret, at non potuit. Qua in re miraculum fuit insigne, omnibus conspicuum (sicut dixit, Ut declaretur nomen meum in tota terra) quod puniret Deus hominem impediendo ipsum liberè aliquid facere, cum ipse illud sciret, nec posset animam suam eripere eamque libertati restituere. Atque eodem prorsus modo se habuit pœna Sibonis Regis Heshbon; nam & ipsum ob rebellionem suam quâ prius peccaverat non coactus, punivit Deus impediendo ipsum quo minùs Israeli annueret, adeò ut ipsum interficerent: atque hoc est quod dicit, Et noluit Sibon permittere ut transirent per ipsum, quoniam obduraverat Dominus Deus spiritum ejus, &c. Illud autem quod fecit ut hoc difficile videretur omnibus interpretibus, est, quòd putarent Sibonem ideò punitum, quòd non permitteret Israelem transire per regionem ipsius. Dicunt ergò, Qomodo punitur cum coactus fuerit [ita facere?] sicut putarunt Pharaonem ac populum ipsius ideò punitos fuisse quòd Israelem non dimitterent; Res verò non aliter se habet atque explicavimus, scil. Pharaoni & populo ejus pœnam ob injustitiam ipsorum præcedentem, à Deo inflictam, hoc fuisse ne pœnitentiam agerent, adeò ut in ipsos omnes plagæ istæ descenderent. Et fuisse pœnam Sibonis ob oppressionem & injustitiam arbitrium ipsius, sicut ostensum est,) atque acquisitionem virtutum & vitiorum penes ipsum esse; quare oportet ipsum se ad acquirendas virtutes irritare & excitare, cum non sit exterius aliquid impellens, quod ipsum ad eas impellat: atque hoc est quod dicunt inter hujus libri monita, Si non ego mihi, quis mihi? Nec superest jam de hoc argumento, præter unum quæsitum, de quo paucis agendum est, quo absolvatur Capitis hujus scopus, cujus noluissem [equidem] ullam omnino mentionem facere, sed postulat necessitas ut faciamus: estque illud [de] scientia Dei quâ res novit. Hoc enim argumentum urgent contra nos illi qui existimant hominem ad obediendum, & transgrediendum cogi: atq; omnes ipsius actiones [ejusmodi esse] ut non sit ipsi in illis liberum arbitrium, cum arbitrium ipsius ab arbitrio Dei pendeat. Quod autem ad ita credendum adigit est, quod dicat [quis,] Vel novit Deus utrum hic homo futurus sit bonus aut malus, vel non novit: quod si dicas, Novit; sequitur aut illum coactum esse ad habitudinem istam induendam, quam præscivit Deus; aut esse Dei scientiam prorsus incertam: Sin dicas, illum non præscivisse illud, sequentur absurdum magna, ac diruentur muri. Audias ergo quid dicam, illudque diligenter perpendas, utpote quod, absque dubio, verum est. Hoc scilicet manifestum esse in scientia Theologica, (Metaphysica scilicet,) Deum Exc. non scire per scientiam, neque vivere per vitam, ita ut sint ipse & scientia res [duæ,] quemadmodum homo & scientia sua [se habent:] Homo enim aliud est à scientiâ, & scientia aliud ab homine: sunt ergo res duæ. Quod si Deus sciret per scientiam, sequeretur inde multiplicitas, essentque plures æterni, Deus scilicet. & scientia quâ scit, & vita quâ vivit, & potentia quâ potens est, atque ita quod ad cætera ejus attributa. Argumentum autem facile, quod & vulgus hominum facile intelligat, in medium protuli, cum aliâs argumenta & probationes quæ hanc sententiam evertant valida admodum sint, & demonstrativa. Constat ergo Deum Excelsum esse attributa sua, & attributa sua ipsum, adeo ut dicatur ipsum esse scientiam, ipsum scientem, & ipsum illud quod scitur: ipsumque esse vitam, & ipsum viventem, & ipsum illud qui essentiam suam extendit [in] vitam; & similiter in reliquis attributis. Hæ autem notiones difficiles sunt, quas non est quod speres te perfectè intellecturum è duabus aut tribus sermonis mei lineis, verum ut ad te proveniat aliquid tantum earum indicium. Porro ob hoc fundamentum magnum non permittit lingua Hebraica, dicere Chei Adonai, Per vitam Domini, sicut dicunt, Chei Naphsheca, per vitam animæ tuæ; Chei Pharaob, per vitam Pharaonis, viz. nomine constructo, cum constructum & illud quocum constructitur, res duæ distinctæ sint, neque res cum seipsa construatur. Cum ergo sit vita Dei essentia ipsius, & essentia ejus vita ipsius, neque res alia ab ipso, non adhibent ipsam in statu regiminis; verum dicunt Chai Adonai, vivens Dominus: Intentio ergo [nostra] est Deum & scientiam esse rem unam. Quinetiam ostensum est in Metaphysicis, non esse intellectibus nostris possibile ut perfectè essentiam Dei Exc. comprehendant: idque ob perfectionem essentiae ipsius, & intellectuum nostrorum defectum, cum non sint essentiae ipsius causæ per quas sciatur. fectus luminis visus ad apprehendendam lucem Solis : Neque est hoc ob debilitatem lucis Solis, verum quod lux ista fortior sit luce quæ eam apprehendere vult. Multa autem in hanc sententiam dixit, quæ omnia perspicue vera: ideoque necessario sequitur etiam, nos non scire scientiam ejus, neque eam ullatenus comprehendere, cum ipse sit scientia sua, & scientia sua ipse. Atque hæc est notio rara & mira, quæ cum ipsos fugeret, perierunt. Nōrunt enim essentiam Dei perfectam, quā in se est, non posse apprehendi. Studuerunt ergo apprehendere scientiam ipsius, quod sub intellectu ipsorum caderet, quod & impossibile est. Nam si comprehenderemus scientiam ipsius, comprehenderemus etiam essentiam ipsius, cum utræque res una sint. Perfecta enim ejus apprehensio ea est, ut apprehendatur sicut ipse in se est, [respectu] scientiæ, potentiæ, voluntatis; vitæ, aliorumque ejus attributorum præstantium. Jam autem explicavimus omnem de apprehendenda ipsius scientia cogitationem meram esse stultitiam, ultra quam ut sciamus ipsum scire, sicut scimus ipsum esse: Si autem interroget [quis,] Quomodo se habet scientia ipsius? respondemus, nos illud non apprehendere, sicut nec perfecte apprehendimus essentiam ipsius. Vicio autem vertit [Deus] illis qui desiderant apprehendere scientiam ipsius, atque illis dictum est, Num investigatione Deum invenies? Num usque ad perfectionem Omnipotentem invenies? Constat ergo ex his omnibus quæ diximus, actiones hominis ipsius [arbitrio] permissas esse, ac penes ipsum esse ut sit vel virtute præstans, vel malus, ita ut non cogat ipsum Deus ad alterutram harum habitudinum inclinare, ideoque necessaria esse ipsi præcepta, institutionem, apparatus, remunerationem, poenam: neque est in his omnibus difficultas. Quod autem ad descriptionem scientiæ Dei & apprehensionis quā omnia [apprehendit,] res est quam non capiunt intellectus nostri, sicut ostendimus. Atque hæc summa est eorum quæ in hoc Capite afferre statuimus. Jam autem tempus est ut sermoni huic finem imponam, & ad tractatum istum, cui hæc capita à nobis præmissa sunt, explicandum pergam.

Visum est mihi, antequam hujus ordinis explicationem aggrediar, de Oblationum divisione, & specierum earum enumeratione sermonem præmittere. Ad quod faciendum me invitavit, quod licet ipsarum divisio res sit manifesta totaque disertis Scripturæ verbis [explicata,] adeò ut non possit de eâ quis, ne post accuratam ipsius inspectionem, novi aliquid proferre, res tamen ipsa (Oblationes inquam) ob iniquitates nostras, quæ multæ sunt, jam deperdita sit, ut pauci admodum ei animum advertant, nec subinde occurrat alicui, etiamsi adverterit, ejus mentio, cum nihil jam agatur quod eandem sæpius in memoriam revocari faciat, nec de ea quis penitus ulla ex parte consulatur, adeò ut quod ad ipsam eadem sit doctrinâ præstantis, & imperiti cujusvis è plebe, ratio, nec de Oblationibus sciat maxima studiosorum pars, vel ea quæ multis Scripturæ textibus explicantur. Hoc in genere est, quod quæ ex animalibus sunt Oblationes, è quinque tantum ipsorum speciebus [defumantur,] viz. ovibus, bobus, capris, columbis parvis, & turturibus grandioribus. Oblationum autem species quatuor sunt, Holocaustum, Sacrificium pro peccato, pro delicto, pacificorum, aut quod ejusdem cum eo rationis sit. Nec ulla omnino in lege nostra oblatio occurrit, sive privati alicujus, sive totius coetus, quæ non sit vel harum quatuor specierum una aliqua, vel è pluribus composita. Quod ad Holocaustum, illud totum igne absumitur, cujusunque tandem generis fuerit, sive privati alicujus, sive totius coetus Oblatio; neque aliunde defumitur quam ex ovibus, bobus, aut capris masculis. Est etiam è turturibus & columbis; in his autem nulla inter marem & fœminam discrepantia. Sacrificiorum pro peccato duo sunt genera, alia, sc. quorum partes lege præceptæ offeruntur, reliquum verò comedunt in atrio generis Sacerdotalis mares; alia quorum residuum etiam crematur, sicut ostensuri sumus, quæque tam è masculis quam è fœminis sumuntur, idque sine discrimine, è quinque illis animalium speciebus. Sacrificii pro delicto offeruntur partes lege præscriptæ, reliquum in atrio comedunt Sacerdotes masculi, neque aliunde defumitur quam ex ovibus masculis, aliàs grandioribus, aliàs minoribus, quod & explicaturi sumus. Non est autem omnino inter Oblationes coetus, oblatio pro delicto, sed est ea semper privati oblatio. Pacificorum offeruntur tantum partes. Quod si privati fuerit oblatio, accipient de ea Sacerdotes pectus & armum, residuum comedentibus iis qui obtulerunt qualibet urbis Hierosolymitanæ parte. Intellego autem, cum dico eos qui obtulerunt, licitum esse cuilibet Israélite iis vesci, tam viris quam fœminis; sin totius coetus oblatio fuerit, residuum comedent Sacerdotes in atrio, viz. generis Hieratici mares: neque è volucris omnino offeretur, scil. è columbis & turturibus: sed è reliquarum trium specierum five majoribus, five minoribus, five masculis five fœminis. Ita & omnes oblationes coetus

 quod si de ovillâ fuerint, ultra hæc comburitur etiam cauda integra una cum vertebris cum ea conjunctis, sùntque eæ vertebræ inter duo femora mediæ, quas vocat laniorum vulgus Spinam dorfi.
 Porro res istæ quæ de pacificis comburuntur, pro
 ratione speciei è qua sunt, uti ostendimus, eadem prorsus etiam in sacrificiis pro peccato & delicto igni traduntur sine additione vel detractio-ne: atque hæc omnia appellantur Immurin, i. e. res quas cremare jubemur. Uno autem hîc præmissio; pergam ad aliam quandam oblationum distinctio-tractatu Parah, classis Tabaroth. His præmissis dico, Oblationes alio respectu in quatuor species di-vidi, Oblationem cœtûs, Oblationem privati, Oblationem cœtûs quæ similis est oblationi privati, &

 Oblationem privati quæ similis est oblationi cœtûs.
 Primum divisionis membrum, viz. oblatio cœtûs eas continet oblationes, quæ offerebantur singulis diebus, & singulis sabbatis, singulisque mensium initiis, & diebus festis, sine ulla unquam additione aut diminutione. Quod quotidie per omnem seculorum decursum offerebatur, hoc erat: duo agni in holocausta, quorum unus mane, alter inter duas vespas [offerebatur]; hi Sacrificium juge, absolutè appellantur. His omni Sabbato adde-bantur duo etiam agni in holocausta, qui post Juge matutinum, & ante Juge quod inter duas vespas, offerebantur. Ita omni Sabbato offerebantur quatuor Holocausta; nunquam pauciora. Duo quæ addebantur illa sunt quæ Musaph [i. additamentum] Sabbati audiunt. Primo cujuslibet mensis die addebantur duobus Jugibus juveni duo, aries unus, agni anniculi septem, omnia in holo-cautomata; & hircus caprarum in Sacrificium pro peccato: quæ omnia appellantur Additamentum initii mensis: quia scil. ultra jugia addebantur:
 ita quolibet novilunio offerebantur duodecim holocausta & hircus in Sacrificium pro peccato, non pauciora. Quod si accideret initium mensis die Sabbati, erant tum holocaustomata numero qua-

tuordecim; duo scil. Sacrificia jugia, duo agni Sabbati gratiâ additi, & decem illa quæ novilunii additamentum sunt, cum Hirco in Sacrificium pro peccato, ad idem spectante: quæ omnia quindecim erant res [offerendæ.] Porro; Oblationes Fectorum ita se habent, ac diserte statuit Scriptura, viz. Tempore festi azymorum per septem dierum spatium quotidie offerebatur, ultra duo jugia, & ultra additamentum Sabbati in Sabbato, instar additamenti Novilunii, scil. duo tauri, aries, septem agni; quæ omnia decem holocausta conficiunt, & hircus in sacrificium pro peccato: hæc in singulis septem dierum offerenda erant. At ultra hæc die festi istius secundo, qui est dies agitationis manipuli, agnus in holocaustum. Die autem Congregationis offerebantur, ultra jugia, duæ Oblationum species, una (in additamentum sc. diei istius) instar additamenti Novilunii, viz. Duo juveni, aries, & septem agni in holocausta, & hircus in sacrificium pro peccato. Altera, cum duobus panibus offerenda, prout in textu declaratum, scil. Juvenius, duo Arietes, & septem Agni, omnia in holocausta, Hircus in Sacrificium pro peccato, & duo agni in pacifica. Ita eorum quæ die Congregationis offerebantur summa erat, agni quatuordecim in holocausta; agni duo in pacifica; tres tauri, ut & tres arietes in holocausta; duo hirci in sacrificium pro peccato; omnia numero viginti quatuor. Die primo anni, ultra jugia, & additamentum novilunii jam memorata, offerebantur juvenius, aries, & septem agni in holocausta, cum hirco caprarum in sacrificium pro peccato. Die jejunii expiationis offerebat cœtus juvenium, arietem, & septem agnos, omnia holocausta, hircum in sacrificium pro peccato, prorsus instar additamenti initii anni, nec non hircum alium in sacrificium pro peccato (is cui eadem sorte consociatus erat hircus ἀποποιμαῖ) qui eâ quam describit Scriptura, ratione comburendus erat. Die primo festi Tabernaculorum, ultra jugia, offerebantur boves tredecim, arietes duo, agni quatuordecim, holocausta omnes; hircus in sacrificium pro peccato: omnia offerenda numero triginta. Eodem modo se habebat cujuslibet è septem diebus Festi, oblatio, viz. duo arietes, agni quatuordecim, hircus in sacrificium pro peccato: de juveniorum autem numero singulis diebus detrahebantur singuli, adeo ut diei septimi oblatio esset juveni septem, arietes duo, agni quatuordecim, omnes in holocausta, cum hirco in sacrificium pro peccato: omnium summa viginti quatuor. Die octavo offerebatur, ultra jugia, juvenius, aries, septem agni; omnes holocausta; & hircus in oblationem pro peccato. Oblationes istæ, quas diximus constitutis istis diebus oblatas fuisse, appellantur Additamentum diei [istius,] quia sc. die isto offerebantur ultra duo jugia. Quod si contingeret quemlibet dierum istorum cum Sabbato coincidere, offerebatur additamentum diei post additamentum Sabbati; adeo ut si dies anni primus esset Sabbatum, offerrent primò jube matutinum; dein additamentum Sabbati; ac postea additamentum novilunii; ac post illud additamentum diei; dein ultimo loco jube inter duas vespervas offerendum. quod si Princeps fuerit, viz. Rex qui summum obtinet imperium, offeret ille hircum caprarum. si Sacerdos unctus, & ob eas quæ Capite secundo Horaioth recensentur condiciones, offeretur Ju-sunt in genere, oblationes coetus, quæque continuè sine additione aut detractiōne offerebantur; eæque omnes Sabbatum loco pellebant, & immunditiem, prout in tractatu Pesachim ostensum est. Jam autem tibi notum est, non esse inter oblationes coetus, Pacifica, duobus tantum diei Congregationis agnis exceptis, nec inter ea omnino esse Sacrificium pro Delicto, & ex oblationibus coetus duas esse species sacrificiorum pro peccato, quarum sc. unius residuum comedebatur, alterius cremabatur; cujusmodi erat hircus diei expiationis tantum.

Species secunda, quæ est oblatio Privati, quinquefariam dividitur. Primo, cum tenetur privatus oblatione ob factum aliquod quod patriverit, aut verba quæ protulerit. Secundò, cum incumbat ipsi oblatio ob statum aliquem [corporis] qui ipsi contigerit. Tertiò, cum ob aliquid quod facultatibus ipsius contigerit, offerenda ipsi sit. Quartò, cum temporis alicujus noti periodus illam ab ipso offerri requirat. Quintò, cum se sponte ad illam offerendam obligat. Prima harum Classis eo se habet quem descripturus sum modo, viz. Cum Excidii causæ, quarum in lege fit mentio, triginta sex sint, prout primo Tractatus Cerithoth [de Excidiiis] Capite enumeratæ sunt, harum tres sunt, in quibus qui transgressus fuerit nullâ tenetur oblatione, viz. qui Pascha tempore suo celebrare neglexerit, qui circumcisionem omiserit, & blasphemus (cujus rei causam ostendimus Capite secundo Tractatus Horaioth, atque insuper primo Capite Cerithoth explicaturi sumus,) reliquarum verò triginta tribus quicunque in una aliquâ per errorem peccaverit, Sacrificium pro peccato offerre tenetur, vel, si dubitaverit fecerit necne, Sacrificium pro delicto dubium, excepto eo qui Sanctuarium & sacra ipsius polluerit: Neque enim ille ob ignorantiam sacrificio ob delictum dubio tenetur, uti Cap. primo Cerithoth declarabitur. Jam verò è numero peccatorum istorum triginta trium, ob quorum singula debetur sacrificium, sunt Idololatria, & qui Sanctuarium & res ejus sacras polluerit. Ratio autem Sacrificii ob errorem qui in horum præceptorum aliquo contigerit, eo se habet, quem descripturus sum, modo. Si privatus iste per errorem in Idololatria peccaverit, tum qui ita erravit, capram anniculam in oblationem pro peccato offeret, siue fuerit privatus iste Rex, siue Idiota, siue Sacerdos unctus: quod si in pollutione Sanctuarii aut rerum ejus sacrarum erraverit, tum ovem aut capram grandiore; quod si hoc præ facultatum tenuitate non poterit, tum turturum, aut pullorum columbinorum par offeret, alterum in holocaustum, alterum in sacrificium pro peccato; vel si nec hoc assequi potuerit, tum decimam Ephæ partem, prout in textu expressè mandatum. Atque in hoc etiam erroris [genere] eadem est ratio errantis, siue Rex fuerit, siue Idiota, siue Sacerdos unctus. Quod si erratum fuerit in aliquo reliquorum triginta & unius peccatorum, in eo discrepantia inter errantes statuitur. Si enim qui in horum aliquo erraverit privatus fuerit è vulgo hominum, qualem Scriptura [unum] è populo terræ appellat, tenetur ille hircus caprarum, vel ove foeminâ in Sacrificium pro peccato: B b

Porro ex oblationibus privati est etiam illa, quâ tenetur si transgressus rem habuerit cum ancilla desponsata. Quicunque enim fuerit, sive per errorem, sive ex superbia peccaverit, arietem offerre tenetur [in oblationem] pro delicto, quæ [Piaculum] pro delicto manifestò appellatur ; nec non, Piaculum pro delicto ancillæ. Similiter qui è re sacra numuli valore utilitatem ceperit, transgressus est, & arietem pro delicto offerre tenetur, qui Piaculum transgressionis nominatur ; eâ scilicet conditione, si per errorem peccaverit ; quòd si superbè egerit, non tenetur piaculo transgressionis ; quod sacrum est enim non polluitur cùm quis ex superbia peccat, sed sanctitatem suam retinet, uti Cap. secundo Tract. Kiddushim ostendimus. Similiter in juramento, tam ad testimonium adhibendum, quàm de pignore, tenetur oblatione, tam qui per errorem, quàm qui ex superbia peccaverit ; quemadmodum C. secundo Tract. Ceritotb ostensuri sumus. Oblationis autem ob perjurium in testimonio perhibendo eadem prorsus est ratio quæ [oblata] ab eo qui Sanctuarium ejúsque sacra polluerit. At in juramento de pignore, viz. cùm pignus [apud se depositum] denegans falsò de eo juraverit, oblatio est aries pro delicto offerendus. Similiter cùm aliquid furatus falsò juraverit ; aut si jus alicui sit ad facultates quæ penes ipsum fuerint, sive ob consortium, sive deperditum ab ipso repertum, sive aliquid vi ablatum, sive quòd fraude in commercio usus, detinuerit bona ista, quæ reddere tenetur, in horum generum aliquo, si denegaverit, idque adhibito juramento, offerendus est illi aries ob delictum, qui Piaculum furti appellatur. Ac eadem est in his omnibus ratio, sive per errorem, sive per superbiam peccantis ; tenetur enim sacrificio pro delicto offerendo, ubi juraverit : uti & Cap. nono, Tract. Kama ostendimus. Quòd si falsò quis juramentum temerarium per errorem protulerit, sacrificium ei offerendum incumbit, quale ei qui Sanctuarium ejúsque sacra polluerit. Atque hæc oblationum, quibus obnoxius est privatus quis, ubi peccatum facto aut dicto commiserit, juxta partitionem hujus generis, summa est.

Classis secunda est, cùm alicui incumbit Oblatio ob eorum aliquid quibus affectum est corpus : viz. si gonorrhœa laboraverit, si leprâ correptus, aut si mortui contactu pollutus fuerit Nazireatum professus, qui perinde est sive per errorem, sive sponte immunditiam contraxerit ; atque hoc etiam in genere sunt Profelytus & Puerpera. Oblatio quâ tenetur tam Gonorrhœicus quàm Gonorrhœica, ubi mundi evaserint, est par turturum, vel duo pulli columbarum, quorum alter in sacrificium pro peccato, alter in holocaustum cedit. Puerperæ verò agnus anniculus in holocaustum, & pullus columbæ aut turtur in sacrificium pro peccato ; vel, si pauper fuerit, par turturum, aut duo pulli columbarum, alter in holocaustum, alter in sacrificium pro peccato. Naziræi, ubi pollutus fuerit, oblatio est par turturum, aut duo pulli columbarum, alter in holocaustum, alter in sacrificium pro peccato ; & agnus anniculus in sacrificium pro delicto. Leprâ affecti, duo agni, alter in sacrificium pro delicto, qui Asbam Metzurraa, i. est Leprosi sacrificium pro delicto appellatur, alter in holocaustum, & agna in sacrificium pro peccato ; quòd si pauper fuerit, offerat [licet] par turturum, aut duos pullos columbarum, alterum in sacrificium pro peccato, alterum in holocaustum, cum agnō in sacrificium pro delicto. Jam verò Profelytus non plenè admittitur in religionem [Judaicam,] ut sit iustar reliquorum Israelitarum, nisi tribus intervenientibus, viz: Circumcisione, Baptismo, & acceptatione Sacrificii; sicut nec ipsi Israelitæ, cum in religionem hanc à Deo institutam reciperentur. Circumcidit enim eos [Dei] Legatus in Agypto, cum legem de sacrificio Paschatis ipsis traderet, ne quis incircumcissus ipsum comederet, vetans. Baptizati autem sunt in deserto, antequam ad ipsos demitteretur Lex, ubi & holocausta, & pacifica obtulerunt. Hoc est quod dicit, Misitque juniores filiorum Israël, & obtulerunt holocausta: ac tum demissa est ad ipsos lex. Sacrificium igitur à Profelyto offerendum est par turturum, aut duo pulli columbarum, uterque holocaustum. Innuitur hoc eo quod dicit Deus, Cum peregrinatus fuerit apud vos peregrinus, aut quicumque est in medio vestri per generationes vestras, feceritque oblationem ignitam odoris quietis Domino. Expressa autem verba Sifra sunt, Sicut Israelitæ non introeunt in fœdus nisi adhibitis tribus rebus, Circumcisione, Baptismo, & acceptatione Oblationis; ita nec Profelyti aliâ ratione. Vel, Sicut Israelitæ initiati sunt sanguine holocausti, & sacrificiis pacificis, ita & profelyti sanguine holocausti, & sacrificiis pacificis [initiandi.] Quid hoc vult dicere? Et fecerit oblationem ignitam: Dicas, Abi & vide quodnam sit pretium quod totum [in] oblationem igne consumendum cedat, cujus in nullam partem potestatem habes. Non reperies præter holocaustum ex avibus, i. e. non invenies nummos quibus ematur oblatio, cujus pretii nulla pars tibi utilis sit, sed tota super altari cremanda sit, præter holocaustum ex avibus: holocausti enim è quadrupedibus pellis Sacerdotibus cedit. Quod superest, Singulare aliquid offerre non licet; quia in tota Lege non reperimus unum aliquid seorsim offerendum præcipi. Unde dicunt, Omnium quorum in Lege mentio est nidorum dimidia pars in holocaustum cedit, exceptis à Profelyto offerendis, qui toti igne absumendi sunt. Et in additamento Cerituth dicit, Si attulerit quis jumentum in [sacrificium] expiatorium, liber est; sin frumentacea & libamina, haud ita: non ita dictum est aliam ob causam, quam ut rem illi leviores reddat.

Classis tertia est, cum sacrificium offerre tenetur quis ob aliquid quod facultatibus ipsius contingit: cujusmodi sunt Primogenitum, & Decimæ jumentorum, quorum utraque similia sunt pacificis, nisi quod jumentorum decimas comederent Domini Hierosolymis, instar decimarum secundarum; Primogenitum autem, si perfectum esset, oblatum comederent Sacerdotes, uti in Tract. De Primogenitis ostendetur. Similiter cum primitias offerret quis, eas in sacrificium pacificorum offerebat, uti Cap. secundo, Tract. Biccurim explicabitur.

Classis quarta est, cum offerendum sit cuiuspiam sacrificium ob temporis designati adventum: cujusmodi sunt tria festa [illa.] Unicuique enim Israelitæ tempore festi offerendum erat holocaustum; illud nempe quod Olatib Rayiab, holocaustum comparitionis, nuncupabatur; & Sacrificium pacificorum, illud quod Chagigah, i. e. Festivitas audit: de quo dicit Dominus, Festum celebrabis Domino Deo tuo; dein & sacrificium pacificorum alterum præter Chagigah; illud nempe quod Pacificum lætitiæ vocant, de quo quo dicit, Et lætaberis in festo. Harum autem trium oblationum præcesserunt leges, sc. quâ ratione augendæ vel minuendæ sint, & quis ad eas offerendas obligetur, & quomodo, deque tempore oblationis ipsarum, [diebus] festivitatis primo & secundo, sũntque omnia necessariò debita, scil. Comparitionis, Festivitatis & Lætitiæ [testandæ sacrificia.] Quod autem ad sacrificium festivitatis diei decimi quarti, viz. pacificorum, quod etiam privato offerendum erat die decimoquarto mensis Nisan, unâ cum Paschate, de quo loquitur Dominus. * Et immolabis Pascha Domino Deo tuo oves & boves, &c. est illud uniuscujusque arbitrio permiffum, uti Cap. sexto Pesachim ostensum est. Ac licet Talmud [sacrificium] festivitatis oblationem cœtus appellet, quod ab universo populi cœtu offerretur, ego tamen in classe Sacrificiorum à privatis offerendorum collocavi, cum unusquisque singulatim ipsum offerret; neque vel Sabbatum, vel pollutionem loco cedere faciat.

Classis quinta eorum est, quæ sibi quis sponte imponat, viz. si quis ad Naziræatum se ad certum aliquod temporis spatium obliget, aut votum aliquid concipiat, aut sponte aliquod Deo offerat. Quod si Naziræatum in se ad tempus suscepit, spatio illo exacto offerendum est ipsi sacrificium purificationi [inserviens,] sc. agnus anniculus, in holocaustum, & agna annicula in sacrificium pro peccato, & aries in sacrificium pacificorum. Votum est cum dixerit quis, Ecce ego in me holocaustum; aut, Ecce in me sacrificium pacificorum [offerendum suscipio.] Oblatio spontanea, cum certum aliquod animal innuens dixerit, Ecce istud holocaustum est, vel, Ecce illud sacrificium pacificorum. Quod ad discrepantiam autem inter votum & oblationem spontaneam, jam sæpius repetitum præcessit, oblationibus votivis obstrictum ad earum damnum (si quid illis acciderit) præstandum teneri; spontaneis, haud ita. Quod autem ad sacrificium confessionis, cujus apud ipsos mentionem audies cum dicunt, Ecce teneor ego sacrificio confessionis, est illud sacrificium pacificorum, unâque munus frumentaceum, uti in Tractatu Menachoth ostendetur. Jam ex iis quæ tibi à me exposita sunt, constat non licere cuipiam aut vovere, aut sponte offerendum in se suscipere vel sacrificium pro peccato, vel pro delicto; holocaustum tantum aut sacrificium pacificorum in votum, vel oblationem spontaneam adhibebit, sive ex volucribus, sive è quadrupedibus: quin & notum tibi feci sacrificium pacificorum è volucribus non defumi. Atque hæc sacrificiorum à privatis offerendorum summa est, quibus omnibus hoc commune est, quod nec Sabbati, nec pollutionis lege quenquam solvant.

Species tertia est, Sacrificium cœtus, quod simile est sacrificio privati, sc. Cum Consistorium magnum per errorem ut licitum permiserint aliquid, quo qui per superbiam peccaverit, excidii reus est, qui ex errore, sacrificio ob peccatum definito; si populus, eorum sententiâ in errorem inductus, transgressus fuerit, (sicut in Tract. Horaioth ostensum est) tenentur illi sacrificio ob peccatum offerendo: quod si error in rebus ad Idololatriam spectantibus fuerit, offerendus est ipsis juvenus vitulus in holocaustum, cum hirco caprarum in sacrificium pro peccato. Juvenus autem ac hircus isti singulis tribubus (uti in Horaioth explicatum est) incumbunt, ac hirci comburendi sunt, quod sacrificium pro peccato cœtus sint; de juvenco autem ob rem latentem, quem cremandum præcepit, diferte dicit Dominus, Sa-dotalis maribus comedebantur. Eodem modo reperies omne privati ob peccatum sacrificium sexûs esse fœminei, tribus tantum exceptis, quæ è maribus sunt etiam si à privato ob peccatum oblata, viz. hirco quem offerebat Rex cùm erraret in re aliquâ quæ ex superbia commissa excidio obnoxios reddebat homines, per errorem verò, sacrificio ob peccatum definito; & juvenco omnium præceptorum causâ oblato, quem ob errorem suum offerebat Sacerdos Unctus; & Juvenco diei expiationum.

crificium ob peccatum cœtus est. Et in Sifra dixerunt, Regula generalis est de omnibus cœtus ob peccatum sacrificiis, comburenda esse ipsa. Atque hirci isti in sacrificium pro peccato oblati, ii sunt qui Hirci Idololatriæ appellantur, ideò quòd Confistorium Judicum ipsos ob errorem in rebus ad Idololatriam spectantibus adducit. Quòd si in reliquis præceptis erraverit Judicum concilium, (uti in Horaiotb ostensum est,) sacrificium ab ipsis offerendum est Juvencus filius bovis in sacrificium pro peccato, qui, Juvencus cùm latuerit res à cœtu [offerendus] vocitatur, quòd nempe initio pericopæ dixerit, Et latuerit res. Appellatur etiam aliàs, Juvencus qui ob omnia præcepta offertur: de quo expressum Scripturæ mandatum est, comburendum esse: atque hunc etiam singulæ tribus offerre tenentur, uti Cáp. primo Horaiotb ostensum est. Hoc autem genus inter oblationes cœtus recensuimus, eò quòd dixerit Dominus, Offeretque cœtus; nec non, Et faciet tota congregatio; item, Expiabitque Sacerdos totum cœtum; ac rursus, Et remittetur toti Israelitarum cœtui. Oblationi interim privati in hoc simile est, quòd nec Sabbatum, nec immunditiem loco pellat, uti nec Sacrificium privati.

Species quarta est Oblatio privati, quæ oblationi cœtus similis est; estque ea sacrificium Paschatis ab unoquoque decimoquarto die Nisan immolandum, quemadmodum in Tract. Pesachim ostensum est; nec non juvencus in sacrificium pro peccato, & aries in holocaustum, quos offerebat Sacerdos summius die jejunii expiatorii; qui, Juvencus diei expiationis audiebat, atque ille est de quo dictum est, Cum hoc ingreditur Akron in Sanctuarium; cujus ordo in Tract. Yoma explicatus est; & de eo comburendo expressum est Legis præceptum. Ideò autem similis perhibetur species ista oblationi cœtus, quòd & Sabbatum, & immunditiem loco cedere faciat, instar sacrificii à cœtu offerendi. Regula enim apud nos fundamentalis est, Omnem oblationem, cui certum tempus præfinitum est, Sabbatum & immunditiem pellere; iis autem omnibus, quibus certum aliquod tempus statutum non est, nec sabbatum, nec immunditiem pelli. Ne autem te in errorem ducat Sacrificium Festivitatís, cùm homini liberum sit ipsum toto septem dierum spatio offerre; ut & illud Diei congregationis, cùm ipsum quolibet tempore durante hebdomadâ præstare liceat, quemadmodum in Tract. Chagigah ostensum est, ideòque nec Sabbatum, nec immunditiem loco cedere facit. Porro, si omnes oblationes prædictas percurreris, reperies haudquaquam esse in omnibus totius cœtus sacrificiis fœminam, neque in iis quæ inter ea oblationi privati assimilantur; neque ex omnibus totius cœtus pro peccato sacrificiis, quod comburatur, excepto hirco diei expiationum, cui confors erat hircus ἀποποιμαίνῃ, ac hircis Idololatriæ causâ offerendis, & juvenco ob peccatum quod committentem latuerit: reliqua enim sacrificia ob peccatum à profapix Sacer-

Notum etiam tibi fiet, non esse inter privati ob peccatum sacrificia quod comburatur, exceptis juvenco quod omnium præceptorum nomine venit, & juvenco diei expiationum; cum reliqua omnia comederentur. Constat etiam non esse inter omnia à toto cœtu oblata, sacrificium ob peccatum è specie ovilla, vel holocaustum è caprina: neque esse inter omnia privati munera, Sacrificium ob peccatum è specie bovina, excepto juvenco omnium præceptorum nomine oblato, & eo qui die expiationum immolabatur, qui (ut ostendimus) cremabantur. Conclusio autem ex hac recensione emanans est, omnem privati ob peccatum oblationem comedi, sexusque esse tantum fœminei, neque è specie bovina defumi, excepto hirco à Principe offerendo, utpote qui mas erat; & juvenco omnium præceptorum nomine allato; eoque qui diei expiationum proprius, utpote qui & mares & de genere bubulo erant, atque omnes comburebantur. Ideo autem appellabatur Juvenus qui omnium præceptorum nomine venit, quod de eo dixerit Scriptura, ¹ Anima cum peccaverit per errorem [in aliquo] ex omnibus præceptis Domini quæ non sunt facienda, &c. Atque hæc omnia sunt quæ ex animalibus offeruntur munera, quorum usus perpetuus est secundum legem à Deo institutam, quæ comprehendit nomen Sacrificii unum omnibus commune: Alia omnibus, specie licet differentibus, communia hæc sunt. 1. Quod non offeratur ex iis aliquid maculâ aliquâ vitiatum: vitiorum autem hoc in ordine fiet mentio. 2. Quod nihil eorum in altari offerat quispiam excepto Sacerdote ritè disposito, vitiorum, quam maxime fieri potest, immuni, quod etiam hoc in ordine declarabitur. 3. Ne offeratur munus ex iis aliquod, nisi tempore diurno, eò quod dictum sit, Die quo præcepit filiis Israel, &c. Indè traditione acceptum est, Interdium, non noctu. 4. Et ne quispiam eorum alibi offeratur quàm in Sanctuario, ubicunque tandem esset Sanctuarium. Cum ergo notum jam fecerit Deus locum quem in Lege innuit, montem Moria esse, fieri non potest, ut alibi in tota terra offeratur sacrificium quàm Hierosolymis, idque privatim in monte Moria ex omnibus urbis Hierosolymitana partibus, & in ea montis parte quæ [ei rei] designata est, uti in Tractatu Middoth ostensuri sumus. In multis autem inter se discrepant, variisque perficiuntur modis, nec non varia unicuique speciei quibus vitientur, accidunt, in quorum pleraque hoc Tractatu Zebachim inquiretur, & in diversis aliarum hujus ordinis, cujus explicationem jam aggrediar, partium locis.

Notum est præcessisse nobis in quinque or-dinibus istis jam explicatis, multa quæ ad pollutionem & purificationem spectant fundamenta, ac privatim in Tractatu Adaioth [de testificationibus] quorum unumquodque, ubicunque tandem occurrerit, allatum est ob causam aliquam loco non suo, cum & radices earum & rami universi hujus sint Classis: quâ igitur [in explicandâ, nullo habito respectu ad ea quæ explicata sunt in Classe aliqua præcedente, ex iis quæ spectant ad pollutionem aut munditiam, ita de hoc argumento sermonem instituam, ut sibi sufficiat, minimè indigus Classis alicujus alterius. Quædam autem hoc loco præmissurus sum, quæ sint vice clavis ad ea quæ continet Classis ista, ubi monuerò unamquamque immunditiam, cujus in Lege est mentio, ortum ac principium necessariò ducere ab aliqua animalis specie, exceptâ leprâ quæ vestes & parietes polluit; cum non sit hominum quif-piam ejus principium, quemadmodum expresse dicit Lex: quinetiam inter omnes animalis species non esse quæ dum vivit polluat aut polluat, ho-mine solum excepto; reliquæ enim animalis species omnes dum in vivis sunt mundæ sunt, ut nec alia polluant, nec ab aliis polluantur: homo solus dum vivit polluit & polluitur, eâ quæ de-scribetur pollutione. Siquidem immunditiæ species, juxta illud quod in textu Legis habetur, undecim sunt. Immundities, scilicet, reptilis; Immundities cadaveris; Immundities mortui; Immundities concubitûs feminis; Immundities aquæ oblationis pro peccato; Immundities oblationum pro peccato; Immundities gonorrhæici; Immundities gonorrhæicæ; Immundities menstruatae; Immundities puerperæ, & Immundities lepræ.
 Harum autem immunditiarum in aliquibus plures sunt Patres, [five principes] in aliquibus pater unicus. Atque hæc est earum partitio. Immundities reptilis unus est tantum pater; scil. quod ipsum reptile sit pater pollutionis; quod nomen (reptilis scil.) competit unicuique individuo octo specierum istarum, quarum in Lege sit mentio:
 Sunt autem Mustela, ^m Mus, Rubeta, Mygale, Chamæleon, Stellio, Lacerta, Talpa. Porro, reptilium sanguis, caro, & adeps, æquè pollui-unt; nec non quatuor eorum pelles & carnes; Mygales, scil. Chamæleontis, Stellionis, Lacertæ; at ossa reptilis carne nudata sola non pollui-
 unt. Cætera abominanda & reptilia, veluti rana, testudines, viperæ, serpentes, &c. munda sunt omnia, nec polluiunt. Immundities autem in cadaveribus pater unicus est; ipsum scil. cadaver, quod pater est immundities, quo nomine signifi-catur quodvis mortuum ex omnibus speciebus ju-maçetur, prout in Tract. Cholim explicatum est, mundum sit; at immundum maçetur, an juguletur, an morte naturali moriatur, nihil interfit: nec non quòd [in] cadavere bestiae immundae, & animalis, sive immundi, sive mundi, nulla sit differentia inter carnem & adipem respectu pollutionis; at in bestia munda secus se res habeat, cum adeps mortuae nullatenus polluat; cujus causam explicaturi fumus loco suo in Tract. Oketzim: quin & sanguis cadaveris non polluit eam immunditiae quae cadaver [animalis] sive mundi sive immundi: similiter, & ossa carne nudata, cornuque & ungues & ungulae cadaveris non polluunt; at medulla quae intra ossa est cadaveris polluit, æquè ac caro: eodémque modo in reptili, perinde est ac caro ipsius, & in mortuo instar carnis mortui. Explicata autem sunt ista in Tosepbet Oboloth, ubi dictum est, Medulla omni respectu est instar carnis. In immunditia autem mortui novem sunt patres; primò enim ipse mortuus est pater pollutionis. Nolo autem, cum dico Mortuum, integrum mortuum, sed rem quae polluit immunditiae mortui, veluti particulam quamvis carnis ipsius magnitudine olivæ, & carnem ejusdem coagulata, & cochleare putredinis, & ossa, & sanguinem, &c. quae enumerabuntur Capite secundo Oboloth: nec interest sit mortuus Ethnicus an Israelita, præterquam in immunditiae tentorii privatim, cum Ethnicus non polluat immunditiae tentorii. Nam expressè dicit Talmud, Israelitæ polluunt tentorium, Ethnici autem non polluunt; quod nititur dicto ipsius isto, " Hæc est Lex: Homo cum mortuus fuerit in tentorio. Dixit enim [alibi] Et vos pecus meum, pecus pascuæ meæ, vos homo, vos vocamini Homo, at gentes mundi non vocantur Homo. Sepulchrum etiam est pater immunditiei. Quin & homo qui mortuo pollutus fuerit, appellatur pater: paritèrque vasa quae ipsum tetigerint, nec non vasa quae tetigerint mortuum, & homo qui ipsa tetigerit, & vasa quae hominem istum tetigerint; horum trium unumquodque est pater pollutionis, scil. vasa prima, nec non homo & vasa illa altera, paritèrque vasa quae tetigerint vasa ista mortuo polluta, sunt & ipsa pater immunditiei: quorum uniuscujusque probationem allaturi fumus Capite 2. Tract. Oboloth. Hæc autem omnia [ita se habent] eâ conditione, ut sit homo iste Israelita, quòd si Ethnicus fuerit qui mortuum tetigerit, neque ipse pollutus mortuo censetur; nec polluit eo modo quo polluit mortui [contactu] immundus. Initio autem Tosepbet Tract. Oboloth dixerunt [Magistri,] Ethnicus & Bestia, partus octimestris, vas testaceum, cibi, liquores qui tetigerint mortuum, vasa quae ipsos tetigerint, munda sunt. Sensus autem, cum hîc dicit munda sunt, est, non esse rationem ipsorum eandem ac vasorum quae tetigerint pollutum mortuo, quod tibi ideò explicavi ne putares liquores qui tetigerint mortuum, qui sunt absque dubio immundi, non polluerent vasa, verum ea polluerent pollutione liquorum propriâ, quam tibi descripturus sum, non pollutione patris, respectu vasorum. Est etiam Tabernaculum è patribus immunditiei. Ratio autem Tabernaculi quod mortuo pollutum fuerit, & vasorum quae mortuum tetigerint, eadem est; quoniam rem aliam septem diebus polluit, ut & vasa quæ mortuum tetigerint. Ea autem singillatim recensuimus, quoniam pellis & vestis, & cilicium, cum mortuo tabernaculum fuerint, immunditiam contrahunt. Secus autem reliquæ vasorum ma-teriæ. Nam si fuerit tabernaculum è ligno, aut testa, aut ossè, non omnino polluitur, nisi vas illud ligneum aut ossèum tabernaculi instar mortuo superimmineat, adeo ut sit ratio eorum eadem ac vasorum immersionis, quæ mortuum tetigerint, uti explicaturi sumus Capit. 27. hujus Tractatùs. Et in Tosepbet Niddab dixerunt, Quodcunque polluitur [respectu] Tabernaculi, polluitur ad septem dies; est tamen quod polluitur ad septem dies;

nec interim polluitur ratione Tabernaculi. Innuit vasa immersionis, sicut declaravimus. Porro ex iis, quæ scire debes, est, quòd cum ista omnia ad mortuum [spectantia] patres fuerint, [hoc fiat] ut in iis primum & secundum respectu immunditiei [qd ad] Terumah & res sacras numeremus, uti hac ipsâ præfatione ostensurus sum; non quòd qui aliquo ex istis pollutus fuerit, reus excidii fiat;
si ingressus fuerit sanctuarium, aut res sacras comederit. Ita expresse in Tosiphta dicitur, De quibus hæc intelligenda? in Terumah & rebus sanctis; at non se radit Naziræus nisi ob mortuum tantum, neque rei fiunt ob pollutionem Sanctuarii & rerum ejus sanctarum, nisi ob mortuum tantum. Pol-lutiones autem à mortuo, ob quas se radere tenetur Naziræus, enumeravimus Cap. 7. Tract. Neziruth.
In concubitu autem feminis pater unicus est;
quòd sc. semen ipsum pater immunditiei sit hac conditione ut profluat ab eo qui novenni, uno die aut amplius; major est. In Sifra legitur, Ish [vir,] ad excipiendum Minorem. At forsan excipere possum novenni uno die majorem: Dicit;
Et vir cum exierit; &c. declaravimus autem sæpius novenni uno die majoris concubitus pro concubitu haberi, neque requiritur arrectio aut voluptas; uti in Gemara Yoma explicatum est;
verum requiritur tantum quòd polluat, ut sit co-loris albi instar feminis noti: ita in Tosepbet Zabim dicitur; Concubitus feminis rubentis mundus est.
Sæpe autem evenit, ut profluat semen istiusmodi,
cum quis continuis vicibus brevi temporis spatio coitum repetierit, adeo ut prædeat sanguis antequam mutatus in vasis spermaticis fuerit.

In immunditie aquæ purgandò peccato destinatæ, unicus est pater; quòd sc. cum cinis vaccæ ru-fæ commistus fuerit cum aqua fontana (uti in Tract.
Parab describitur) ita statim afficiatur aqua ista, ut ex parte polluat, & ex parte non polluat, quâ autem polluit sit pater immunditiei, quam proprietatem declaraturi sumus Cap. 1. hujus Tract. At in immunditie oblationum pro peccato tres sunt patres, quorum unus est Vacca rufa; qui enim eâ comburendâ, aliisque quæ ad ipsam spectant peragendis, occupatur, polluit vestes instar ejus qui tetigerit patrem immunditiei, ut loco suo Tract.
Parab declarabitur. Secundus juveni & hirci, quorum sanguis intrò affertur; nam & qui hos comburit, polluit vestes; horum autem juvencorum & hircorum mentionem fecimus diversis locis Tract. Zebachim; in textu autem Gemara Zeba-chim dicitur, Ecce discis; quòd ad omnia quæ expiant, eum qui ipsâ comburit polluere vestes.
Tertius est hircus ἀποποιῶν. Qui enim hircum emissa-

emissarium dimittit, polluit vestes. Immundities autem [fœminæ] profluvio laborantis continet septem patres. Ipsa enim mulier profluvio laborans est pater immunditiei; & qui cum ea coit, pater immunditiei; & sanguis profluvii ipsius pater immunditiei; & sputum, & urina, & illud cui infidet, & lectus, singula patres. Notum autem est e disertis legis verbis, immunditiam menstruatae & puerperæ eodem modo se habere, dicente Domino, Secundum dies separationis morbi sui immunda erit: Nec non, Et immunda erit hebdomadibus duabus juxta separationem suam. Menstruatae autem sunt iidem ipsi septem isti patres. Eodemque modo Immundities Gonorrhæici septem patres continet: qui sunt, Ipse Gonorrhæicus, fluxus ejus, concubitus feminis ejus, saliva ejus, urina ejus, stratum ipsius, & illud cui infidet. Cum autem notum sit nullum esse discrimen, respectu pollutionis, inter eum qui cum menstruata, aut profluvio laborante, aut puerpera, rem habuerit intra septem dies à partu masculi, aut quatuordecim à partu fœnellæ (sicut dixit Dominus. Et viro qui dormierit cum immunda) appellabimus ipsum congregientem cum immunda; quem etiam ut unum e numero patrum immunditiei recensēbimus, non autem congregientem cum menstruata seorsim, cum profluvio affectâ seorsim, & cum puerpera seorsim, cum omnes ut res una se habeat. Ex iis autem quæ oportet scire est, quod quamdiu purgata non fuerit quæ immunda est aquâ in conceptaculo [contentâ] polluat congregientem cum ipsa etiam post annos aliquot à cessatione fluxus sanguinis. Neque enim temporis [morâ] absque aqua conceptaculi mundatur. Sic & sedile, & stratum, utrumque pater est. Neque enumerabimus stratum Gonorrhæici, & stratum leprosi, & stratum Gonorrhæicæ, & stratum menstruatae, seorsim, cum una sit omnium ratio; verum stratum tantum à quocunque tandem pollutum recensēbimus. Eodemque modo, dum recensēbimus sanguinem immundæ, erit [nomen illud] sanguini menstruatae, profluvio affectæ, & puerperæ commune: similiter cum dicemus saliva immundi, aut urina ipsius, comprehendet illud gonorrhæa laborantem, profluvio affectam, menstruata, & puerperam, cum saliva, & urinae uniuscujusque e quatuor istis eadem sit ratio respectu immunditiei. Porro in immunditie lepræ quatuor sunt patres: Leprosus absolute, qui etiam appellatur leprosus intra dies consummationis suæ, & leprosus intra dies ipsi enumerandos, & vestis plagâ affecta, & domus plagâ affecta. Intellego autem, cum hic dico vestem, quodecunque pollutioni lepræ obnoxium est, sive vestis sit lanea, sive linea, sive stamen, sive subtegmen, sive vas quodecunque coriaceum; sic & cum dico [domus plagâ affecta] intellego universam domus materiam, ipsius scil. lapides, ligna & pulverem. Cum unaquæque harum partium polluat si magnitudine olivam æquet, uti declarabitur Cap. 13. Tract. Negaim, hujus classis. Sunt ergo patres immunditiei, numero 32. isti scil. Reptile, Cadaver, Mortuus, Homo pollutus mortuo, Vasa polluta mortuo, Vasa quæ tetigerint hominem mortuo pollutum, Vasa quæ tetigerint vasa mortuo polluta, Homo qui tetigerit vasa mortuo polluta, Vasa quæ tetigerint hominem qui tetigerit vasa, Tabernaculum, Sepulchrum, Concubitus feminis, Aqua expiando peccato,

Vacca rufa, Juvenci & Hirci qui comburuntur, Hircus emissarius, Gonorrhæicus, Profluvio affecta, Menstruata, Puerpera, Sedile, Lectus, Rem habens cum immundâ, Sanguis immundæ, Saliva immundi, Urina ejusdem, Fluxus gonorrhæici, Concubitus feminis ipsius, Leprosus diebus quibus seclusus manet, Leprosus diebus quibus absolutè pronuntiatus fuerit immundus, vestis plagâ affecta, Domus plagâ affecta. Ostensum autem est initio Tractatus Megillab, nullum esse discrimen inter leprosum dubium, & leprosum absolutè sic denunciatum quod ad pollutionem. Porro scias nomen Vasorum competere octo speciebus, viz. vestibus, cilicio, vasis testaceis, vasis coriaceis, vasis ex osse, è vitro, è metallo, è ligno confectis. Sportæ autem & ejusmodi vasa è viminibus, palmarum foliis, juncis, palmarum furculis, arundine, &c. contexta, omnia in vasorum ligneorum numero censentur, prout hoc ipso Tractatu docebitur. Expressè autem in lege asseritur omnes has species pollutioni obnoxias esse, exceptis tantùm vasis vitreis, quæ quod pollutioni obnoxia censeantur, ex decreto Magistrorum est. Verba enim Gemaræ sunt, Josi filius Jozereï vir Zeredæ, & Joseph filius Juchanani vir Hierosolymitanus decreverunt vasa vitrea pollutionem recipere. Et in Tosepht Tractatus Celim dixerunt, Vasa vitrea ob verba Scribarum, reliqua autem vasa ex Legis [sententia] polluuntur. Dixit Dominus, De omni vase ligneo, aut veste, aut pelle, aut cilicio. Cilicium autem est illud quod contextitur è pilis, sive subtilius, sive crassius fuerit, instar ejus ex quo conficiuntur sacci, cùm universim vocetur Saccus: Vestes autem sunt quæ ex aliis rebus quam pilis contexta, veluti lino, lanâ, serico, gossypio, &c. quia & filtra etiã inter vestes censentur: Ita expressè dicitur in Tosepht, Qui fecerit indusium è filtro, si tres [palmas] latum ac totidem longum fuerit, &c. hæc autem mensura est quâ vestis pollutioni obnoxia redditur, prout Cap. 27. hujus Tract. ostendetur, & in Siphra [aut vestis] (inquit) ad includendum filtra. De immunditie autem vasis testacei dicit, Et vas Testaceum in quod ceciderit ex iis, &c. De vasis autem è metallo conflatis, veruntamen aurum & argentum, &c. Vasa autem ex osse comprehenduntur sub dicto ipsius, Et omne opus è pilis caprarum, uti ostensuri sumus Cap. 2. hujus Tractatus. Vasa autem vitrea adjuncta sunt testaceis, uti Cap. etiam secundo explicabimus. Porro, omnibus his vasorum generibus [ad] purgationem sufficit aqua conceptaculi, exceptis testaceis. Illis enim non competit alia mundandi ratio quam confractio, adeo ut nullatenus [aquâ] conceptaculi mudentur, atque hoc est quod dixit Dominus, Et ipsum confringetis: dicit etiam, Et omne vas ligni immergetur aquis. Similiter, vasa fusa speciatim appellant [nomine] vasorum è metallo conflatorum, neque in eorum numero censentur vitrea. Omnia item texturâ [confecta] appellant vestes, etiam è pilis contexta. Plerumque autem vasa testacea in numero vasorum non includuntur, quia peculiares sunt ipsis leges, uti dicturi sumus. Reliqua autem vasa, scilicet lignea, quoniam mundatio ipsorum [immersione in] aquæ conceptaculum [peragitur.] Cùm autem audieris ipsos dicentes, Polluit vasa, aut, polluit vestes, scias [illud de quo hoc asserunt] polluere has species omnes exceptis vasis testaceis; illa enim non polluit polluit aliud quid quam pater immunditiei, (uti ostensus sum.) Privatum autem in immunditie ob mortuum, respectu cuius has vasis leges assignavimus, discrimen est. Vas autem testaceum, quomodocunque immunditiam contraxerit à mortuo, fit primum respectu pollutionis, non autem pater, etiamsi vel mortuum ipsum tetigerit, aut in tabernaculo mortui fuerit. Prævit autem nobis Tesiftha textus hac in re, Dixit Dominus, * Et omne vas apertum, super quo non est operculum adjunctum, immundum est. Dixerunt, Ipsum immundum est, at non fit pater immunditiei, ad polluendum. In Sifre autem docetur scripturam loqui de vase testaceo, quod & ostensus sum Capite decimo hujus Tract. Reliqua autem vasa & vestes ea sunt, quæ cum prope admota fuerint homini qui pollutus fuerit mortuo, evadunt ipsa Pater immunditiei, quæque si eorum aliquod ad mortuum propius accesserit, deinde ipsum tetigerit homo, deinde [alia ex ipsis] hominem tetigerint, tria simul Patres fiunt, uti diximus, utque declaraverunt in Sifre, sicut explicaturus sum initio Tract. Oboloth. Porro, scias vasa solum testacea patres immunditiei nunquam evadere, neque ejus quæ est à mortuo, neque alius alicui immunditiei respectu: quod ostensus sum diversis hujus classis locis.

Vasorum autem è metallo peculiaris sunt jura quæ ad reliqua vasa non pertinent: scil. quod immunditie qualicunque polluta, si contracta fuerint, fracturâ istâ mudentur, quod si quis ex iisdem fufis aliud denuò vas conflaverit, ad immunditiam pristinam redeant: quæ etiam Doctorum nostrorum constitutio est; qui quam ob causam illud statuerint ostensuri sumus Capite 11. hujus Tractatus. Dixerunt, Simeon fil. Setachi decrevit vasa è metalis [conflata] immunda fore: scil. ea redire ad immunditiam suam, postquam confrigendo mundata fuerint, donec aqua conceptaculi abluta fuerint; expressè autem dicit Talmud, Immunditiei [genus] sunt à Rabbiniis nostris constitutum. Hoc autem scias velim. Porro, patres isti quos recensuimus omnes à lege sunt, appellaturque quilibet eorum Pater immunditiei à verbis legis; sunt autem & patres immunditiei à Doctoribus nostris [constituti] ultra istos non pauci, quorum unumquemque appellant Patrem immunditiei è verbis Scribarum. Immundities autem, in quibus reperiuntur patres pollutionis è Verbis Scribarum, sex sunt. sc. Immundities mortui, Immundities fluxus, Immundities menstruæ, Immundities puerperæ, Immundities Idoli, & Immundities cadaveris. In Immunditie mortui reperiuntur ex Doctorum sententiâ immunditiei patres septem, sc. nam, Os quantitate grani hordei polluit contactu & gestatu, ut Capite 2. Tract. Oboloth declarabitur, similiter & Terra Ethnicorum, & Ager in quo effossum fuerit aratro sepulchrum polluunt contactu & gestatu, quin & habitaculum Ethnicorum (ut sub fine Tract. Oboloth declaraturi sumus) polluit instar terræ ipsorum, donec pervestigatum fuerit: sanguis etiam commixtus polluit contactu & gestatu & ratione tabernaculi: quid sit autem sanguis commixtionis declarabitur, c. 2: Tract. Oboloth, ut & quid sit Beit Happeares sub finem Oboloth. Atque hæc omnia sunt è decreto

Doctorem nostrorum, qui Cap. 7. Tract. de Nazireatu dixerunt, Os magnitudine grani bordei constitutio est: quod dictum ibi exposuimus. Et in Gemara, Tract. Niddah, Sanguis commixtionis est à Doctoribus nostris. Et in Gemara, Tract. de Sabbato decretum de terra gentium ediderunt. Et in Pesachim [dicunt,] Beith Happares, ex magistrorum sententia est. Hæc autem quatuor Patres sunt: eodémque modo Tabernaculum quod pollutum fuerit sanguine commixto; nec non homo qui aliquo quatuor istorum pollutus fuerit, vasaque quæ eundem tetigerint, paritéque vasa quæ iisdem polluta fuerint, ut & homo qui eadem tetigerit, nec non vasa quæ hominem istum tetigerint: etiam vasa quæ tetigerint vasa iisdem polluta; horum singula Patres sunt ex sententia Scribarum. Immundities fluxûs continet novem Patres. Quod enim in præcedentibus diximus, Non polluit, nec polluitur dum vivit [quicquam] excepto homine, juxta legem [intelligendum] est de solo Israelita, cum Ethnicus nec polluat, nec polluitur ullo immunditiei genere, at ex Rabbino-rum nostrorum sententia statuerunt eos se instar fluxu laborantium habere in omnibus ad ipsos spectantibus. Dixerunt, Israelta polluunt fluxu, Ethnici autem non polluunt fluxu, verùm decreverunt ipsos pro Gonorrhæicis habendos in omni prorsus respectu, uno excepto, scil. concubitu feminis; est enim semen Ethnici absolutè mundum, uti in Gemara, Tract. Niddah, explicatum est: neque de eo decreverunt fore instar concubitûs feminis Gonorrhœâ affecti, quod est Pater immunditiei, qui & contactu & gestatione polluit, uti declarabitur; atque hoc loco dictum est. Fecerunt in eo Magistri nostri discrimen, ne comburemus ob ipsum Terumah, & res sanctas, verùm dignosceretur immunditiem ipsius esse ex decreto Doctorem nostrorum: ideòque non polluit concubitus feminis ipsius; si enim re verâ Gonorrhæicus esset ex lege, pollueret concubitus feminis ipsius & contactu & gestatu; at ostensum est Ethnicos quoslibet mares & fœminas, minores & grandiores, Gonorrhæicos censeret respectu omnium ad ipsos spectantium, præterquam respectu concubitûs feminis ipsorum, quemadmodum explicavimus, neque interest revera fuerit quis gonorrhœâ, vel leprâ affectus, an ab his morbis liber; utcunque enim Gonorrhæicus est ex decreto Magistrorum nostrorum. Cum autem dico, Minores ipsorum, intelligo masculum die uno vel amplius novenni majorem, fœminam verò diebus uno vel pluribus trienni, non istâ [ætate] minorem, sicut explicatum est in Gemara Avodah Zarab. Erunt ergo Ethnicus, & ipsius fluxus, saliva, urina, vehiculum, stratum, sanguis alienigenæ, & rem habens cum Ethnica; horum, inquam, octo singula, Pater immunditiei, ex sententia Scribarum. Quinimo Gonorrhœâ affectus, profluvio laborans, Menstruata, Puerpera, Leprosus, singuli lectum & cathedram polluunt, ex sententia legis, uti in superioribus diximus. Mortuus autem non polluit lectum: verba autem Siphra sunt, Gonorrhœâ laborans afficit lectum, at mortuus non afficit lectum: verùm dixerunt [Magistri] prædictos istos ubi mortui fuerint, & lectum & cathedram, eo modo quo dum in vivis essent, polluere, cujus causam ad finem Tract. Niddah in hac classe assignaturi sumus, ad dictum ipsorum, Gonorrhæicus, profluvio affecta, menstruata, puerpera, & Leprosus, qui mortui fuerint, polluunt gestatu, donec contabuerit caro ipsorum. Estque hoc à Magistris [statutum.]

tutum.] In Sifra [dicitur] Gonorrhœa affectus, qui mortuus fuerit, polluit gestatu, donec contabuerit caro ipsius, ex verbis Scribarum. Et in Tosephet Tract. Niddah dixerunt, Gonorrhœa affectus, profluvio laborans, menstruata, puerpera, & leprosus, qui mortui fuerint, si gestentur, polluant, donec contabuerit caro [ipforum,] non tamen polluant nisi maximâ ipforum parte, neque aliunde est pollutio ipforum quam à verbis Scribarum; scil. quod polluant stratum suum juxta verba Scribarum, qui illud adjunxerunt strato Gonorrhœa affecti. Sensus autem ejus quod dicunt [gestatu] est, quod ubi major ipforum pars super lectum gestata fuerit, polluat lectus, etiamsi inter corpus Gonorrhœici ipsius mortui, & lectum fuerit lapis qui ea separet, eo modo quo vivus eundem pollueret, uti hoc Cap. declarabitur: at non ita se habet omnis mortuus. Hæc autem fusiùs declaraturi, atque explicaturi sumus loco suo. Immundities autem Menstruatæ novem etiam continet Patres, à Doctoribus constitutos. Nam, ut docebitur in Tract. Niddah, decretum est de Menstruata fore ipsam immundam retrò [numerando] de tempore in tempus, ab exploratione ad explorationem, eo modo qui ibi declarabitur. Dixeruntque, A tempore in tempus, juxta Doctorum [constitutionem:] Nec non de eadem dixerunt, pollui ipsam stratum & cathedram retrò numerando, at non pollui illum qui cum ipsa rem habuerit. Quin & maculas ignotas statuerunt pro sanguine menstruata [habendas,] ex sententia Magistrorum, uti ibi explicabitur; suntque verba Gemaræ, Quæ videt maculam polluit retrò [numerando] stratum & cathedram; polluitque concumbentem in futurum. Eodem modo est etiam indusium immundum: tempus autem istud, quo retrò [numerando] polluit, definientes, dixerunt, Donec dixerit, Exploravi indusium istud, neque fuit in ipso macula, vel ad tempus lotionis. Pariterque verba quæ sequuntur in Gemara, Tract. Niddah, consuetudines esse à Magistris, & mulierem quæ ubi advenerit consuetudo sua non exploraverit se, deinde post aliquot dies exploratam se pollutam invenerit, pro menstruata habendam à tempore consuetudinis suæ ad illud usque tempus: Atque hoc est quod dicitur, Immunda retrò [numerando.] Ibidem dictum est, Gonorrhœa laborans, profluvio affecta, observans diem juxta diem, puerpera, omnes de tempore in tempus polluant: ac notum est tempus illud in quo fuerit pollutio juxta [sententiam] Doctorum retrò censerit. Quod ad omnem verò menstruatam, aut videntem maculam, aut quæ non exploraverit seipsam tempore consuetudinis suæ, cum strato & cathedra, quæ polluerit isto temporis spatio, Patres erunt immunditiei ex decreto Magistrorum; ut & qui rem habuerit cum ea quæ viderit maculam, in futurum: sic & ipse saliva & urina isto temporis spatio, & sanguis qui in indusio cernitur, quem non est certum sanguinem esse menstruum. Sunt hæc omnia Patres ex instituto Magistrorum. In immunditie pariter puerperæ tot sunt Patres ex instituto Magistrorum, quot in Menstruata: i. e. eadem est puerperæ & menstruata ratio, uti in præcedentibus dictum est, & in Gemara Niddah dixerunt, Si emisit fœtus manum suam, deinde retraxerit, mater ipsius immunda est ob partum: Hoc autem declararunt esse ex constitutione Magistrorum, ideoque neque ipsi dies purificationis [à tempore isto] numerabimus, ac si diceremus, cum videret sanguinem, sanguis mundus fuit, verum illud quod per omnia gravissimum est ipsam observare cogemus. Dixerunt, Curā angitur, neque concedimus ipsi dies purificationis: Immunda ergo erit quatuordecim diebus, instar ejus quæ fœminam peperit, ad aggravandum ex instituto Magistrorum. Quod si sanguinem viderit post illud temporis spatium, sanguinem illum mundum haud censebimus, cum nullus fuerit partus, verum sanguis menstruus habebitur, aut sanguis fluxus [cujusdam] pro temporis quo ipsum viderit ratione, uti in Tract. Niddab ostensuri sumus. Hic autem idem faciamus in enumerandis Patribus ex instituto Magistrorum, quod fecimus in enumerandis Patribus lege [constitutis] scil. ut stratum immundi pro unico habeamus, quod comprehendat stratum Ethnicî, stratum Gonorrhœâ affecti qui mortuus fuerit, stratum menstruatæ retrò numerantis, stratum ejus quæ maculam viderit retrò numerando, stratum ejus quæ manum pepererit, stratum ejus quæ se non exploraverit, tempore consuetudinis. Eodemque modo faciemus & in sella, & in saliva, & urina, quo in jam numeratis, cum species immunditiei una sit; atque hæc sint quasi individua ipsius, Pater autem sit Stratum, ex instituto Magistrorum. Similiter & qui rem habuerit cum immunda, ex sententia Magistrorum, comprehendet rem habentem cum alienigena, & cum ea quæ maculam viderit, eaque ex cujus utero manus exerta est. Immundities autem ab Idolo [contracta] quatuor continet Patres, quorum omnium immundities est ex decreto Magistrorum. In Gemara Sabbathi dixerunt, Immundities ab Idolo est à Magistris; subindicatur tamen in ipso legis textu ubi dicit Jacobus pater noster, Amovete Deos extraneos qui sunt in medio vestri, & mundate vos & mutate vestimenta vestra. Primus autem quatuor patrum istorum est ipsum idolum; quoniam Idolum ipsum polluit instar reptilis; i. e. polluit & homines & vasa contactu, & vasa testacea aëre, non autem polluit gestatu; atque hoc eâ conditione ut sit quantitate olivæ, uti ostendimus Cap. 3. Tract. Avodab Zarab. Nam si minus sit quantitate olivæ Idolum illud, haudquaquam polluit. Quod si fumatur de corpore Idoli pars quanta fieri potest maxima, non polluit; Idolum enim non polluit membratim, verum integrum polluit, cum magnitudine æquet olivam vel superet. Pater secundus, quæcunque Idolo inserviant, quorum quicquid est instar olivæ polluit pollutione reptilis: imò si abscissum ab ipsis fuerit quid quod magnitudine olivam æquet, & homines & vasa contactu polluit; atque hoc aggravandi [causa statuitur] de ipsis quæ cultui ipsius destinantur. Expresse enim dicit Mishna de eidōlaïm, Lapidēs, ligna, & pulvis ipsius polluunt instar reptilis, sicut dictum est, Detestando detestaberis illud, & abominando abominaberis illud. Et in additamento ad Tr. Zabim, Si quis in eidōlaïm Caput & maximam corporis partem immiserit, immundus fit, vas testaceum, cujus aër collocatus fuerit intra eidōlaïm, immundum est; sedilia & cathedræ quorum maxima pars ingressa fuerit eidōlaïm immunda sunt. Quo dicto vult hominem istum aut vas, cum eidōlaïm ingressum fuerit, fieri instar tangentis reptile. Pater tertius est Idolo oblatum. Ostensum enim est initio Gemaræ, Tract. Cholin, Oblationem Idoli, illud scil. quod ipsi offertur nomine cultus, polluere & contactu,

& gestatu, instar cadaveris, uti Cap. 3. Tract. Abodab Zarab docuimus. Eodémque modo ostensum est in eodem Tract. vinum libaminis polluere instar oblationis Idololatricæ: éstque ipsum Pater quartus, quod probârunt dicto isto Domini, ^b Qui adipem victimarum ipsorum comedunt, vinum libaminis ipsorum bibunt. Quin & dixerunt, Tria sunt vina, vinum quod libatum fuerit Idolo, polluit pollutione gravi, si quantum olivæ fuerit. Sensus autem [verborum] pollutione gravi, est quod & homines polluat & vasa; atque hoc est quod ubique appellant Immunditiem gravem; quod autem esculenta & liquores tantum polluit, vocant Immunditiem levem. Cùm autem hîc dicam, Vinum libaminis Patrem esse immunditiei, intelligo vinum quod certò nobis constat Idolo libatum fuisse: Hoc enim est quod polluit instar cadaveris; Vinum autem simpliciter non polluit nisi immunditie levi, uti ibi ostendimus, ipsum nempe ita se habere ut liquores immundi. Immundities autem cadaveris duos continet Patres ex sententia Scribarum, quorum unus est [Animal] ab alienigenâ mactatum, quod pro cadavere [habetur] ac polluit gestatu, etiam si haud oblatum fuerit Idolo; nec tamen vetitum est ex ipso utilitatem capere perinde ac ex Oblatione Idololatrica; quoniam ipsi adjunctum est, at non ipsi simile, uti in Gemara, Tractatu Cholim, docebimus. Dixerunt, Gentes quæ extra terram [Isr.] sunt non sunt cultores Idolorum, sed opera patrum ipsorum sunt in manibus ipsorum, ideoque licet utilitatem capere ex re ab alienigenâ jugulata. Pater secundus est cadaver avis, ac speciatim mundæ; quoniam cadaveri avis sive immundæ sive mundæ non inest immundities ex lege manifesta, ideòque illud inter patres à Magistris constitutos numerabimus: Mihi tamen interim constat illud Patrem esse ex legis sententia, licet non sit expressa ejus in lege mentio, cujus indicium est quod ob ipsum excidii [pœnâ] teneatur qui Sanctuarium ingreditur; ac confirmatur hoc dicto illo Domini, ^c Cadaver & raptum non comedet, ut polluat se in eo: quemadmodum ostensuri sumus Tr. Taboroth. Homines autem & vasa polluit eo quo descripturus sum modo, sc. quod tactu omnino non polluat, ne quidem ex Scribarum sententia, sed polluat quantitate olivæ in œsophagum demissum, adeo ut si quis de ipso quantum fuerit olivæ deglutierit, statim inter deglutendum immundus fiat, ac vestes polluat instar ejus qui patrem immunditiei tetigerit, eodémque modo & cætera vasa ipso deglutitionis momento, contactu polluat; at nec homines, nec vasa testacea, ne ipso quidem deglutitionis momento, instar cujusvis tangentis Patrem aliquem immunditiei qui non polluit aut homines aut vasa testacea vel ipso contactûs tempore; uti sub finem Tr. Zabim explicabitur. Verba autem libri Sifræ de eo qui deglutierit cadaver volucris mundi hæc sunt, Dicunt, Polluit cætera vasa sicut vestes, Annon [ergò] polluit hominem & vasa testacea? dicere vult, Vestem, vestem polluit, at nec hominem polluit nec vas testaceum, quasi ergò dixeris, si dum comederit cadaver volucris mundi, manum alteram furno compositam [habeat] alteram socio suo, utrique mundi sunt; hæc est ratio deglutientis, atque hoc modo pro Patre immunditiei habetur: at respectu contactûs non aliter se habet ac cibi polluti, idque eâ conditione ut ipsum edere apud se statuât, uti initio

tionum numero [certo] complexi sumus, atque ostendimus quot immunditiei speciebus nomen hoc competat, & quænam ipsarum à verbis Legis dependeant, quænam à verbis Scribarum. Porro, scias quodcunque pollutum fuerit Patre aliquo immunditiei, sive hominem, sive vasa, sive edulia, sive liquores, appellari primum [respectu] pollutionis; quodque primo isti conjunctum fuerit, secundum; quod secundo, tertium; quod tertio, quartum: atque iste postremus est in immunditie gradus. Cap. autem secundo Tr. Taboroth dixerunt, Primum in profanis immundum est, & polluit: Secundum illegitimum est, at non polluit. Pri-imum & secundum in Terumah immunda sunt, & polluunt. Tertium illegitimum est, at non polluit.
Primum, secundum & tertium in sacris immunda sunt, & polluunt. Quartum illegitimum est, at non polluit. Constat ergo tibi quartum ultimum luere:

luere: Ad quodcunque enim pertigerit immundities ita ut immundum fiat, nec tamen aliud polluat, dicitur ipsum Pasul [Illegitimum;] ideoque dicunt de illo qui comederit edulia immunda, aut biberit liquores immundos, Impurum esse corpus ipsius, quoniam alia non polluit; vocat etiam primum, Valed, prolem immunditiei; secundum prolem prolis immunditiei: nominat autem Misbna quicquid est præter Patrem, Valed, prolem immunditiei, primum fuerit, an secundum. Quin & manifestum est quod sicut dicas, Hoc est Pater ex Lege, hoc ex verbis Scribarum; ita dicere possis, Hoc est proles ex Lege; hoc autem à Magistris. Est etiam è fundamentis quæ tenere debes quod dicunt in Tosepbet Tr. Taboroth, Sicut primum efficit secundum, secundum autem tertium; ita dubium primi efficit dubium secundi, & dubium secundi dubium tertii. Sunt præterea [alia] multa à Magistris constituta, verum quæ non sunt Patres, sed quæ in fundamentali Magistrorum constitutione haberi voluerunt prolem immunditiei, ut cum dicant, Decreverunt discipuli Sammaei & Hillelelis manus immundas fore, at statuerunt eas perpetuo secundas esse, quemadmodum declaraturi sumus in Tract. Jadaim: Pariterque statuerunt hominem qui comederit cibum [qui] primus est vel secundus, aut biberit liquores immundos, aut reliqua quæ in fine Tract. Zabim recensentur, fore secundum ad polluendum, prout ibi ostensuri sumus. Quin & à Magistris est quod cibi polluant cibos; quoniam juxta Legem cibus non polluat cibum. Dixit Deus, Et cum ceciderit de cadavere ipsorum super omne semen, &c. immundum est. Dixerunt, Ipsum immundum est, at non aliud ita se habere facit. De immunditie autem liquorum discrepatur, cum è sapientibus sint qui dicant ipsam eorum immunditiem, & quod immunditiei obnoxii sint, à Lege esse; at quod liquores edulia polluant, à Magistris; alii autem afferant etiam hoc quod polluant cibos, esse à Lege; at quod liquores immundi polluant vasa, adeo ut in secundo sint [immunditiei] ordine, hoc est à Magistris, communi omnium sententiâ. Cujus discrepantiæ causas explicaturi sumus quarto Cap. Tract. Taboroth, & ultimo Zabim. Verba etiam Gemara Niddah sunt, Ex Lege nec cibus, nec liquor polluit vas; at à Magistris decretum est de liquore Gonorrhæici & fluxu affectæ. De liquoribus qui dispositi sunt ad recipiendam immunditiem decreverunt Magistri: de cibis qui non sunt dispositi ad recipiendam immunditiem nihil statuerunt. Sensus autem ejus (quod dicunt) dispositi sunt, est, comparatas esse ipsis causas ad recipiendam immunditiem, atque hoc est quod dicunt quod non quæsiuerint [ea] disponere. Constat ergo tibi, multa esse quæ proles immunditiei sunt ex auctoritate Magistrorum, etiamsi Pater ipse ad quem referuntur proles sit ex Lege. Atque hoc est de quo te his verbis monitum voluimus. Hoc in genere est, quod si conjunctum fuerit reptile pani, panis iste primus ex Lege evadat, uti ostensum est; at cum propè accesserit panis iste ad carnem, e. g. futura sit caro ista secunda ex [instituto] Magistrorum; quoniam juxta Legem cibus non polluat cibum; eodemque modo ubi comederit quis panem istum immundum, ipse secundus ex [sententia] Magistrorum evadit;

atque ex hoc conjecturam sumas, ad reliqua quæ commemoravimus intelligenda. Lex autem omnibus immunditiei Patribus communis est, quod homines & vasa polluant, cum nulla proles vel homines vel vasa, sed cibos tantum & liquores polluat. Sic expresse dicitur in Gemara, initio Cap. Kama, Patrem polluere hominem & vasa; prolem cibos & liquores polluere, at non hominem & vasa: Quamto magis ergo Pater polluet cibos & liquores? Verum liquores immundi privatim pollunt vasa, at non homines, etiam si proles immunditiei fuerint, ut in Tr. Parah hujus ordinis explicabitur, ubi dictum est, Nulla immunditiei proles polluit vasa, excepto liquore. Sciendumque est esse propositionem istam convertibilem, sc. Omnis Pater immunditiei polluit hominem & vestes, & Omne quod polluit homines & vestes est Pater immunditiei. Hoc autem fac memoriâ teneas, cum sit magni momenti fundamentum, quod elicatum est demum post inquisitionem in omnes immunditiei species factam. Cum autem jam palam & manifestum fuerit nullam immunditiei prolem polluere vasa, excepto liquore, qui [solus] polluit vasa, idque ex instituto Magistrorum, uti ostendimus; pariterque ex Lege cibum non polluere cibum, neque unquam tertium esse nisi ex præscripto Magistrorum, prout necessariò [sequitur] cum ubi Pater pollueret vasa, aut hominem, evadat vas illud aut homo iste primum, hoc autem primum cibos tantum & liquores (uti præmissum est) polluat, sitque cibis iste secundus ex Lege etiam, neque aliud polluat quod illud tertium efficiat nisi ex instituto Magistrorum, (uti diximus,) idque eâ conditione ut sit Terumah, non autem profanum quid, cum non sit in profanis ultra secundum [ad polluendum,] uti jam dictum, juxta illud quod explicavimus, C. 5. Tr. Sotah; manifestum est etiam primum & secundum aliàs esse ex Lege, aliàs à Magistris, eo quo ostensum est modo; tertium autem & quartum semper esse à Magistris, etiam si Pater à quo originem ducunt sit ex [præscripto] Legis, uti ostendimus: ideoque dixerunt, Futurum est sæculum quod mundam carnem pronuntiabit placentiam tertiam cui non est ex Lege fundamentum. Ex eorum etiam numero quæ prolem immunditiei statuerunt, in ipso decreti fundamento est Caro desiderii. Siquidem in Tosephet Niddab declaratum est statuisse ipsos Carnem desiderii perpetuò tertium fore ad polluendum, licet non omnino polluta fuerit. Ibidem dictum est, statuisse ipsos ut manus polluat, deinde statuisse etiam ut polluat contactu, deinde ut instar cadaveris ipsius polluat gestatu, deinde dixerunt, summam dicendorum esse, quod sit munda respectu Terumæ, i. quod ipsam non polluat, cum polluat quod sanctum est, quæ tertii in polluendo est ratio, uti diximus. Est autem in immunditie liquorum magni momenti fundamentum, cujus oportet hoc loco mentionem facere, ubi præmiserim, liquores qui recipiant immunditiam atque in se polluantur, septem tantum esse, eos nempe qui cibos ad immunditiam disponant, nempe Aquam, Rorem, Oleum, Vinum, Mel (apum privatim,) Lac, Sanguinem; quolibet autem alios liquores, veluti Mustum malogranatorum, & pyrorum, Aquam limoniorum, & cucurbitarum, bitarum, mel è calamis expressum, oleum amygdalorum, & sesaminum cum aquis, mellibus, oleisque aliis, immunditiem omnino non recipere, nec quidem ex instituto Scribarum, uti expresse Mishnah C. 11. Tr. Teramoth, quemadmodum ibi explicavimus. Cùmque pollutum fuerit horum aliquod vel à Patre vel prole immunditiei, fit liquor iste primum ad polluendum, at non secundum, etiamsi à prole immunditiei pollutum fuerit; similiter si appropinquerit liquor iste alii liquori, alter etiam ille primus evadet. Exempli loco, ubi tetigerit homo reptile, erit ipse sine dubio primum quid ad polluendum; quod si tetigerit homo iste, e. g. oleum, illud polluet; & si tetigerit oleum istud mel apum, illud polluet etsi non fuerit ei commistum; & si deinde tetigerit mel istud aquam, eam polluet; eruntque oleum, mel, aqua, singula primum ad polluendum; atque ita si ordine procedatur usque ad mille liquores, omnes erunt primi ordinis, ut si, e. g. admoveatur oleum melli, & mel oleo alteri, & oleum istud secundum lacti, & lac rursus melli, eodémque modo in infinitum, omnia hæc prima censentur. Ita in Tosephteb Tebul Yom dixerunt, Eodem modo se habent liquor pollutus à Patre immunditiei, & liquor pollutus à prole immunditiei: Semper enim principium est quod sibi adjunctum polluit, ut & illud aliud sibi adjunctum polluat, si vel centum fuerint, exceptis liquoribus, eodem die loti, cùm ipsi illegitimi sint, at non polluant. Jam autem à nobis dictum est, illud quod non immundum reddit aliud, appellari Pasul [illegitimum,] atque ostendetur in Tract. Tebul Yom, טוב Tebul Yom (quo nomine indicatur ille qui cùm pollutus fuerit abluerit se ante occasum solis) eo die quo solis occasum manet esse instar secundi; & si conjunctus fuerit cibo de Terumah [sumpto] eum illegitimum reddere, cùm evadat tertius; tertium autem in Terumah fit illegitimum, ut jam dictum. Eodémque modo quando conjunctus fuerit eo die ablutus liquori Terumæ, ipsum illegitimum efficit, ita ut fiat tertius, ut patet è C. 1. Tract. Pesachim, ubi dicunt Oleum quod illegitimum factum est ab eo die abluto. Quod si liquor communis fuerit, haudquaquam polluit ipsum eo die ablutus, quoniam tertium in profanis planè mundum est. Porro occurret in Tr. Tebul Yom hujus classis, dictum his verbis conceptum, Olla liquore plena quam tetigerit eo die abluta, si liquor ejus Trumah fuerit, liquor illegitimus fit; at olla munda est: Quod si liquor communis fuerit, munda erunt omnia. Et in Tosephteb Tebul Yom dixerunt, Eo die lotus non polluit liquorem communem, at illegitima reddit edulia Terumæ. Ibidem etiam dictum est, In matra quæ eo die lota est depsunt massam atque inde placentam abscindunt, quoniam tertii gradus est; tertium autem in profanis mundum est. Hæc autem Lex propria est eo die loti, atque inde est quod liquorem Terumæ tertium efficiat, quod revera ipse secundus non sit utpote jam mundus, ideoque illegitimum reddit liquorem Terumæ. Et in Tosephteb Tabaroth dixerunt de Tebul Yom, ipsum, sicut illegitimos reddit liquores Terumæ & cibos Terumæ, ita illegitimos reddere rerum sanctarum & cibos & liquores. Ibi etiam dicitur, Perinde est fit eo die lotus ab immunditie gravior an ab immunditie levi: etiam Tebul Yom, vel ob Gonorrhæicum vel fluxu affectam, aliásque pollutiones Lege consti-tutas, eodem modo se habet ac Tebul Yom ob reptile. Atque hæc ratio est ר"ט Tebul Yom: at quod reverà secundum est quoscunque tetigerit liquores, ipsos primarios ad polluendum efficit.

Atque hoc est quod volunt cum dicunt in Tract.
Parab, Quodcunque illegitimam reddit Terumam, polluit liquores, adeo ut sint principium, excepto eo die loto, quod etiam si Terumam illegitimam reddat, non tamen efficit ipsam principium, sicut ostendimus; & in Gemara Tract. Pesachim dixerunt, Quid docet de liquoribus pollutis? In pollutis à Patre immunditiei etiam primum & secundum principium sunt: Etiam si fuerit secundum illud secundum in profanis, & liquor fuerit liquor communis, erit tamen principium, quemadmodum ostensum est, c. 2. Tr. Tabaroth, ubi dicunt, Secundum in communibus polluit liquores communes, tertium in Te-rumah polluit liquores rerum sacrarum; idq; quod tertium non reperiatur nisi in Terumah, uti ostendimus. Cum igitur jam manifestum sit tertium in Terumah illegitimum esse, at non polluere, ideo non polluit liquorem Terumæ. At tertium in [rebus] sanctis immundum est & polluit; ideoque si coniunctus fuerit cibus iste qui tertii est ordinis re-spectu Terumæ, cum liquore sacro, polluit ipsum;
nec tamen erit liquor iste quartus, sed illegitimus tantum. Erit tamen principium, uti ibi declarabitur. Quod ergo ex his elicatur quoad immunditiam liquorum, est, quod & Pater immun-ditiei, & primum & secundum liquores principi-um reddant, etiam si fuerit liquor iste communis, & tertium Terumæ vel rerum sanctarum, cum tetigerit liquores rerum sanctarum, eos polluere, adeo ut fiant etiam principium respectu rerum sanctarum, atq; istum cibum qui tertius est, non illegitimum reddere liquorem Terumæ, quanto minus liquorem communem? Et cibus qui quartus est in sanctis non polluere liquorem sanctum, quanto minus alium?
solumque eo die ablutum efficere ut sit liquor Te- rumæ tertius ad polluendum, pariterque ut sit liquor sanctus illegitimus instar quarti ad polluendum; neque unquam reperies liquorem se ut or-dine tertium & quartum, nisi hac tantum ratione, habere. Mihi autem valde persuasum est eum qui nondum sacrificium expiatorium obtulerit, idem etiam facere, cum & ipse res sacras contactu illegiti-mas reddat, eodem modo quo eo die ablutus, uti ostendimus Cap. 12. Zebachim. Constat autem tibi cibus pollutum, cibus alterum polluere ex sententia Magistrorum, uti diximus, pariterque ci-bos immundos polluere liquores, & efficere ut sint principium pollutionis, sicut ostensum est. Idem est autem cum dicunt Principium & Primum.
Principium autem appellant quod iisdem legibus
teneatur, ac primum, cum non sit revera Primum, (Quod autem primum vocant, illud primum est re-spectu habito ad Patrem inter numerandum,) quasi dicerent, Liquores isti polluant pollutione prima-riâ, etiam si non sint primi si initium numerandi à Patre sumatur. Atque ita liquores immundi pol-luunt cibos. Ac etiam si liquores isti polluti fuerint à secundo, deinde conjuncti fuerint cibo profano, fit cibus iste secundus ad polluendum, quoniam liquores sunt principium. Porro in Tosepbet
Tr. Tebul Yom dixerunt, Cibi polluant liquores ut
faciant ipsos principium, & liquores polluant cibos ut faciant ipsos secundum. Et in Tosepbet Tract. Parab, Secundum polluere liquores, ut faciat eos prin-

principium; & liquores polluerent cibos, ut faciant ipsos secundos. Atque ita liquores immundi polluant vasa omnimoda, hæc tamen conditione ut sint liquores isti immundi ob reptile, i. e. ut immunditiam suam acceptum ferant Patri immunditiei, ut, e. g. polluerit eos Pater aut primum aut secundum, uti jam dictum; non ut polluti fuerint à manibus immundis, quoniam etiam manus immundæ polluant liquores, ut diversis locis Tract. Zabim & Tebul Yom, & Yadaim constabit. Atque hoc est quod volunt cum dicunt in Talmude, Immunda esse ob reptile: ubicunque tandem occurrerit hæc formula, i. e. istos liquores immundos non fuisse pollutos à manibus immundis, quæ semper sunt secundæ, ut loco suo declarabitur. Et in Gemara Chagigæ Hierosolymitana, dixerunt, Perpicuum est liquorem non fieri immundum à manu ad polluendum poculum. At liquores qui polluti sunt à manibus pollunt cibos Terumæ tantum, qui cibi sunt secundarii, uti ostendimus sub finem Tr. Zabim. Quin & declaratum est in Tosepheet Parab, liquores quos polluerint cibi immundi, nec non liquores quos polluerint vasa, etiam si polluta fuerint à parte exteriori vasorum, fieri principium, & polluerent vasa alia. Sit ergo hoc tibi notum. Cibi verò immundi vasa nullatenus polluant, uti in superioribus à nobis dictum est. Estque disertus Gemara Pesachim textus, Cibus non polluit vas, nec vas polluit vas. Et in Tosepheet Tract. Tebul Yom, Gravitatis gradus in vasis est, quod liquores polluant vasa testacea ex parte concavi ipsius, quod in cibus non fit. At nec cibi polluti, nec liquores polluant hominem qui ipsos tetigerit, ultra quod si manibus tantum ipsius adjuncti fuerint, manus ipsius immundæ fiant. Si autem ambabus simul manibus contrectaverit cibos aut liquores, utraque polluantur; quod si iis unam admoverit solam, una tantum illa polluitur, uti declaratum est in Tr. Chagigæ, & ut declaraturi fumus loco suo Tract. Parab, & Yadaim. Quod si comederet quis è cibus immundis quantum est dimidium Peres, aut biberit ex liquoribus immundis quartam partem Log, eo facto corpus ipsius impurum evadit, fitque instar secundi ad polluendum, adeo ut si conjunctus fuerit Terumæ, ipsam etiam impuram reddat. Notum autem est ex eo quod jam supra dictum est, fluxum, salivam, concubitus feminis, & urinam Gonorrhæici omnia Patres immunditiei censerent; suntque omnia liquores immundi, quibus appellatio ea communis est, cum sint species quædam aquarum, uti sub finem Tr. Macshirin docebitur. Atque hæc sunt quæ vocat Talmud liquorem fluxu affecti; quodque his in quovis immundo respondet appellatur liquor immundi istius. Si enim in polluto à mortuo fuerit, vocatur liquor polluti à mortuo; si in leproso, liquor lepræ affecti, & sic in eodem die abluto, appellant ipsum liquorem eo die abluti: eodem modo & sanguis menstruatus & sanguis mortui Patres sunt immunditiei, suntque & illi liquores. Est enim sanguis è numero septem liquorum. At Gonorrhæicus & fluxus affecta cæterique Patres immunditiei quicunque, si tetigerint liquores, sunt isti liquores primi ad polluendum, non Patres, appellanturque principium, disertè asserente Baraitâ, ubi dicunt, Eodem modo se habent liquor qui pollutus est à Patre immunditiei

les autem, uti jam diximus, cibos quidem &

ditiei & liquor qui pollutus est à prole immunditiei, ecce enim principium est. Constat autem discrepantiam esse inter ipsius Gonorrhœici & eos, quos tetigerit, liquores. Atque hoc est quod dicit Mishna C. secundo Tr. Tebul Yom, In omnibus immundis, tam levioribus quàm gravioribus, liquores ab ipsis fluentes sunt instar liquorum quos tetigerint, cum utrique sint principium, Excepto liquore qui sit Pater immunditiei: Quod perinde est ac si diceret, Excepto immundo cujus liquor est Pater immunditiei; siquidem aliqui liquores ex ipso profuentes, nempe saliva, urina, & concubitus feminis ipsius, non ita se habent ac alii quos tetigerit liquores, illi enim sunt Patres pollutionis, hi verò quos tetigerit, principium. Cum autem dicit Mishnah, [sive levioribus, sive gravioribus] vult etiam vel illum qui comederit cibos immundos & biberit liquores immundos qui pollutus est pollutione levi, cum immundities ciborum & liquorum appelletur immundities levis, sicut ostendimus; siquidem liquores qui ab ipso profluunt & liquores quos tetigerit utrique principium sunt [pollutionis.] Quod autem dicit Tosifphta [Gravitas in aquis, quæ non est in liquoribus] inde est quòd aquæ fiant Patres immunditiei, ad pollendum hominem & vestimenta, quod non ita se habet in liquoribus; non enim vult haud omnino reperiri Patrem immunditiei in liquoribus, aquâ solâ exceptâ, cum etiam sanguis sit Pater immunditiei, uti ostendimus; sed hoc vult, non reperiri liquores quibus postquam mundi fuerint accidat aliquid quod eos reddat Patres immunditiei, exceptâ aquâ solâ; nempe cum aqua expiandis peccatis destinata evadat. Ideòque dixit, aquas fieri Patrem immunditiei, cibos vero immundos nunquam, quoniam cum Patri admoti fuerint, evadunt primi: Ita in Tosepbet Tract. Tebul Yom dixerunt, gravitatis est [inquiunt, gradus] in liquoribus qui non in cibis. Sc. quòd liquores fiant Pater immunditiei ad pollendum tam hominem quàm vestes, & vasa immersionis à parte ipsorum exteriori, & vasa testacea à concavo ipsorum, quod in cibis haud ita se habet. Jam autem diximus vasa testacea nunquam fieri Patrem immunditiei. Vasa enim quæ fiunt Patres, ea sunt quæ immunditiem à mortuo, strato, sedili, vehiculo, aut lepra contrahunt. Vasa autem testacea non sunt idonea strato aut vehiculo, uti declarabitur Tract. Zabim, nec iisdem legibus pollutionis à mortuo [contrahendæ] obnoxia sunt, quibus reliqua vasa, uti jam explicatum est. Inter ea autem quorum hîc facienda mentio, est quod dicunt in Tosepbet Celim, Non polluitur vas testaceum nisi à patre immunditiei & liquoribus, & quæ semper proles immunditiei. Dixerunt etiam, Quodcunque polluit hominem, polluit vasa testacea; & quicquid non polluit hominem, neque vasa testacea polluit, exceptis liquoribus. Liquores enim immundi polluant vasa testacea, uti dictum, etiâmsi hominem contactu non polluant, nisi quòd iisdem epotis polluantur ex præscripto Magistrorum, ut dictum. Dixerunt etiam, Non contingit pollutio vasi testaceo, nisi ex [parte] concavi ipsius, & cum ferat Gonorrhœicum, neque alia præter cibos, liquores, & manus polluit, quoniam perpetuò proles immunditiei est: proliquo, non autem homines & vasa polluit. Ex his his autem omnibus quæ jam explicata sunt constat, liquores immundos aliàs esse Patrem pollutionis, aliàs Primum ad polluendum, atque esse ex ipsis quæ sint gradu tertii & quarti, viz. eum solum liquorem qui tetigerit eo die ablutum, uti in superioribus ostensum; at nunquam esse in liquoribus secundum. Quoniam nempe Pater & primum, & secundum, eos principium constituunt, tertium verò non omnino polluit liquores, nisi sit liquor aliquis sanctus, qui etiam liquor sit principium respectu rei sacræ. Expresè autem dicitur in Tosepbet Tract. Taboroth, Non est liquor, qui tetigerit tertium, immundus, excepto sacro. Cùm autem pollutus fuerit liquor, sacer fit principium respectu [rei] sacræ, ideòque expresè dicit Tosiphta, Liquores polluunt duo, & illegitimum reddunt unum in sacris. Quoniam scilicet principium est quod cùm appropinquaverit cibo fit ipse secundus. Secundum autem polluit tertium, & tertium illegitimum reddit quartum; uti jam pro fundamento positum, viz. primum, secundum, & tertium in sanctis immunda esse & polluere; quartum illegitimum esse, at non polluere. Omnis autem liquor immundus aut Pater est aut primus, nam liquor eo die loti non appellatur immundus, sed illegitimus. Atque ita eum ubique appellat Mishna: viz. liquorem qui illegitimus redditur ab eo die loti, non autem dicit, qui pollutus est. Jam autem manifestò constat non esse liquores qui sint ullatenus secundi. Nam etsi secundi fuerint à Patre numerando, principium tamen sunt quoad leges in ipsis observandas. Hac autem in re prolixior fui, quoniam occurrit in Gemara Pefachim, ad dictum Mishnæ, E verbis ipsorum discimus, &c. dixisse ipsos, Ita in carne quæ polluta est à liquoribus qui immundi sunt ob reptile. At in quibusdam exemplaribus legitur, Qui polluti sunt à liquoribus secundis, in aliis autem adscribitur dicto Gemara, ob reptile, [vice] expositionis, liquores secundos; quòd totum erratum est, uti explicabimus. Qui autem hoc dixit, opinatus est numerari in liquoribus secundum & tertium eo modo quo in cibis, cùm non se ita res habeat, verùm liquores qui immundi sunt ob reptile, semper sint principium. Ideo autem necesse habuit dicere, liquores qui immundi sunt ob reptile, non autem [simpliciter] liquores immundi, quoniam illa verba comprehendant Patrem immunditiei & liquores manuum gratia immundos, uti jam dictum. Si quis autem Talmudem inspexerit, [videbit] necesse ibi esse ut nec sint liquores isti Pater, nec à manibus polluti, sed ut sint necessariò secundi; at non cogit loci istius inspectio ita [statuere] nisi eum qui nullum horum magni momenti fundamentorum, quæ jam explicata sunt, tenuerit. Constat ergò liquores non fieri secundos; in cibis verò pollutis reperitur primum, secundum, tertium, & quartum, nequaquam verò Pater, uti jam dictum. Vas autem testaceum primum erit & secundum, idque quòd pollutum fuerit à liquoribus immundis qui sunt principium, uti dictum est. Quod ad reliqua vasa, viz. Vestes, & vasa immersionis, sunt ipsa patres pollutionis, & prima ad polluendum, & secundum; scilicet cùm liquoribus immundis tantùm polluantur, cùm nulla proles immunditiei polluat vasa, excepto liquore, uti jam dictum; nec quivis liquor polluat, sed is tantùm qui Patri acceptam fert [immunditiam], ut etiam dictum. Sed nec reperitur vas aliquod è vasorum numero quod sit tertium, aut quartum. Porrò ex iis quæ scire debes, est, vasa immunda etsi polluta fuerint liquoribus immundis, polluere cibos

ita ut tertii fiant, sintque illegitimi ad Terumam, tantum, uti sub finem Tract. Zabim explicaturus sumus. Homo autem fit & Pater immunditiei, & primus; at nunquam secundus, vel ex Legis, vel ex Magistrorum sententia, pollutione contactu propagatâ. Nulla enim proles immunditiei polluit hominem, ne ipsi quidem liquores immundi; neque enim hominem qui ipsos tetigerit, uti jam antea explicatum est, immundum reddunt: at fit ille secundus ubi comederit cibos immundos, aut liquores immundos biberit, cum reliquis quæ fine Tr. Zabim recensentur. Atque hæc omnia decreta sunt à Magistris, uti ostensum est in Gemara Sabbati, utque ostensuri sumus fine Tract. Zabim. Hoc autem, quod hominem aliquem pro secundo habeamus, ita intelligendum, quod illegitimam reddat Terumam (uti explicabitur) donec [aquâ] conceptaculi se purgaverit; quod si mundatus fuerit, non opus habet [ut] occasum solis [maneant] cum fit illa immundities levis quæ ex instituto Magistrorum est. Verba autem Sifra disertâ sunt, Neque is qui ediderit cibos immundos, neque qui biberit liquores immundos, pollutus est pollutione, quæ [ad] vesperam perdurat. Atque ita vasa quæ polluta sunt à liquoribus qui sunt principium, cum mundata fuerint aquâ conceptaculi, munda sunt, neque opus habent occasu solis; ita in Sifra dixerunt, Vasa quæ polluta fuerint à liquoribus, è pollutione sua egrediuntur eo ipso die, cum sit pollutio ista à Magistris [decreta,] uti jam dictum. Atque hæc fundamentorum, quæ ideo visum est præmittere, ut iis quæ explicaturi sumus substantur, summa est. Hic autem visum est quiddam tibi indicare quod forsitan negligere possis; scilicet quicumque tandem sis qui desiderio tenearis cognoscendi ea quæ ad immunditiam & munditiam spectant, & intelligendi ea quæ in hac Classe continentur, oportere ut primò omnia præcognoscenda quæ in hac præfatione præmissi, una cum textu Capituli istius primi Tr. Celim ejusque explicatione nostrâ perfectissimè teneas, adeò ut expedite tibi hæc omnia in lingua fluant, sine ulla molestia ea in memoriam revocandi; neque enim ullatenus sufficit tibi ea perlegisse & repetisse, vel millies, nisi & memoriâ tenueris; neque vel hoc sufficit, nisi & in promptu sit linguæ tuæ instar lectionis Shemaa: ita faciliè ope memoriæ fidæ & intellectus perspicacis fiet, ut intelligas in hac classe contenta; sunt enim res in se valdè difficiles, perplexæ, & profundæ, quas cum Sapientum Mishna præcipui pro difficilibus habuerint, quanto magis nos? Annon vides R. Eleazarum f. Azariae dixisse viro qualis erat R. Akiba, Akiba, quid est quod inter enarrandum totus sis in loquendo de iis quæ spectent ad Tract. Negaim & Oboloth? quæ verba sunt textus Bereishith R. Hoshaia [adscripta.] Ita reperimus Sapientes Talmudicos antiquos ut ardua suspexisse quædam Capita hujus [Classis], e. g. arduum putasse R. Fuchananem c. Tinoketh è Tr. Niddah, & pro difficili habuisse Cap. Haisba, &c. [i. e. mulier quæ condierit olera in olla] è Tract. Taboroth, quo Capite instituitur sermo de primo, secundo, tertio, & quarto; quomodo scilicet se habeant gradus eorum in cibis & liquoribus, in rebus ordinariis, & Teruma, & sanctis. Ita etiam Tract. Oketzim difficultatis arguunt. Et in Gemara Sabbati dixerunt, Cum ingressi essent Doctores nostri vineam in Yabneh dixerunt, Futurum est

est ut oblivioni tradatur Lex in Israele, sicut dictum est, 'Ecce dies veniunt, inquit Dominus, quibus immittam famem in terram, &c. Et movebunt se à mari usque ad mare, & ab aquilone, & usque ad orientem discurrent, ad quærendum verbum Domini, & non invenient. Quid est [quod dicit] Discurrent ad quærendum verbum Domini, & non invenient? Futurum est ut mulier, quæ abstulerit placentam Terumæ, circumeat Synagogas & Scholas, ut cognoscat num prima sit, an secunda [ad polluendum.] Quin & ibi locum dubii quod occurrit ipsis, ostenderunt. viz. Si reperiatur reptile in aëre furni, quod tamen nec panem tetigerit, nec ipsius furni corpus, jam dubium non est quin polluaturn furnus unâ cum omnibus quæ in ipso sint, juxta dictum Domini, Quodcunque fuerit in ipso polluetur; at dubium apud ipsos oritur sitne panis, primus [respectu pollutionis,] cum polluerit ipsum reptile ingrediendo concavum furni, factusque sit furnus instar pleni immunditiei; an reptile polluerit furnum tantum, furnus autem panem contactu suo, atque ita sit panis secundus? De quo cum dubitaverint [dictum est,] Oblivioni tradita est lex ab Israele. Nôsti autem quod nunc temporis ob iniquitates nostras quæ multiplicatæ sunt, si circumveris præcipuas Academiæ Israelis, nedum Synagogas, reperturus sis ambiguos hæere illos in hujus generis [rebus,] de quibus multa occurrunt, & in Lege, & in Mishna, testimonia, immò & in iis quæ his clariora & magis perspicua. Minimè autem mirum videri debet si ita se habeat hoc exilii nostri tempore, quo & in defuètudinem abiit hoc [quæstorum] genus, quod pauci sint qui in ea inquirunt, cum invenerimus stante adhuc Templo & viventibus Prophetis dubium movisse quæstiones de pollutione & munditie, de quæ tertii & quarti ad polluendum legibus, vel ipsis Sacerdotibus qui in Templo ministrarent, quos maximè omnium oportuit ritus ad immunditiam & munditiam spectantes callere, cum maxima pars eorum quibus in hoc genere opus est, ejusmodi sint quæ ad Templum & res ejus sanctas spectent. Dixit, Sic dicit Dominus exercituum, Interroga modò sacerdotes legem dicendo, Si tulerit quispiam carnem sanctificatam in orâ vestimenti sui, & tetigerit orâ suâ panem, aut pulmentum, vel vinum, aut oleum, sive quemlibet cibum, numquid sanctificabitur? Et responderunt sacerdotes dixeruntque, Non. Et dixit Haggai, Si tetigerit immundus ob cadaver aliquod illorum, eritne immundum? Et responderunt sacerdotes dixeruntque, Immundum erit. In cujus quæstionis interpretatione discrepatur inter Sapientes Talmudicos, dicentibus aliis, perplexi sunt sacerdotes in quarto in rebus sanctis, de quo cum interrogaverit ipsos, responderunt, mundum esse; errantes, cum illegitimum sit, uti in superioribus diximus. At responsum eorum de eo qui à mortuo pollutus fuerit, immundum nempe fore, verum fuit; quoniam quartum ab illo quod pollutum est à mortuo in sanctis immundum est, i. e. pollutum est ipsum, at non polluit alia: & affirmantibus peritos fuisse eos immunditiei à mortuo contractæ, at non ejus quæ à reptili est, dum putarent quartum ex reptili, mundum fuisse in rebus sacris. Aliis verò dicentibus, nequaquam perplexos fuisse sacerdotes; cum in quæst. prima interrogaverit ipsos de quinto in rebus sanctis, quod dixerunt illi mundum fore; at in quæst. secunda de quarto, quod dixerunt immundum fore, adeo ut in utraque quæstione rectè respon-

sum sit. Porro hæc verba & ipse tibi explicaturus sum, cum ideo eorum hic mentionem fecerim, quod valde difficilia sint loco suo, & quam maximè obscura, conferatque eorum explicatio ad ea quæ volumus [assequenda,] eaque quæ præmisi-mus confirment. Dico ergò, verba, [carnem sanctificatam] Euphemismum esse, ac intelligi carnem reptilis; eodemque modo cum dicit, Nunquid sanctificabitur; Velle, Numquid polluetur? Sicut appellare amat lingua Hebraica amotionem à re & aversationem ipsius Kedusha [sanctitatem]. Ita dixit, Ne tangas me Ci^h Kedashotica. Et Ne fortè sanctificetur plenitudo seminis, &c. Cum ergò reptile in ora vestis suæ gestaverit, sit vestis prima; quod si oram vestis hujus carne tetigerit, sit caro ista secunda; deinde, si carnem pulmento tetigerit, sit pulmentum tertium: de hoc ergò pulmento quod tertium est interrogavit ipsos, Si tetigerit vinum, aut oleum, aut cibum, quænam sit cibi, vini aut olei istius lex? sint hæc omnia immunda necne? neque enim dubium est quin vi-num, oleum, & cibus, singula in quarto sint gradu; vinum autem & oleum principium, uti ostensum est, evadunt, cibus verò illegitimus tan-tum, nec alia polluit, cum immunda sint omnia;
ad hoc ergo respondentes dixerunt, Non; errantes. Atque hæc sententia est Rab qui dixit Perplexi sunt in hac quæstione sacerdotes. Deinde interrogavit ipsos dicens, Sin immundus ob contactum cadaveris fuerit qui orâ suâ tetigerit panem, qui tetigerit pulmentum, quod tetigerit vinum, & oleum, & cibos, quænam erit ratio hujus vini, olei & ci-borum? Dixerunt, Immunda erunt. Quod ve-rum est. Samuel autem dixit, non perplexos fuisse sacerdotes, sc. quod dicat dictum Haggæi in quæst.
prima [& tetigerit orâ suâ] non velle quod tetigerit ora ipsius panem; verum velle quod tetigerit cibus oram ipsius, deinde tetigerit cibus iste panem, panis autem pulmentum; quod est quod dicunt in Gemara, Quid? scriptum est, Et tetigerit ora ipsius? & tetigit ora ipsius cum scriptum est, de eo qui tetigerit orâ suâ, Vult, illud quod dicit, & tetigerit cum ora sua, non [intelligendum] de quo-vis qui gestaverit orâ suâ reptile, sed de re quæ conjuncta fuerit oræ isti; ita ut interrogaverit ipsos Haggæus de quinto in rebus sanctis quod mundum est; cum sc. sit ora [ordine] primum; ci-bus qui ipsam tetigerit, secundum; panis qui ci-bum istum tetigerit, tertium; pulmentum, quar-tum, quod quidem illegitimum est, at non polluit, uti jam dictum. Cum ergò pulmentum istud te-tigerit vinum, oleum, cibum, erunt omnia munda, neque liquor, viz. vinum & oleum, neque cibus polluetur; cum unumquodque ipsorum quin-tum sit, quintum autem in rebus sanctis mundum
sit. Atque ita responderunt ipsi dicentes, quin-tum istud non pollui. Deinde cum interrogaret ipsos, Sin pollutus à cadavere fuerit qui orâ suâ [ista] tetigerit, quænam hoc pacto futura est lex vini, olei & cibi? dixerunt ipsi, Immundum erit;
quod etiam verum est, quia tum quartum erit, eruntque vinum & oleum principium, cum sit liquor sanctus qui tetigerit tertium; cibus autem sit illegitimus, quod sit quartus, uti jam dictum est.
Quod ita explicandum est, viz. quod immundi ob
contactum mortui ora non sit primum, sed Pater immunditiei, sicut ostendimus hominem mortuo pol-

pollutum, si vestes aut vasa immerfionis tetigerit, ea Patres pollutionis reddere; Erit ergo ora vestis polluti à cadavere Pater; res autem quam tetigerit, primum, juxta dictum Samuelis; panis, secundum; pulmentum, tertium. Erit ergo illud quod tetigit liquorem sanctum & cibos sanctos, tertium, atque omnia [simul] immunda. Atque hoc est quod in Talmude ibi Samueli attribuitur: Neque hic, neque illic, perplexi fuerunt Sacerdotes. Cum ab illis de quarto in rebus sanctis quaereret, dixerunt, Immundum esse; non sunt hic perplexi Sacerdotes: cum de quinto in rebus sanctis interrogaret ipsos, dixerunt ipsis, Mundum esse, neque hic perplexi sunt. Attulit autem Rabbina explicationem tertiam, dixitque illos errasse in utroque responso. In primo autem ita se res habet ut dixit Rab, sc. quod ora fuerit quæ tetigit panem. At quod ad responsum ipsorum secundum dixit, Certe in immunditie ob mortuum non erant experti, hic quartum, illic tertium fuit. Cujus explicatio est, quod dixerit Rabina illud quod dixerunt [Immundum erit] etiam si vinum fuerit aut oleum & cibus, immunda [quidem] esse, uti dixerunt; verum errasse eos in gradu quem obtinet in immunditie, dum putarent hoc quod tetigit pulmentum, quartum esse in polluto five à mortuo, five reptili, cum [tamen] quartum ob reptile mundum sit in sanctis; at quartum ob mortuum, immundum. Errarunt ergo in utroque responso; quoniam quartum reptilis illegitimum est, in rebus sanctis instar quarti immundi ob mortuum; eodemque modo quartum cujuscunque tandem Patris fuerit, hoc autem quod putarunt quartum immundi à mortuo fuisse, [revera] tertium fuit, cum ora fuerit Pater immunditiei, uti ostensum est; panis, primum; pulmentum, secundum; ac vinum, oleum & cibus singula cum secundum tetigerint, erunt simul immunda, sicut dixerunt; at cibi immundi, tertium fuerunt, non quartum, uti imaginati sunt; sc. cum ora polluti à mortuo fuerit proles immunditiei, ut & ora reptili [polluta.] Atque hæc est discrepantia quæ contigit inter Sapientes Talmudicos de hoc responso, dicente Rab, peccasse eos in responso primo, verum pronuntiassse in secundo: Samuele autem, verum ipsos in utroque responso dixisse: & explicante Rabinâ quid verè responderint ad utramque quaestionem. Hinc autem constat tibi rem in se difficilem fuisse etiam priscis temporibus, & intellectum fuisse quod dicunt, Futurum est ut oblivioni tradatur Lex ab Israele, de oblivione legum pollutionis & munditiei. Atque ita cum juberet Dominus prophetam de istis interrogare, dixit ipsi, Interroganunc Sacerdotes Legem, quasi Lex absolutè sumpta esset decisio [quaestionum] ad pollutionem & munditiam [spectantium] & cognitio legum in ipsis observandarum. Atque ita etiam dixerunt de pollutionibus & purificationibus, Hæc, hæc sunt substantialia Legis. Et qui aliter fieri possit, cum sint illa scala ad Spiritum Sanctum? Sicut dixerunt, Mundities perducit ad sanctitatem, &c. Hæc autem omnia tibi dixi, ne putares sermonem de his rebus [institutum] similem esse sermoni de Tabernaculis, aut Ramis palmarum, aut juramento custodum, aut judicium, queni apprehendere posses levi aliquâ attentione, teque rem affecutum, quinetiam ne levi pendas ea quæ ipso intellecto commoda præcepturus es, aut idem statuas de iis ac de cæteris quæ præcesserunt in explicatione Cla-fium præcedentium. Nam ex istis magni momenti fundamentis, quæ tibi in hac Classe præmissi, non est vel unum aliquod cui non magnum ad ipsum confirmandum atque elucidandum laborem impendi; dum ipsa collegerim, unum ex urbe & duo ex familia, ex omnibus Talmudis angulis, & Baraitoth & Tosifphtoth, seu Interpretationum exoticarum & Additamentorum latibulis, quoad ex istis præfationem istam confecerim, quæ sit instar clavis omnibus quæ in hac Classe explicare animus est, quin & plerisque quæ in Talmude occurrunt sententiis difficilioribus: cum omnis sententia in qua mentio fiat immunditiei & munditiei, primique & secundi, &c. difficilis videatur, vel etiam Doctoribus magnis, quanto magis discipulis? & cum aliquem de iis loquentem reperiis, inuenies sermonem prolixum valdè, at parum utilem, adeò ut ex ipso quod velis perfectè assequi non possis. Hujus enim generis fundamenta ejusmodi sunt, quibus opera nullatenus impenditur. Verum illa quæ præmissimus huic classi abundè sufficiunt. Ea autem probè tenere oportet, uti diximus. Non autem percipiet, prout decet, quàm utilia sint, nisi qui & laborem diurnum, & vigilias nocturnas impenderit alicui constitutionum istarum quæ occurrunt initio Tractatum Sabbati, Pesachim, Chagiga, Zebachim, Cholin, &c. necdum fundamentum aliquod cui innitatur sibi selegerit, deinde hanc præfationem & quæ sequuntur, perlegerit, ut sint ipsi omnia ista fundamentis suis superstructa, tum enim eorum quæ hîc facta sunt valorem percipiet. Neque aliâ similitudine hoc [illustrare] possum, quàm ejus, qui non sine difficultate & molestiâ inter peregrinandum filiquas collegerit, quoad magna inde opum copia ipsi accreverit, adeò ut iis quis quid velit assequi possit; quas si consecutus fuerit qui cum aliquandiu angustiam subierit sibi sustentando non fuit, is certè ipsarum pretium dignoscet; quin & si in manus inciderint viri prudentis etiam si nihil difficultatis passi, hic etiam iis quid velit assequetur, atque interim ex iis in quibus versari homines videt, perspectum habebit quantum sibi molestiæ subeundum fuisset, nisi eas [sibi paratas] inuenisset. Ideo autem totum hoc ad rei hujus magnitudinem illustrandam protulimus, quò incitare ac persuadere possem ad præfationem istam observandam, eamque memoriâ perpetuò tenendam, ne fundamenta ista subinde, quoties iis opus fuerit, repetere necesse habeam, verum ea tantum respectans intuear, cum ipsa præfatio, etiam si non repetantur quæ in ea dicta sint, satis proluxa videatur. CUM is præcipuè scopus in his edendis nobis propositus fuerit, ut studia Rabbinica simul & Arabica aliquatenus promoveremus, idque hoc quasi supposito, utrumque suam habere, quâ rerum præstantiorum studiosis commendetur, utilitatem, ne hoc gratis postulâsse censeamur, visum est aliqua quibus & linguæ Arabicæ ad Veteris Testamenti, & Rabbinorum disciplinæ peritiâ ad Novi, textum felicius enucleandum haud parum conducere (ne dicam necessariam esse) probetur, appendici huic Notarum inferere;

ferere, non argumenta sed exempla, eaque in capita, non aliâ ferè methodo quàm prout in mentem venerint, distributa. Primum (quod primò se cogitanti obtulerint) facient ea quæ ante aliquot annos in Auditorio Hebraico, Comitiorum Academicorum Vesperis, ad unum aut alterum Scripturæ locum, cum in finem, disseruimus, quæ, omisâ tantum, quæ tempori ac loco accommodata fuerat, præfatione, sic se habent, Jer. xxxi. 32. Quia ipsi irritum fecerunt pactum meum, ואנכי בעלתי בם & ego Baalti bam. Celebris est locus, qui aliter in Novo Test. (scil. à Θεοπνεύτω divina ad Hebræos Epistolæ, lxx Interpretum versionem secuto, autore) recitatus, quàm sonare interpretum plerisque visa sunt verba Prophetæ, prout nunc in Hebraicis, quæ tam Christianorum quàm Judæorum manibus teruntur, exemplaribus habentur, in eorum numero est qui eam de huiusmodi discrepantiæ causa atque origine dubitandi ansam præbuerint, quæ nullo modo tolli posse videatur, quam si ad variantes lectiones confugiamus; sc. aliter olim in iis quibus usi sunt lxx (qui vocantur) Interpretes & prisci temporis homines, quàm in iis qui ad recentiorum manus pervenerunt, codicibus scriptum fuisse. Quod avidis arripiunt auribus qui corruptelarum nimis frequentium obtentu, fontium Hebraicorum αὐθεντίαν labefactare conantur. Quibus ne plus quam rei ipsius veritas postulat, gratis concedatur, sollicitè cavendum est illis, qui limpidissimos vitæ fontes è media ^a Jerusalem, imò ipso Dei atque Agni throno profluentes, sanctoque ipsius spiritu fectos, & conspicuam divinæ circa ipsos providentiæ, per tot seculorum decursum, curam, eâ quâ par est reverentiâ prosequuntur. Ac magni certè hoc in genere momenti est locus de quo in præsentiarum agitur; cùm lectionem in Bibliis Hebraicis hodie obtinentem, in dubium vocantibus occini non possit, quod in aliis nonnullis & solet & meritò potest, hallucinatos fuisse vel Interpretes vel Scribas, cùm Novi Testamenti auctoritate comprobetur istorum versio, horum lectio; cujus textum qui nobis dederunt non minùs acti sunt à Sp. Sancto, quàm illi, quibus olim allata est Prophetia, Sancti Dei homines, aded ut ab Epistolæ ad Hebræos autore, non minùs quàm ab ipso Jeremia, quid dixerit Dominus acceperimus. Cùm igitur de lectione quæ in Epistolæ istius cap. viii. 9.

scil. ὅτι αὐτοὶ ἐκ ἐνέμειναν ἐν τῇ διαθήκῃ μὲν, καὶ γὰρ ἠμέλῃσα αὐτῶν, λέγει Κύριος, minimè ambigatur, hoc in causa fuit Viris & doctis & piis, ut potius Scribarum incuriæ in Prophetæ verbis Hebraicè describendis, vel saltem variæ lectioni quæ casu aliquo jam olim contigit, discrepantiam hanc imputarent, & pro בלתי Baalti, quod in hodiernis exemplaribus legitur, ac verti solet Dominatus sum, vel Maritus fui, substituendum, vel saltem olim non malè, & comprobante jam Sp. Sancto legisse τὴν ἡβδαομήκοινα, בלתי Gaalti, vel בלתי Bachalti, quæ sonant, Fastidivi, Aspernatus sum. Latiùs patere, quam ut leviori manu sarciri possit, rupturam. Ita certè adhuc doctis visum, at quia non aliam tentârunt, potius quàm quòd non reperiri possit, hæc ἐναγλιόφανῃ conciliandi viam; quæ tamen inquirentibus adeo facilis est inventu, ut si alia, quæ minus fortassis primo intuitu præ se ferunt difficultatis, pari facilitate componi possent, nullus relinqueretur textum Hebraicum corruptelæ arguendi prætextus. Ea est, non ut pro voce בלתי (in qua totius difficultatis cardo vertitur) novam aliquam lectionem substituamus, sed ut in varios ejus significatus inquireamus, quod si fecerimus, illud non minùs commodè per Græcorum ἠμέλῃσα reddi posse, quàm aut בלתי Gaalti quod est Fastidivit, aut quicquid ejus loco adhibent doctorum conjecturæ, reperiemus. Quod ne gratis dictum à nobis videatur, conabimur rationibus nonnullis, quæ & aliis forsan in quibus in diversum abeunt interpretes conciliandis inservire possint, sententiam nostram confirmare. Quem in finem, necesse erit in varios, quibus dictionis alicujus Hebraicæ, de qua controvertitur, sensus erui possit, modos inquirere. Ii verò (ut mihi videtur) quinque statui possunt. Quorum primus est, ut diversa, in quibus eadem vox occurrit, loca inter se conferantur. Ad hunc sæpissime confugiunt Interpretes tum Judæi tum Christiani, quo loci unius obscuritas aliorum perspicuitate illustretur.

in quo occurrunt, sensu; non eorum cum vocibus affinis (seu ejusdem originis) collatione tantum. Idem sæpe in verbis rarioris usûs explicandis * ea hoc vel illud denotare ait حسب معنی المكان ratione, vel vi sensûs loci.

Tertius, ut versiones antiquæ, eæque jam olim probatæ, consulantur; cùm earum auctores iis vixerint temporibus quibus Judæorum & res & lingua magis florent & facilius perdiscerentur, quæque à scriptorum seculo propius abessent. Tales præcipuè Græca quæ vulgo Septuaginta Senum audit, Paraphrases Chaldaicæ, & Syriaca quæ פשיטתא, sive Simplex, dicitur, è fonte nempe Hebraico traducta.

Quartus, ut in Rabbiorum tam antiquorum quàm recentiorum, qui multa hoc in genere παλεοπαράδοξα habent, explicationes inquiratur. Quamvis enim lingua Hebraica jam olim in eam abiit desuetudinem, ut non sit ipsis vernacula, parum tamen abest quin ita haberi possit, utpote quam, licet non cum matris lacte imbibant, à teneris tamen unguiculis statim addiscunt, inque ea præ aliis exercitatissimi sunt, adeo ut, quod ad verba attinet, non parum iis tribuant Christianorum cordatiores.

Quintus demum, (qui non minimi inter cæteros momenti) vicinarum linguarum collatio, Syriacæ puta, sive Chaldaicæ, & Arabicæ, cùm sint tres istæ, Hebr. Syr. & Arabica לשונות משותפות מתרמות בשמותיהם ובהליכותיהם ובשמושיהם (ut loquitur ^d R. Judah Levita in Cozari) linguæ affines, & quæ multa inter se communia habent in nominibus suis, inflexionis & constructionis ratione; adeo ut ferè cum ^e R. Aben Ezra dicamus esse ea שפה אחת labium unum & verba diversa, sive unius linguæ dialectos varias, quarum Hæbraica mater, reliquæ autem filix matri non absimiles. Hujus usus & necessitas hinc patet, quòd cùm lingua Hebraica pura, antiqua, in angustos admodum limites redacta sit (utpote cujus nihil, præter illud quod in Bibliis conservatur, ad nos pervenerit; inque iis voces multæ vel semel tantum, vel diversis significationibus occurrant, ^f quas ex aliorum in eadem lingua, scriptorum usu dignoscere non licet, necesse sit illarum, quæ משפחה אחת הן (ut iterum cum doctissimo R. Aben Ezra loquamur) ex eadem familia ortum ducunt, easdem radices & propagines agnoscunt, scrinia excutere, & quem usum, quos sensus voces istæ apud illas habeant, inquirere. Hoc modo, cum aliàs non possint, frequenter se expediunt Rabbiorum doctissimi R. Saadias, Aben Ezra, Ebn. Janabius, Maimonides, R. Tanchum, Kimchii, pater & filius, cum antiquorum & recentiorum aliis. Horum quinque modorum, vel alicujus ipsorum beneficio, si genuinus verbi cujusvis, in textu Hebraico occurrentis, sensus erui non possit, nihil superesse videtur opis humanæ, quo dignosci queat. Horum ergò plerosque, si non omnes, à nostris partibus, contrà verò nullum stare si ostenderimus, dum בעלתי Baalti in Prophetæ verbis non necessariò per Dominatus sum, vel Maritus fui, sed commodè per ἡμέλησα, Neglexi, Despexi, verti posse affirmamus, adeo ut variam lectionem confingere opus non sit, illud quod probandum suscepimus, satis firmasse videbimur. Quod ut pateat, ad singulorum, ordine suo, examen illud revocemus. Primus ergò, quem proposuimus, modus est, ut de vocis in loco de quo ambigitur intellectu, aliorum, in quo occurrit, collatione statuatur. Atque hic primâ fronte nobis maximè adversari videtur, dum sc. obijcitur בעל Baal ubicunque aliàs occurrit, significare Dominari vel Dominum seu Maritum esse, vel in uxorem ducere, ideòque eodem hic sensu necessariò sumendum. Cujus tamen argumenti vim infirmare haud erit difficile, si observemus, quod observandum est, alio hic modo quam in plerisque locorum illorum verbum hoc construui; scil. cum præpositione ב Be, cùm aliàs vel cum accusativo construatur, ut ubi maritandi significatum habet כי בעל בחור Sicut maritatur juvenis cum virgine, maritabuntur tibi filii tui. Is. lxxii. 5. vel cum ל ubi dominandi, ut אשר בעלו למואב Qui dominati sunt Lemmoab, Moabo, 1 Chron. iv. 22. Ea autem pro diversitate constructionis solet esse significationum varietas, ac penè contrarietas, ut ex illis de hujus loci sensu qui alius præpositionis influxu regitur, certi aliquid concludi non possit. Unicus (ni fallor) est præter hunc locus in quo eodem, quo hîc, modo cum ב Be construatur. Jer. sc. iii. ver. 14. אנכי בעלתי בכם Anoci Baalti bacem; ubi ut, בעלתי Baalti Dominatus sum vel Maritus fui reddatur, adeò non est necessarium, ut minimè dubitaverit Kimchii pater, referente filio ipsius Davide, hanc sine exceptione regulam

lam tradere, כל לשון בעילה שהוא דבק i. e. ubique verbum בעל Baal cum ב Be construitur, in malam partem sumi. Ideoque verba etiam illa sic exponit, קצתי בכם בזמן שעבר אך עתה אקבץ אתכם Ego fastidiui vos; eo sc. quod præterit tempore, at jam colligam vos. quæ eadem est & R. Tanchumi sententia معناه الكره وقد اقي من هذا المعنى "באלהא" i. e. significatio ejus est, Aspernari, vel, Respuere, quo sensu etiam dicitur Bachal mutato ב in ח. Nihil ergo est ex aliorum locorum collatione quod necessarium suadeat בעלתי Baalti hîc, Dominatus sum, vel Maritus fui, reddendum, vel quod impediatur quo minus vertatur Fastidiui, imò est quod suadeat potius. Prima ergo hæc de vocis significato dijudicandi ratio, non adeo aperte nobis adversatur, reliquas valde faventes habemus. Quod ad secundam enim, quæ est diligens & accurata loci de quo agitur perpensio, ut quis illi maximè conveniat sensus, quem admittat, quem repudiet, dignoscatur; hanc adhibentibus, mirè huic loco quadrare videtur Fastidiendi significatio, ut vel ideo quòd eam טפ בעלתי Baalti convenire non putent, געלתי Gaalti, quod legisse olim LXX existimant, præferendum censeant. "Ita Doctis. Capellus, * Heb. viii. 9. [legitur] inquit, "καὶ γὰρ ἠμέλησα αὐτῶν ex Jer. xxxi. 32. "ubi in Hebr. est בעלתי Dominatus sum eis, at LXX legerunt געלתי Fastidiui, quæ lectio videtur melior." Hæc ille: ut nec omittam, quòd multis ostendere conetur ^h R. Ebn. Jannabius, Domini & Maritationis significatum, nullum hîc locum habere posse. Quòd ita nempe, omnis inter fœdus olim cum patribus initum ac novum jam pangendum discrepantia tolli videatur; quæ hoc modo constat, si eorum, qui ob illud irritum factum à Deo fastiditi atque rejecti fuerant, posterì, hoc jam cordibus ipsorum indito, gratiæque divinæ auxiliante & ad obsequium impellente, talis in posterum despectus atque desertionis metu liberandi prædicentur; unde concludit Baalti bam idem valere ac פרט באמרם וצטק בהם Fastidiui res eorum. i. e. ipsos, iisque afflictus sum.

contempsisti seu sprevi illos;) præsertim cum isti verborum interpretationi eam conciliaverit auctoritatem ipsius Sp. S. testimonium, Capite ad Heb. epistolæ modo laudato, ut si eam non admittat recepta hodie in Bibliis Hebraicis lectio, ad variantem lectionem necesse sit confugere. Quarto etiam, cum ad partes advocandi sint Hebræorum docti, qui nobiscum faciunt, nec pauciores, nec eruditione & auctoritate, illis qui aliter sentiunt, inferiores reperientur. Sunt illi magni inter suos nominis viri, Abul Walid Marun Ebn Jannabi Grammaticorum princeps, (ⁱ cujus in plerisque vitulâ arat David Kimchius) Kimchii pater, & R. Tanchum Hierosolymitanus, qui omnes unanimi consensu טפ בעלתי hîc Fastidiendi significatum tribuunt, Domini negant; additis, ut vidimus, & à constructionis ratione & loci circumstantiâ, argumentis. Præcipuus eorum, qui contrarium sentientium agmen ducere censetur, est R. David Kimchius, qui tamen dubius hîc potius stare videtur. Neque enim commodam esse, quam patrem suum amplexum fuisse fatetur, sententiam, sed tantum necessariam esse, negat. Hæc enim in l. Radicum habet, Sunt qui verba ista בעלתי ואני Veanoci Baalti bam, ita interpretentur ut idem sonet בעלתי Baalti ac געלתי Gaalti vel בחלתי Bachalti scil. Fastidire; ואין צורך at non est hoc necesse, sed usitatori בעלתי Baalti significatione reddi potest, ut valeat, Quamvis ego Dominus seu maritus fuerim ipsis, ac fuerim ipsis Deus, illi irritum fecerunt fœdus meum; & sic Jonathan vertit אתרעיתי Ethreiti, Complacui mihi. At Pater meus p. m. dixit Omnem vocem בעילה Beilab, quæ construitur cum ב, in malam partem sumi. Hæc ille, è quibus vix dignosci possit quam demum sententiam præferat. Ita unam probat, ut alteram improbare non audeat. Restat, ut ultimo loco, quid ad vocis, de qua agitur, significationes eruendas conferat vicinarum linguarum collatio, videamus: atque hîc linguæ Arabicæ ope, quam in subsidium vocant Ebn Jannabius, & Kimchius Senior, si quid adhuc restat scrupuli, planè tollitur. In ea enim verbum בעל Baala est, non modo Dominum esse, & Maritari, sed & Perturbari, Separari, Fastidire, Nauseare, quo sensu etiam, uti hîc in Hebr. cum ב Be construitur, & cum א Ala constructum, Renuere, Nolle. stidiendi scil.] inquit Ebn Jannabius, convenit cum illo quod dicunt Arabes يعجل الرجل بامره Baela-rrajolo beamrehi, scil. Tæduit virum negotii sui & fastidio illud habuit, sic & Kimchii pater, eodem (inquit) modo dicunt Arabes يعجل الرجل بالامره Fastidivit vir mulierem eamque expulit, seu repudiavit. Eam, quæ adhuc apud Arabes in usu est, thematis hujus notionem, olim Hebræis etiam notam fuisse statuunt. His ergo rationibus moti, cum & loci circumstantia, & versionum antiquarum præcipuæ, & Rabbiorum doctissimi, & linguæ Arabicæ usus perpetuus calculum adjiciant, nulli dubitamus pronuntiare, eandem olim hoc loco, quæ & hodie, receptam fuisse lectionem; & verò si hodie interpretibus visum esset, ut olim LXX Senibus & Syro, verba Prophetæ reddere [Quapropter eos fastidiivi, nolui, despexi, ἠμέλησα, &c.] nihil eos facturos quod à vocis בעלתי Baalti significatione alienum sit, imò forsan quod ei, cum præpositione ב Be constructæ, non optimè omnium atque unicè quadraret. Nec minùs forsan contra lectionem געלתי Gaalti, quàm pro בעלתי Baalti, hinc argumentari liceat, quòd געלתי Gaalti cum ב Be nullibi constructum reperiatur, neque dicatur געלתי Gaalti bam, sed געלתי Gealtim, Abominatus sum eos, ut Lev. xxvi. 44. Nec dubitamus, si ad easdem regulas exigantur alia etiam Scripturæ loca non pauca, in quibus aliter olim legisse antiquarum versionum auctores, quàm hodierna præ se ferunt exemplaria Hebraica, perhibentur, aliter melius conciliari posse quæ inter eos & recentiores reperiuntur discrepantias, quam varias ubique lectiones statuendo. Altero saltem exemplo, ut ita duorum testium fide res comprobetur, illud confirmare liceat. Illius nempe loci qui ab Apostolo Paulo LXX Interpretes secuto, Epistolæ ad Rom. cap. ix. ver. 33. ex Isaia xxvi. 11, 16. citatur: scil. ὁ πιστεύων ἐν αὐτῷ, ὁ καλίσχουσιν αὐτῷ, Et quisquis credit in eum, non pudebit. Verba prout Hebraicè apud Isaiam vulgò leguntur sunt, המאמין לא יחיש Hammaamin lo yachish, quæ sonare volunt Interpretes, Credens non festinabit. Aliter ergo legisse olim Græcæ versionis auctores, quos secutus est Apostolus, asserunt docti, scil. ירוש Yebosh vel יריש Yabish, quod sonat, Erubescet. Rectius (inquit Illustriss. Grotius) quàm quod Maforthæ prætulere. Vir doctus apud Cappellum in quæst. de locis parallelis Vet. & Nov. Test. hæc habet, "Es. xxviii. 16. "Hebraicè legitur, Qui sperat in eo, לא

"יריש lo Yachish, i. e. Non festinabit, pro quo Paulus, Rom. ix. 33. & x. 11. & Petrus, 1 Pet. ii. 6. scribunt, μὴ καλίσχῃ, i. e. non confundetur, codicem procul dubio melioris notæ secuti, in quo scriptum erat לא יחיש lo Yabish, "non יחיש lo Yachish." Quare autem hæc à viris doctis affirmantur? quia nempe loci naturæ magis quadrare videatur pudoris (quem adhibuerunt LXX Senes) quàm festinationis significatus, quem unum voci יריש Yachish competere autumârunt. Quòd si hanc ob rationem varia erit cudenda lectio, quid ni Paraphrastæ etiam Chaldæi & Interpretis Syriaci gratiâ, quorum ille vertit לא ירעזעון lo Yizdaazaun, Non commovebuntur, vel trepidabunt, hic לֹא יִדְעָחַל lo nedchal, non timebit? Num eos forf. ירחיל Yachil à חול Chul, Timere, Trepidare, in codicibus suis scriptum reperisse putabimus, voce non minus ad יריש Yachish quàm ירוש Yabosh accedente? Quid ni potius & hos & illos יריש Yachish olim, prout nunc habetur legisse? alios tantum ejusdem significatus quàm recentiores prætulisse, quos ambitu suo continere verbum illud suadent & loci circumstantiæ & interpretum authoritati additus linguæ affinis Arabicæ usus, in qua themata حوش Hausb & حش Hish quæ Hebr. ירוש respondent, tres nobis istos (cum aliis) significatus exhibent (inter se non rarò in rei natura conjunctos, dum qui timet consternatus huc illuc rapitur, atque ita tandem pudore confunditur) scil. اسرع Afrael, Festinare; فرع Phazea, Timere; استحيا Estahya, Pudore suffundi; quorum tertium præferunt LXX, secundum Chaldæus & Syrus, primum recentiores. Si quidem quod falsò Alcorano suo tribuit Mohammedes, verè SS. Scripturæ tribui potest, scriptam eam جوامع الكلام verbis comprehensivis [comprehensivis] quæ varios in se sensus continent, quorum cum plures aliquando uni eidemque loco satis appositum sint, varias pariunt apud interpretes sententias, citra ullam varias lectiones constituendi necessitatem.

Meritò interim vobis commendatum reddat linguæ Arabicæ studium vel unus hic ejus usus quo Hebraicæ tam feliciter ancillatur. Quàm latè pateat per totam humanioris literaturæ ἐγκυκλοπαιδείαν ejus usus, fatebuntur multi, qui quid ulla ex parte Theologiæ studio conferat planè dubitant. Ego verò, si quid sentiam, Theologo adeo utilem existimo, ut si textum Hebraicum aliquando penitiùs excutere necessarium ducat, eâ sine manifesto veritatis præ-

Alii unum unicuique vocabulo ab initio significatum fuisse aiunt, deinde تدخل علي latius se ad alios admittendos extendisse. Quod certè fieri potuit ob rationes licèt jam nobis ignotas, illis tamen, penès quos tunc jus erat & norma loquendi, perspicuas. Si quis objiciat, indicium fore hoc penuriæ & tenuitatis linguæ Arabicæ, & confusionem parere, cum nescius hæreat auditor quem sequatur sensuum inter se pugnantium, diversimodè responderi ait Abu Becr Ebn ol Anbari, inter cætera, ان كلام العرب يصحح بعضه بعضا ويرتبط اوله باخيره ولا يعرف معنى الخطاب منه الا باستيفاء واستكمال حروفه فجاز وقوع اللفظة علي المعنيين المتضادين لانها تتقدمها وياتي بعدها ما يبدل علي خصوصية احد المعنيين دون الاخر فلا يبراد بها, في حال التكلم والاحنا الا معنى واحد. In Arabum sermone aliud ab alio confirmari, ac principium & finem inter se connecti, neque percipi orationis sensum nisi ad finem perductæ ac prolatis dictionibus absolutæ. Nihil impedire ergò quo minus habeat dictio aliqua duos significatus contrarios, cum præcedat & consequatur quod indicet utra significationum [loco præsentis] propriè competat exclusâ alterâ, cum inter loquendum una tantum innuatur. Interim, يجري حروف, الاضداد يجري الحروف التي تقع علي المعاني المختلفة وان لم تكن متضادة فلا يعرف المعني المقصود منها الا بما يتقدم الحرف ويتاخر بعده ما وضع تاويله. *Ratio vocum ἐναντιόσημων eadem est ac πολυσήμων, quæ diversos continent, licet haud inter se pugnantes, significatus, cum & in illis haud dignoscatur intellectus ad quem collimatur, nisi ex iis quæ dictionem istam antecedunt & consequuntur, quorum interpretatio manifesta est. Quam regulam esse necessariò observandam fatentur omnes, qui rectè non modo Scripturas Sacras, sed & alia quævis ab hominibus conscripta, in quibus minori cum periculo erratur, interpretari velint. Sed non est nostri inpræsentiarum instituti, in hujus rei rationes anxie inquirere, nec quid inde commodi, sive incommodi sequatur, satis est ita actu comparatum ostendisse, ut sit (uti loquitur Ebn Phares) من سنن العرب (loquendi) *legibus apud Arabes in nominibus

Quod eatenus, ni fallor, evicimus, ut nec Judæus quis Matthæum malâ fide Micheæ verba enarrâsse asserere ausit, nec Christianus Prophetæ verba prout hodiè Hebraicè leguntur, quicquam à Matthæi dicto abhorrens continere, adeò morosè contendere debeat, ut sententiæ suæ tuendæ gratiâ, receptæ à multis retrò sæculis lectioni, seu potius (quod apud me extra dubium est) ab ipso Propheta, dictante Spiritu Sancto profectæ, vim inferri velit. Si igitur, qui usitatiorem nominis צִיַר Tfair significatum, Parvum sc. retineri velit, aliam divinos hosce scriptores conciliandi rationem adhibuerit, libenter assensero; sin aliquis intemperatam Prophetæ lectionem pro corruptâ haberi velit, ut ipse manum medicam importunè adhibeat, illum quem jam indicavimus verbi usum, tot exemplorum illustrium, tot virorum insignium autoritate comprobatum, vel felicissimis ipsius conjecturis, audacter opposuero,

Et olim ut nunc lectum videri textum Hebraicum, neque necesse esse ut בוגדים, vel aliud quippiam pro בגדים substituatur, quod Græco καταφρονται, nec ut תמרו והתמו pro תמרו והתמו legatur, quod verbis ὁ θαυμάσατε ὁ ἀφανίσθητε, respondeant.

EA quam capite præcedente innuimus regula, viz. Multas rerum, quæ nos jam latent, rationes, olim cognitæ atque perspectas fuisse, usûs est ferè perpetui, ad modestiam nobis inculcandam, ne benè posita temerè loco moveamus, quoties quî factum fuerit ut ita se haberet, quod à multis retro seculis factum est, non adeo facilè percipiamus: in iis præcipuè rebus de quibus eos, quorum maximè intererat, si quid minùs sani aut sinceri subesset, illud statim detexisse, nullam movisse controversiam reperimus. Cùm ergò testimonium aliquod, vel ex Lege vel Prophetarum libris ab Apostolis Domini nostri Jesu Christi citatum, aliter sonare quàm à recentioribus, sive Judeis, sive Christianis, eo jam loco unde desumptum fuerat, intelligatur, invenimus, ne tamen Judæo cuiquam Novi Testamenti Scriptoribus malæ fidei litem intentanti ullatenùs cedamus, hoc ad persuadendum satis est, quòd si minùs rectè, vel sine optima ratione factum fuisset, haudquaquam illud siluissent ipsius majores, quorum ætate propagata sunt fidei Christianæ dogmata, quibusque primò proposita. Illi, prout Christo ejusque doctrinæ semper erant infensissimi, hoc statim, ut manifestissimum falsitatis argumentum, eis objecissent; viz. Prophetarum, ad quorum testimonium provocarunt, scripta ab ipsis corrupta. Eandem etiam ob causam, nec temerè à Christianis sollicitandam Hebraici textûs in ejusmodi locis lectionem eam quam post Christi & ² Apostolorum tempora haud probabile est mutatam fuisse, licèt jam inter ipsam & quam exhibet Novum Fædus, aliqua videatur discrepantia, judicamus. Rationes rei forsan tunc temporis notissimæ erant, licèt nobis jam obscuræ admodum ac penè impervestigabiles, in quarum tamen vestigia, quibus possumus modis, inquirere, atque omnia priùs tentare, decebit, quàm aliquid immutandi atque innovandi audaciam sumamus.

Hujusmodi, præter jam prolata, videtur esse locus iste Habbac. i. 5. ראוי בוגדים &c. והביטו והתמרו תמרו כי פעל פעל. Reu bagoim, &c. quem recentiores vertunt, Videte in gentibus, &c. ut ita Beth, quæ vocem bagoim orditur, præpositio nomini præfixa, non litera ipsi essentialis habeatur. Apostolus verò, Act. xiii. 41. verba hæc in testimonium contra Judeos proferens (à quibus, cùm vox ista quæ usus est, acerbissimo convitio perversos ipsorum mores perstringat, nisi id sonare prophetæ verba persuasum habuissent, adulterati textûs proculdubio incusatus fuisset) sic effert, Ἰδετε οἱ καταφρονταὶ, ὁ θαυμάσατε, ὁ ἀφανίσθητε, ὅτι ἔργον ἐγὼ ἐργάζομαι ἐν ταῖς ἡμέραις ὑμῶν: i. e. vertente Beza, Videte, o contemptores, & admiramini, & evanescite, &c. Quomodo & LXX Ἰδετε οἱ καταφρονταὶ ὁ θαυμάσατε θαυμάσια ὁ ἀφανίσθητε, nec aliter ferè qui Vetus Testamentum è lingua Hebraica in Syriacam traduxit, וחורו ואתרמרו ותמרו Videte arrogantes, & respicite, & admiramini, & obstupefite. Patet igitur tam LXX, quos secutus creditur Apostolus, quàm Syrum, dictionem illam, quam ita transtulerunt, pro unica habuisse, non geminâ è præpositione & nomine conflatâ, qualis cùm בגדים Bagoim visa recentioribus fuerit, ejus loco בוגדים Bogedim literis ג & ו transpositis, & inserta ד vel saltem ו in ד, unâque vocalibus mutatis, substituendum duxerunt reip. literariæ Primates, Beza, Grotius, Capellus, (qui & aliam adhibet conjecturam, forsan scilicet eos בוזים Bozim legisse) ita tamen, ni fallor, (quo erant candore) ut non aliam interpretes ipsos inter se conciliandi viam obstructam voluerint; cujusmodi ubi, bonâ cum ipsius veniâ, Lectori indicavero, eamne an aliam potius amplecti velit suo utetur judicio. Ea igitur hæc sit: ut, nempe inter Interpretes antiquiores & recentiores, quam innuimus, discrepantia, inde ortum traxerit, non quod verbum hoc aliis alii literis in eis quibus usi sunt exemplaribus scriptum repererint, sed quod unum idemque dum legerint, diversas illi origines, quarum utriusque capaces videntur quibus constat literæ, tribuerint, alii pro uno ac simplici, ut diximus, alii pro gemino, è duobus composito, habentes; unde hi, In gentibus, illi verò Contemptores, seu Arrogantes, vel Insolentes reddiderunt, quasi בגדים pro plurali à singulari בגד Bago, formâ קנא Kano,

² Seu transgressores,

Kano, Zelotes, sumpto; à themate nempe בג, quod in usu olim apud Hebræos fuisse, etsi non alibi in textu Biblico (qui unus Hebraismi puri & antiqui thesaurus nobis superest,) occurrat, mihi satis confirmatum reddit additus interpretum istorum auctoritati linguæ Arabicae usus, in qua verbum بغا Baga hos habet, cum aliis, significatus, ظلم Injustus seu injurius fuit, علا على احد Se super aliquem extulit, اعدل عن الحق à vero declinavit, seu recessit, استطال superbè, insolenter se gessit, كذب mentitus est, اختال في المشية fastuosè incessit, teste Kamusii authore. suam fortiti, pauci docent, nec certè facile, nisi eadem dialecto interpretem se præbente, cognoscent; in qua themata אלך Alac & לאך Laac, mittendi & missionis significatum habent, ut inde qui nuntii deferendi seu legati officio fungantur, מלאך Malaac audiat. Hæc verò, cum aliis id genus multis, licet originis ignotæ, notæ satis sunt significationis è frequenti, quo veniunt, usu. Alia occurrunt non pauca ἀπαξ λεγόμενα, de quorum intellectu, nisi in consilium adhibita Arabum linguâ, vix auderent vel doctissimi Rabbinorum certi aliquid statuere. Hoc in genere censetur טטטתי Teteti, everri, Is. xiv. 23. & מטטט Matata, everriculum. Nesciebant quid esset Vetetetika, donec audirent famulam quandam Arabicam dicentem sociæ suæ, שקולי טטטתא, Shikkuli Tatita veteti baita, Accipe scopas & scopa domum: ita citat Buxtorfius ea quæ in ^d Talmude Tract. Megilla. Fol. 18. habentur; nescio tamen an ibi famula Arabica dicatur, an famula Rabbi: ita enim in ea quæ penes me est Talmudis editione legitur, nec non apud Kimchium ad Isa. xiv. & in lib. Shoreshim, tam in præfatione quàm in radice טטטת. Interim Arabum ibi innui dialectum haud dubitaverim, in qua vocis istius significatio sit, ut vult R. David Kimchius, Amovere, auferre. Ita Ebn Jannabius interpretationem ejus esse ait Arabicè وانظف اي, Waatatiba, i. e. & excutiam eam. Est certè طاط apud Kamussii Authorem, movere, ut cum equum quis femorum agitatione ad cursum incitat, & manu frenum eum in finem concutit; nec non celeriter opes expendere, profundere, quod idem ferè est ac excutere; quæ omnia motus notionem includunt: aut referri (inquit idem Ebn Jannabi) potest ad ططط Tabtab, mutato ט in ח ejusdem organi literam (ut frequenter fieri in utraque lingua solet) ut sonet طططط, quod inter cætera est, Dispergere, dissipare, dejicere. Conferri etiam potest cum طتا Tata, quod est idem ac ذهب Abiit, undè forsan dicatur ططي Tatta, auferre; item cum ططع Tatce, movere, idque paulò violentius, atque etiam ططط Thatbaa, loco movere, amovere. Hæc enim omnia & sono & significatu affinia sunt, quorum quodlibet ex ancillæ, imò doctioris cujusdam Magistri ore Teteti sonare posset. Huic addi possunt & cætera quæ à R. Davide Kimchio in præfatione, & passim textu libri Shoreshim adducuntur: quo lectorem harum rerum studiosum remittimus. Hof. xiii.

5. de voce תלאובות Taluboth, nihil omnino statuere audent Magistrorum doctissimi, quàm quod ipsis dictaverit linguæ Arabicæ usus. R. Salomo Jarchi enim, qui nondum forsan ab iis didicerat, se extricare nescius, אין רמין (inquit) Non est illi geminum, ideòque interpretatio, juxta illud quod postulat sensus, erit tumulus in quo desiderant omne bonum; nec inveniunt. Aben Ezra autem linguam Arabicam callens, ut se expediat, Denotat (inquit) terram aridam & siticulosam, וככה בלשון ישמעאל ita enim in lingua Ismaeliticâ. Quod autem dicunt alii esse terram in qua כל תולאה בו Omnia suspensa sint, allusio (inquit) est, non verbi expositio. Kimchius eandem secutus interpretationem, non alio nititur fundamento, quàm quod Pater suus הביא ראיה probationem ad hanc dictionem [explicandam] attulerit è lingua Arabica, in qua dicunt لاج Labal' Rajol, sitivit vir, vel ut in l. Radicum idem effert, quod scripserit R. Jonab (Ebn Jannabium innuit) Arabes locum aridum & siticulosum לאבה Labab, vocitare. Nec aliam sibi in præf. l. Shoreshim, id genus dictionibus, quibus non reperiantur הכר במקרא aliæ similes in textu Biblico, interpretandis, viam ut optimam & tutissimam proponit, quam ut ea vel ex Mishna, vel Gemara explicentur, vel è linguis יוני או גורי Græcâ & Arabicâ, cujus optandum certè fuerat ipsum majorem habuisse peritiam; ita enim, quo erat ingenio & eruditione, majora longè præstitisset quàm jam, magna licet & præclara, alienis oculis cernens, & ad Patris sui, vel Ebn Jannabi tantum, à quibus omnia haurire non potuit, auctoritatem provocare sapius coactus. Verè enim ibi asserit linguam Hebraicam, etsi cæterarum parens fecunda fuerit, omniumque olim perfectissima, jam tamen apud ipsos præ exillii diuturnitate diminutam fuisse; Idem quod R. Judas Levita in l. Cozari, כמא אותה כה שמא נושארה נתולדה בלוחם וצרה Idem illi contigit fatum quod populo cui vernacula fuit, despectui habitis illis, unâ in contemptum abiit, & afflictis eorum rebus, ipsa in angustias redacta est. Plura in re tam perspicua exempla congerere haud operæ pretium fuerit, cum ubique obvia sint: ac præcipuè (ut annotarunt jampridem docti) in lib. Job, qui totus Arabismum spirat: certè in illo explicando nisi linguam Arabicam vice clavis adhibuissent jam olim interpretes, frustra fuissent. Hæc sublatâ, alia occurrere videtur in his verbis difficultas; alia inter eam quam secuti sunt olim LXX & Aposto-lus, & quam hodie sequuntur Judæi & recentiores, discrepantia. Dum enim apud illos legitur αυμασσε & αφανισθη, suspicionem movet habuisse quæ secuti sunt exemplaria, תמרו & והתמו, mutato primum ordine, deinde & verborum altero, eodémque à themate תמה Tamah ad thema תמם Tamam è geminantibus secundam radicalem translato. At quæ hoc statuendi necessitas, cùm nihil in Græcis amplius contineri videatur, quàm in Hebraicis, eo quo jam & modo, & ordine leguntur? Nam והתמו benè per αυμασσε reddi non est qui dubitet; quid ni & תמרו per αφανισθη? neque enim illud postulare videtur, ut quis prorsus consummetur aut consumatur, sed præ admiratione & stupore ab eo quo fuerat statu mutetur, & quasi corrumpatur: quam esse thematis תמה Tamah vim ostendit ejus in lingua Arabica usus, in qua تامة Tameha est corrumpi & in pejus mutari, inde de cibo dictum valet تغير ريحة وطعم mutatos esse ejusdem odorem & saporem, item de ove dicitur cujus lac statim mutatur ac corrumpitur. Ac talis hîc sufficere videtur mutatio ex mente Ill. Grotii, qui ad hunc locum ita commentatur, αφανισθητε, nempe τα περιωπα, ut Mat. vi. 16. Expallescite. *Syrus V. HABBA CUC. II. 4.

Heb. הנה עפלה לא ישרה נפשו בו

Chald. הא רשיעיא אמרין בלבהון לירת כל אלן:

Et Impii dicunt in cordibus suis, Illa omnia non futura sunt.

Syr. ܐܢܝܢ ܕܝܡܝܢܐ ܕܝܠܐ ܕܝܠܐ

Iniquitate non oblectatur anima ejus.

Arab. وان فخر لم تسر نفسي به

Si tædeat illum, non delectabitur eo anima mea.

LXX. Ἐὰν ὑποστείλῃται, ἐκ εὐδοκῆς ἡ ψυχὴ μου ἐν αὐτῷ.

Interlin. Ecce elata est, non recta anima ejus in eo.

HEBR. X. 38.

Ἐὰν ὑποστείλῃται, ἐκ εὐδοκῆς ἡ ψυχὴ μου ἐν αὐτῷ.

V. Vulg. Quòd si subtraxerit se, non placebit animæ meæ.

Bez. At si quis se subduxerit, non probat eum animus meus.

Angl. But if any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him.

Collatio instituitur inter Habbac. ii. 4. &

Heb. x. 38. nec non Amos ix. 12. & Act. xv. 17. Psal. xix. 5. & Rom. x. 19. quâ lectionem textûs Hebraici hodiernam eandem esse in istis V. T. locis, quam olim secuti sunt LXX & Apostolus, adstruitur. Illustrantur Ex. iv. 25, 26. Ex. xiii. 18. Psal. xxii. 17. atque alia obiter loca.

A Pud eundem Prophetam, cap. ii. 4. occurrunt & alia quæ ab Apostolo, Heb. x. 38. (versionem LXX, ut creditur, secuto,) aliter recitata quàm in textu Hebraico, qui hodiè manibus teritur, sonare censentur, aliter ipsum (vel eos, quos secutus est, Interpretes) legisse, argumento esse doctis videntur. הנה עפלה לא ישרה נפשו בו Hinneb uppelab, &c. hæc vulgò in hunc sensum sumi solent, Ecce extollitur, non recta est anima ejus in eo. Græca Ἐὰν ὑποστείλῃται, ἐκ εὐδοκῆς ἡ ψυχὴ μου ἐν αὐτῷ in diversum abeunt sensum. Suspicatur ergò Illustr. Grotius legisse ipsos pro עפלה Uppela עלפה Alepha, & pro נפשו Naphsho נפשי Naphshi. At quid tandem hîc est, quod τῷ עפלה Alefa magis conveniat quam τῷ עפלה Uppelab? præfertim cùm ex sententia R. Tanchum עפל idem valeat ac עלף in illo Jonæ iv. 8. בניך עלפו Et defecit, aut Isa. li. 20. שכבו בראש כל חוצות Filii tui defecerunt, jacuerunt in capite omnium platearum; qui etiam præter vulgo receptam verbi notionem, quâ Elatum esse, & extolli significat, tertiam quandam recenset à Græco ὑποστείλῃται minimè alienam. viz. بعد longè remotum esse, Tardari, Retrabere se, petitam ab עופל Ophel, clivo sc. الصعب الذي هو الوصل البعد لعلوة ووعره qui non sine difficultate præ alitudine & asperitate suâ ascenditur, quæ licet eidem loco isti minùs quadrare videatur, cæteris tamen præfertur ab Ebn Jannabio, quamvis sequiùs prophetiæ tardanti ac quasi se subducenti attributa. Sensus, inquit, est بعدت ذات وتاخرت هذه postquam longè remotum sit, ac recesserit, & dilatatum fuerit hoc, quod denuntiatum est, non recta est anima ejus in ipso, quæ nihil eorum quæ minatus est Propheta, timet. Ideo autem quod de persona, seu anima impii affirmari quod hîc dicitur, non de prophetia, putat R. Tanchum, utramvis priorum significatum huic præfert. R. Moses Kimchius aliam adhuc interpretationem affert, etiam à fratre ipsius Davide laudatam, in qua non minùs subducendi notionem habemus, scil. ut sensus sit, Anima impii, quæ non est recta in ipso, nec in Deo fiduciam collocat, עפלה Uppelab, i. e. inquit, שמה עצמה בעפל se ponit in clivo, seu, se in rupem & arcem subducit, ἐκλείπτειν, puta, & ἐλιγοψυχῶσα: verùm justus, qui confidit in Domino, non opus habet ut se in arcem recipiat, sed fide suâ vivit. Glossarium Hebræo-Arab. aliter adhuc, עפלה Uppelab (inquit) est تعجب Obstupuit, perplexus, confusus, conturbatus est. Has omnes juxta sententias, eâ tantùm exceptâ, quæ extollendi, vel se efferendi intellectum præfert, non longè à scopo aberraverit qui עפלה Uppelab ὑποστείλῃται verterit. Sed nondum Arabes consulimus, qui aliam nobis suggerunt, dum غف quod Hebraico عפל respondet (y in plerisque in g migrante) interpretantur ترك سها عنه Omittere, seu negligere, aliò animum avertere; ^h quâ solum ratione motus acerrimi judicii Vir, Lud. de Dieu, non meliùs reddi posse עפלה Uppelab, quàm ὑποστείλῃται, fidenter asserit. Quòd si ab interpretationum diversitate de de exemplarium, quæ secuti sunt Interpretes antiqui, discrepantibus lectionibus concludere liceat, suspicari forsan posset quis Syrum simplicis V. T. versionis auctorem hîc pro עולה legisse עולה, cum vertat, ובעולה לא צביא נפשה. Et in iniquitate non delectat se anima ejus: hoc obiter. Quod ad ea quæ sequuntur, לא ישרה נפשו בו, autumat Doctiss. Capellus, LXX qui vertunt ἀν εὐδοκεῖ ἡ ψυχὴ μου ἐν αὐτῷ, vocem illam (scil. ישרה Yasberah) accepisse quasi esset à radice Arabibus usitata שרר nempe سارر Sarra: at si res se ita haberet, litera י ad radicem nequaquam pertineret, sed futuri formativa esset, quod formâ regulari esset يسر Yasero, adeoque ה paragogicum, & vocales prorsus mutandæ. Eò autem confugere minimè necessarium videtur, cum ישר alibi frequenter per ἀρέσκειν vertatur, quod eodem ferè recidit ac εὐδοκεῖν, illudque dicatur rectum esse in oculis Domini, quo ipse sibi complacere. Verba igitur prout in textu Hebr. se habent ita sonant, Ecce subducitur, aut negligitur, vel subductio fit, aut neglectus, seu desertio est (agentem subtrahendo & verbis impersonaliter positis) non recta est anima ejus cum eo, i. e. Non delectatur anima ejus [vel, sibi complacet] eo; ut ita ad Deum referantur posteriora. Nec quicquam superest difficultatis, nisi quòd pro נפשו Naphsho, anima ejus, in Græca versione personâ primâ efferatur Anima mea, quasi נפשי Naphshi, legeretur. At non infrequens est in textu Biblico à persona ad personam transitus. Exempli (ni fallor) satis ad rem appositâ habemus, Psal. xxiv. 6. זה דור דורשו מבקשי פניך יעקב. Hæc est generatio quærentium eum, quærentium faciem tuam, Jacob. Ubi LXX personarum Enallagen statuentes, reddunt Αὕτη ἡ γενεὰ ζητούντων τὸν κύριον, ζητούντων τὸ προσώπον τοῦ Θεοῦ Ἰακώβ. Sic & Vulg. Hæc est generatio quærentium eum, quærentium faciem Dei Jacob. Et Psal. lix. 10. עו אליך אשמה Fortitudo ejus, ad te respiciam, ubi dum LXX vertunt, τὸ κατὰ μέτρον, πρὸς σὲ φυλάξω, & Syrus, mutato verborum ordine, אלהא לך אשמה, Deus, te glorificabo, quia tu es refugium meum, affixum tertiæ personæ in primæ proprium transtulerunt, ut ita de Deo intelligendum monerent, non de alio aliquo, quod Hebræorum plerique de Saulis robore dictum intelligunt. Quam ipsam licentiam Interpretes Græci, ut sensum commodius redderent, hîc etiam sibi sumendam duxerunt, ut ita verba ad Deum referenda, atque ipsius personâ efferri docerent. Nec interim absurdum forsan erit, ut, si ei in quem cadit reprehensio tribuatur affixum, Non est recta anima ipsius in ipso, paraphrastice exponatur, & ad sensum optimè, Non oblectatur anima mea ipso; ideo enim non placet impius Dei animæ (i. e. Deo) quod ipse se in anima sua, vel apud se, non rectè habeat. Neque ita se ad literam interpretes hosce adstrinxisse videtur, quin ut sensui commodè exprimendo, à verborum sono aliquoties discedant: exemplo sit illud quod occurrit cap. xv. libri ejusdem, Αἰὲτ. scil. v. 17. ὅπως ἂν ἐκζητήσωσιν οἱ κατὰλοιποὶ τῶν ἀνθρώπων τὸν κύριον, καὶ πάντα τὰ ἔθνη ἐφ' ἃς ἐπικέκληται τὸ ὄνομα μου ἐπ' αὐτοὺς. Quæ licet verborum sono ab Hebraicis למען ירשו את שארית אדום וכל הגוים &c. Amosi ix. 12. unde desumpta sunt, satis discrepant, utpote quæ sonant, Ut hæreditate possideant Edom, & omnes gentes super quas invocatum est nomen meum: & variantem lectionem statuentibus facillè occurrat ירשו pro ירשו unius literæ mutatione substituendum, אדם pro אדום Adam pro אדום Edom, vocalibus tantum mutatis, & אתי pro את additâ literulâ, ne excidisse videatur illud quod quærendum est, sensum tamen adeò commodè exprimunt, ut non facillè mihi persuadere possim eos (Apost. sc. & quos ille secutus est) aliter olim quam nos hodiè legisse; aut si jam iterum vertendum haberent, aliter reddere voluisse; cum jam intimos verborum recessus optimè pandant, ac lectori notum faciant, hoc non tam de terrenâ terræ Idumææ hæreditate aut populi illius subjugatione intelligendum, quam de omnium gentium ad fidem Christi conversione, nec aliter ipsos à Christo ejusque Apostolis subjugandos prædicare, quam verbi gladio; vel alio sub jugo mittendos, quam disciplinæ Christi, cui in hæreditatem dati sunt fines terræ, ut ita regni cælorum doctrinâ instituti omnes Dominum unanimi consensu quærent, ipsique nomen darent: (atque hoc innuit Cl. Beza, dum ad locum annotat, Hebræa veritas habet, Ut possideant reliquias Edom; sed idem sensus est, cum eos demum possideat Ecclesia qui Dominum requirant. Quamvis addat, Videntur tamen Græci interpretes pro אדום Edom legisse אדם Adam, at nullâ urgente necessitate, cur ita statuamus.) Neque enim insolens puto esse ut unius gentis nomine plures intelligantur, ut Israelis omnes quotquot ubique Christo nomen dederint, etiam vel Idumæi; quidni & Edom nomine alii quotquot ante conversionem ipsi inimici erant? præsertim cum & explicationis gratiâ addat, Et omnes gentes, &c. neque erit quod contra hoc objiciant Judæi, qui Romanos, imò omnes Christianos, Edomi (quâ ratione ipsi viderint,) reliquias esse volunt. Eadem est Cl. V. Ludovici de Dieu sententia, qui etiam ut rem faciliorem reddat, verti Prophetæ verba mallet, Ut possideant (nempe restauratum Davidis tabernaculum) reliquiæ Edom, & omnes gentes, &c. & per verbum יִרְשׁוּ Possideant, non tam possessionem, quam possidendi studium à LXX intellectum autumat, idemque requirendi verbo satis feliciter expressum. Videsis Cl. V. animadversiones in Act. xv. 17. Hæc certè omnia facilius concedi possunt, quam tot in uno commate errores commissos atque admissos fuisse, (præsertim ubi non summâ curâ & reverentiâ ferè ad superstitionem nimiam, exarati sint libri,) nisi exemplar unicè superstes à blattis ac tineis erosumingas. Parem ob rationem nolunt è doctis nec pauci nec infimi, ideo variantem lectionem admitti, Psal. xix. 5. licèt ibi jam legatur בְּכָל הָאָרֶץ יָצָא קוֹם in omnem terram exivit Kavam, quod reddi solet, Linea eorum, cum apud LXX, & Rom. x. 18. habeatur, ἐκ πασάν τὴν γῆν ἐξῆλθεν ὁ φθόγγος αὐτῶν; In omnem terram exivit sonus eorum; unde concludunt multi lectum ab illis non קוֹם Kavam, Linea eorum, sed קוֹלָם Kolam, vox eorum. At hoc negans Cl. Rivet, Dicimus (inquit) Veteres illos Interpretes, non de verbo ad verbum reddidisse, sed ad sensum respexisse, qui jam utrobique fuit, sive lineam & normam, &c. sive sonum dicamus, nisi quòd vox illa posterior enarrandi verbo immediatius respondet, quamvis etiam verbo indicandi appositè linea & norma respondeant, &c. quare concludit, Nullam esse corruptionem in Hebræo, neque aliter fuisse lectum vel tempore Hieronymi, vel antè. Quam in Doctissimi viri sententiam qui descendere recusaverit, ne tamen statim corruptionis textum arguat, aut קוֹלָם Kolam pro קוֹם Kavam reponat: aliam, si libet, viam mecum experiatur, scil. dictioni קוֹ Kaw significatum suum (licèt minùs notum) restituendo, non ipsum è medio tollendo. Fiet id (ni fallor) linguæ etiam Arabice ope, quâ plusquam probabile reddetur, ipsi olim clamoris, seu vociferationis, non minùs quàm lineæ seu amussis intellectum tribui solitum. Conjecturæ ratio inde quòd in ea قَوْ formâ (ut fieri solet in ejusmodi verbis) quadrilitera ex primæ radicalis repetitione à themate قوي Kawa

(quod Hebraico קוֹ Kava & קוֹה Kavah cum He leni seu quiescente, responderet) idem denotet ac صاح Clamare, exclamare, vociferari, teste Al Firuzabadio in Oceano suo, in quo forsan & usitatoris ejusdem thematis intellectus (scil. fortitudinis, roboris, & potentie) vestigia sunt non obscura; ut sit non quovis modo, sed μετὰ βῆσος φθόγγος, fortiter & altâ voce clamare, ut & hîc quoque locum habeat regula in nominum à themate suo formatione notissima, زيادة البناء تدل على زيادة المعنى, Accessio literarum significatûs accessionem seu intensiorem denotat. Saltem hujusmodi formæ frequentativæ (seu ut loquitur Amira, Gram. Syr. p. 418. iteratæ) actionis repetitionem includunt, ut ita verbum istud iterationem ac ingeminatiorem vocis denotare videatur, quod & confirmare videntur Dictiss. Grammatici Al Jaubarii verba, qui idem valere ait القوضاة قوَي Kauka, ac ضوضي Dauda; atqui اصوات الناس Al Dauda, ipso explicante, est اصوات الناس وجلبتهم Hominum voces & inclamationes seu conclamationes, quales nempe equos in stadio, seu deposito pignore certantes ad cursum incitantium, id enim est الجلبة; vel ut Al Firuzabadius, اصوات الناس في الحرب voces in bello se mutuo excitantium, ut & formâ simpliciori ضوة Dawab: ita (inquit) dicunt سمعت ضوة الناس Audiavi Dawab, i. e. vociferationem hominum. Ac sic forsan & قوة Kawab idem olim fuerit ac geminatum Kaukab, quod formæ simplici tam significatum quàm ortum suum acceptum ferat, ut & Hebraicæ קוֹ vel קוֹה utrumque eorum. Hoc licèt omnium maximè convenire vocis hujus rationi videatur, unde & primum ei locum attribuimus, nequaquam tamen ab ejus quod est inter has linguas commercii & convenientiæ analogia recedemus, si ad قوة Kawaba, i. e. קוֹה cum He, الظاهر (ut loquuntur) claro, seu manifesto, (Mappikatum Hebræorum Grammatici vulgò vocant) lectorem remittamus: neque enim insolens videbitur si quod in altera harum linguarum in He clarè pronunciato, in altera eadem quiescenti desinat: in pluribus fit; imò & in una eademque quod naturâ mobile est, instar quiescentis excidit: quorum utrumque eadem exempla confirmatum dabunt. שפה Hebraicum in linguam Arab. migrans He mobile acquirit, ut sit شفة, quo tamen in formatione nominis vim suam amittente fit شفة, quod in plurali شفاء refumit: à פה Os, Hebr. fit قوة Arab. cum He moto, quod tamen in قم inde formato rursus excidit: sed res manifestior est quàm ut pluribus eam prosequi opus

opus sit. Jam verò קוה קוה scil. Kawah, cum He mobili ejusdem est cum verbo prius memorato significatûs, viz. Clamavit, Exclamavit, imò sensu loco isti mirè (ut mihi videtur) commodo, cum sit ita clamare, ut alter alteri respondeat voce mutuo agnitâ, quasi signo utrinque dato, ut ita cœli se invicem inclamare fingantur, ut cum cantarent pariter astra matutina, & jubilarent omnes filii Dei, Job xxxviii. 7. quomodo & verbo קוה juxta significatûs sui rationem jam indicatam optimè convenit cum iis quæ hoc Psal. sequuntur, Exultat ut Gigas ad currendam viam; seu, lætatur instar viri fortis conclamitantium plausu & clamore excitati, cursum suum peragere. Quidam illud de gallinæ, quem post exclusum ovum tollere solet, κωκυσμῶ seu clangore, qui etiam exultantis vox est, interpretantur; quod & verum est; at nec una ea, nec prima (ut videtur) verbi notio, cum & Al Firuzabadius alterum quem diximus intellectum præmittat, & صاح vociferatus est, genere masculino ponat, ac Jaubarius, ut de homine ipsum loqui pateat, primâ personâ قوہت Ego vociferatus sum, cum tertiâ aliâs præmittant, efferat. Quicquid sit, nequeo mihi persuadere aut LXX aut Syrum legisse קולם Kolam, cum aliis hîc utantur dictionibus quàm quibus קול Kol in præcedentibus explicârunt, nam & LXX hîc φέρωσιν habent qui Kolam, v. præcedente φωνῶν reddiderunt, nec alibi uspiam (ni fallor) φέρωσιν ad קול exprimendum adhibent. Sic & Syrus, qui קולם eadem prorsus voce suis cum Hebræis communi קלהון reddidit, hîc quasi ad aliud aliquod verbum enarrandum סברתהון enuntiationem posuit, quod dictioni קוה vel קוה eo quem indicavimus sensu optimè respondet. Aliam etiam exhibet Doctiss. Capellus conjecturam quæ lectioni receptæ confirmandæ inserviat, sc. Interpretes forsan accepisse קום quasi esset à חוה quod Chaldaicè & Syriacè significat eloqui, enuntiare, indicare, immò & Hebraicè, ut v. 3. יחווה Indicat scientiam. Ex his quid amplecti velit penès lectoris judicium esto; non esse cur à lectione vulgò receptâ recedat, ni fallor, constat. His verò, quæ ad linguæ Arabice usum in Veteris immò utriusque Testamenti textu feliciter enodando demonstrandum protulimus, alia qui ei vel mediocrem operam impenderit, & plura addere poterit & meliora, idque in aliis etiam generibus, ut Theologo perpetui usûs esse probetur.

Ita certè Viris hujus sæculi primariis visam, atque in partes ubique vocatam, qui eorum opera inspexerit, nescire non poterit. Quæ ab aliis dicta sunt supervacaneum erit huc transferre: unius tantum exempli lectorem paucis monere liceat, quod accuratissimâ de verbis Sephora diatribâ, à raræ eruditionis Viro Josepho Mede linguâ nobis vernaculâ conscriptâ, ideoque paucioribus notum, occurrit. Ibi enim D. V. hoc inter cætera argumento utitur ad probandum solenni formulâ puerum quo die circumcisionis Sacramento initiaretur חתן Chatan appellari solitum, quod inde apud Arabes verbum istud Circumcisionis etiam significatum acquisiverit. Ac certè hoc binorum quæ ad morem istum confirmandum adducit argumentorum firmissimum videtur. Alterum enim ab Aben Ezra, aliorumque testimonio petatum, eo infirmatur quod docet ⁱ R. David Kimchius, illud ab ipsis מסכר, seu ex conjectura tantum affirmari. Qui plenior verborum istorum explicationem desiderat, ipsam Diatriben adeat, vel saltem eruditissimi Viri Christophori Cartwrighti Annotationes in Exodum ^k. His tantum ad utilitatem linguæ Arabice indicandam annotatis, liceat interim de gemino dictionis illius apud Arabes intellectu aliqua subnectere, quæ & forsan ad loci istius illustrationem aliquantulum conferant. Primò igitur ut in lingua Hebraica, sic & Arabica thema ختن Affinitatem contrahendi notionem habet; unde non solum Socer, sed & tota eorum qui mulieri sanguine conjuncti, series, scil. Pater, fratres, patruus, avunculi, &c. nomine ختن Chatan gaudet; ut &, juxta nonnullos respectu mulieris, quicumque maritum consanguinitatis & cognationis titulis attingunt. Eadem etiam appellatione gaudet Gener, vel الرجل المتزوج Vir qui se conjugii jure populo alicui inseruerit, hic ab omnibus istis Chatan appellatur; qui tamen in lingua Hebraica ita distinguuntur, ut ille חתן Choten, hic verò Chatan audiat. Hoc est quod dicit Ebn Jannabius, الختن وان كان مشتركا في لسان العرب لوالد الزوجة واخيها وانزوج الابنة فان العبرانيين قد فرقوا بينهم في اللفظ, Nomen Chatan licet in lingua Arab. tam patri uxoris ac fratri ejus, quàm filie marito competat, inter hos tamen diversâ nominis formâ & pronuntiatione distinguunt Hebræi. Inde & nomen ختونة Chatunab & Chatun, ejusmodi affinitatis contractionem, ut Hebr. חתונה denotat, & تزوج الرجل المرأة Cum vir mulierem [aquod aliquos] in uxorem ducit.

ditur ὁ φίλος τῶ νυμφίῳ, ut & hunc etiam intellectum (^m quamvis forsan minùs propriè) cum Hebraico חתן habeat. Præter hos verò significatus alium etiam habet thema istud apud Arabes usitatissimum, Hebræis fortè ignotum, vel saltem oblivioni traditum, quem tamen nescio an jam memorato posteriorem, atque ab eo oriundum cum Doctiss. Medo statuam. Est ille, quo Circumcisionem denotat. Indè ختن Chatan, Circumcidere, ختن Chaten, Qui circumcidit, ختن Chatin, & ختنون Machtun; Circumcisus, ختان Chetan, Locus qui circumciditur, item ipsa circumcisio, ut ختانة Chetanab, &c. His observatis constat חתן דמים tam apud Arabes quàm Hebræos sonare, Generum vel sponsum sanguinis. Sephora interim, cui Arabica vernacula fuit, non hunc solum, sed & alterum ejusdem vocis significatum respexisse videtur, atque utrumque simul verbis suis indigitasse: quæ quid si ita intelligantur, ac si marito suo dixisset, Verè & merito tu mihi Chatan diceris, utroque enim sensu nomen hoc tibi competit, non eo solum quo à parentibus & consanguineis meis Gener, &c. appellaris, sed & isto qui sanguinis effusionem innuit & requirit. Hoc si Mosen allocuta fuerit: sin puerum, ut mavult Cl. Medus, (quæ & ⁿ Ebn Jannabii sententia est) tum is erit quem statuit vir Doctiss. verborum sensus, & חתן eundem usum habebit quo & ابو Pater, & اخو Frater apud Arabes, ut Gener vel sponsus sanguinis sit, vel sanguine acquisitus seu redemptus, vel ut Ebn Jann. sanguini, i. morti valdè vicinus. Ita ille لا شرافة على الموت quod parum à morte absuit, ipsum Chatan Damim, i. عروسا sponsum occisum, i. penè occisum vocat. Utrovis sensu sumas, allusio optimè constabit, si ita verba ista חתן דמים למולת Chatan Damim lemuloth, Arabice sic efferas, ختن الدمر من اجل الختان Chatan oldam (vel in pl. الدم Aldemai) men aj-lil'chetan. Hæc interim à nobis שקלא ut loquuntur) seu exercitationis tantum gratiâ dicta sunt. Plenior loci enarrationem qui velit, apud ipsum (quem diximus) Doctiss. Virum videat.

muslim multum inter doctos disputatur, variæque proferuntur sententiæ, & adhuc sub judice lis est: ad quam tollendam nondum, quod sciam, à quopiam in partes vocata est lingua Arabica, quæ tamen si consulatur, operam forsan nec inutilem, nec spernendam conferet. Quæ ab aliis de verbi istius sensu genuino dicta sunt videre est cum apud alios, tum imprimis in erudita summi Viri Nic. Fulleri ea de re dissertatione, & Doctiss. Cartwrighti notis ad ^o Exod. xiii. quæ repetere animus hic non est. Hoc tantum addere liceat, mihi omnium quæ loci istius adduci possunt explicationum simplicissimam ac commodissimam videri, quam suggerit ejusdem dictionis apud Arabes usus, ut vertatur, sc. Agmine ad exercitus formam, seu ordinem, composito ascenderunt, seu egressi sunt, non tam quod sub quinta costa armis accincti (ut volunt Rabino-rum plerique) quàm quod in ordines suos distributi. Apud Arabes enim خميس Chamis dicitur exercitus, (non quod armis ad quintam costam induti) sed لانهم خمس quod ipsorum corpus quasi è pluribus membris aggregatum quinque partibus seu ordinibus constare soleret, quæ sunt المقدمة ^p Prima acies; القلب Cor; الممنة Dextrum cornu; الميسرة Sinistrum; الساق Crus [extrema acies.] Quare optimè vertisse videtur Interpretes ille, quisquis Judeorum fuit qui Josue cæterosque libros Historicos Vet. Test. in linguam Arabicam traduxit, verbum istud متعيبين Motaabiina, quod forsan à חבנה Hebraico mutato ח in ע, ut aliàs in his linguis fieri solet, e. g. in ארעה Syriaco, ab Hebr. ארץ terra, &c. Est enim تعبئة الجيش تهيبته في مواضع Tabiah ordinata exercitus in locis suis dispositio, vel in loca sua distributio. Melius, puto, quam R. Tanchum, qui eo loci explicat חמושים Chamushim, אלו חמוש Accinctos Alchomesh, i. e. ad Ilia, indè quod dicitur, Et percussit eum ad bachomesh, & similiter, inquit, חלוצים העברו, Chalutzim transibitis dicitur, id est, accincti lumbis qui חלוצים chaletzim audiunt, quo argumento usus est etiam Aben Ezra ad sensum hujus vocis hoc loco eruendum, sed parum, ut videtur, firmo. Nam si חמושים chamushim sint in modum exercitus ordinati, ut sic ab ordine describantur, non incongruum erit ut alibi chalutzim ab armis, postquam iis instructi fuerint, dicantur, Tali autem, qualem innuimus, ordine perfectos Israelitas, fatis indicat quod legimus, in textu legitur מִיֹּרְדִי בֹר, Miyauredi bor, καὶ. Non magis, quàm hæc, à regulâ A descendantibus in foveam: ita enim accipit Syr. qui vertit מִיֹּרְדִי בֹר, & sed aliter terminata, in quibus pluralis LXX qui ἀπὸ τῶν ἀλαβανόντων εἰς λάκ- nota excidit, omittamus. Rariora equidem

7 Obijci forsan possit in hoc exemplo parum esse momenti, cùm vocales appositæ non ad Cetib מִיֹּרְדִי, sed ad Keri מִיֹּרְדִי spectent, quod Miyordi legunt, vel monente Kimchio, Miyaredi, vertuntque à descendere me, ut sit מִיֹּרְדִי seu infinitivum, (quod tamen formâ usitatori esset מִיֹּרְדִי Meridti) qui Cetib retinuerunt legisse, מִיֹּרְדִי Miyorede, vel Miyoredi (ut Cappel p. 129.) Resp. Si Miyoredi legatur, ac pro particip. pl. habeatur, æquè quod nos volumus confirmat. His tamen ne temerè assentiamus sunt quæ suadeant, & dubia prius solvenda. Nisi enim Majoreta (vel quicumque tandem fuerint qui דו Keri in margine apposuerunt) reperissent מִיֹּרְדִי ita uti nunc habetur punctatim vocalibus voci מִיֹּרְדִי convenientibus, quid opus habuissent ipsam substituere; sensus æquè (si non meliùs) fuit legendo Miyorede, à descendentibus, ut præter jam laudatos Interpretes, ipsum etiam Kimchium consulenti, aliæque Psalmorum loca in quibus mentio fit מִיֹּרְדִי בֹר è quorum numero se magna Dei gratia exemptum hic gratus agnoscat, perspicuum fiet. Quòd si in aliis exemplaribus (ut vult Avenarius) מִיֹּרְדִי reperissent & absque punctis vocalibus, quid ni Miyorede eliso Vau cholem nihil impediende Analogiâ, legissent? præsertim aliis illis in quibus expressum ita monentibus: quin etiam מִיֹּרְדִי Miyorede suis (quas volunt) vocalibus insignitum in iis, quæ ipsum legunt, reperissent, illas sine necessitate abjicere, ut peregrinas, infinitivi (ut aiunt) proprias, earum loco adderent, laud aui unquam fuissent. Eadem ferè ratio est & aliorum in quibus מִיֹּרְדִי Kamets postponitur, e. g. יֹסֵף Yausaph, 1 Sam. xxvii. ubi Keri est יֹסֵף Yasaph: יֹסֵף Yaucelu, Jos. xv. 63. ubi legi jubent Yacelu, & מִלֹּשֶׁנִי Melausheni, Psal. ci. 5. legunt מִלֹּשֶׁנִי Melausheni, ut & פֶּתַח Patach, veluti הוֹשֵׁב Hausbar, Pf. v. 9. ubi legunt הוֹשֵׁב Hausbar, in his atque ejusmodi aliis quid necesse fuit consonas mutare nisi vocales, quæ iis minus quadrate videbantur, adscriptas reperissent? legere enim poterant sensu æquè commodo ac favente Grammaticâ iisdem literis per vocales tantum diversas prolatis, Yoseph, Yucelu, Melausheni, Hosher. Si vocales pro arbitrio suo addendas habuissent, quid opus fuisset ejusmodi apponere oh quas consonæ essent mutandæ? Eas invenisse videntur quas loco movere non aui, literas quibus eas magis convenire judicarent in margine adscriberent. Quam sententiam nostram non parum confirmant quæ de loco proximè laudato scribit C. V. Ludovicus de Dieu in Grammatica linguarum Orientalium, p. 284. ubi postquam primam radicalem Jod in conjug. Hipbil. mutari dixisset, apud Hebræos & Chaldeos in Vau quiescens, apud Syros autem in mobile per diphthongum au, addit, Syriasmum hunc redolent in Hebraismo הוֹשֵׁב Hausbar [Dirige, Psal. v. 9. הוֹשֵׁב Hautze] Educ, Gen. viii. 16. Ubi Majorethæ quidem notarunt pro legendum, nos autem scripturam retinendam putamus & rectam esse secundum formam Syriacam. Tantus certè eorum quæ hoc modo cum ו (ut volunt) superfluo, vel cum vocali haud suâ connexo, scribuntur, numerus est, ut non per errorem vel meram scribarum osecitantiam irrepisse videantur, sed potius & formam & pronuntiationem illis notam fuisse, licet jam ignotam. Et quid si pro otiosa aliquando habeatur litera ista, vel ad vocalem producendam, aut dilatandam facere, ut in lingua Arabica solet, ubi عَلِيٌّ oratio, Salaton legitur, עֲלִיָּה Eleemosyna, Zacaton, חַיָּה Vita, Hiyaton, cum aliis id genus, in quibus nullus literæ ו sonus auditur, & tantum quiescentis officio fungitur, unde & indifferenter scribi possunt עֲלִיָּה עלִיָּה, &c. Ac quis neget ut Chaldaismos & Syriismos, ita multos occurrere in textu sacro Arabismos, imò & à gentium vicinarum commercio acceptas loquendi formas, vel potius ipsius Hebraismi Idiotismos varios, aut dialectos pro locorum & temporum differentiis, non tantum in verborum significatu, sed & formâ & prolatione conspicuas? Ephraimitæ (testante Scriptura) Shin non pronuntiabant, sed per Sin ea efferebant quæ alii per Shin: Galilæi sermone suo prodebantur, Matt. xxvi. 73. ad Samaritanorum nempe & Syrorum idioma propius accedente (ut annotat Grotius) quam sermo Hierosolymitanorum. Observetur unâ Spiritum Sanctum eorum quorum ore loquebatur, dialecto etiam usum videri, juxta regulam à Maimonide traditam in Moreh, lib. ii. c. 29. Unumquemque Prophetam peculiare quid habere, & eâ linguâ, eaque loquendi ratione, quæ ipsi est familiaris & consuetâ, ipsum impelli à Prophetia sua, ad loquendum ei qui ipsum [ita loquentem] intelligit. i. e. (uti è Rabbinorum ad librum istum Commentariis annotat Cl. V. Joannes Buxtorfius F.) si propheta est Hebræus, impellit eum Prophetia ut loquatur Hebraicè, si Arabs, Arabicè, &c. Si purum & ornatum sermonem vel stilum habet, eodem modo Prophetiam suam eloquitur, si minus ornatum, minus ornate quoque Prophetiam suam profert. Si ergo Ephraimitæ Ephraimiticè, si Galilæi Galilaicè. Hinc, quamvis de דו Keri & Cetib ratione in alto historię antiquæ silentio, tantæque & tam incertâ varietate quæ magnam causarum atque originum varietatem arguit, adeo ut dubios hærare se fateantur literaturæ Hebraicæ peritissimi, nihil habeamus quod statuere possimus, conjectari tamen absque temeritate notâ liceat, hinc lectionum istarum non paucas ortum traxisse, quòd cùm ea quæ scriberentur dialecti forsan rudioris, aut formæ quæ minus jam in usu, esse viderentur, seu Scribæ qui codicibus emendatè describendis præerant, formam puriorem, & usitatiorem, vel Grammaticis canonibus magis stabilitam è regione adscriperint, ac per eam efferrî voluerint, quod tamen pro immutatione vel innovatione haberi non mereretur, ut si quod Propheta quis Ephraimi stirpe ortus, שִׁבְלֵת Sibboleth scripsisset, Scriba quis Hierosolymitanus Sibboleth per Shin efferrî jussisset, haud aliud quid scripsisset, vel textum corrupisse dicendus esset. Idiotismorum istorum, nec pauca, nec obscura, uti diximus, vestigia in vicinis Syrorum & Arabum dialectis remanent. Quæ Syra vel Chaldaica suggerit, passim in Grammaticis, Lexicis, & Commentariis, à doctis annotata sunt, atque eorum observatione simul tollitur omnis quæ ab ו in secunda persona verborum fœm. latente, oritur, difficultas. Afferit Capellus videri Syros illud habere à forma illa Hebræorum minus jam usitatâ ⁴. Quod etiam de Vau sæpissimè apud Chaldeos redundante & otioso tam in medio quam principio dictionum, ut cum scribit וִילָוּן Vilavon Vela, Vau utroque loco superfluo, &c. dici forsan possit; idque magis quòd istiusmodi exempla apud Hebræos Chaldeorum dialectum suis exprimentes literis, & sonis, non apud Syros suo more loquentes & scribentes occurrunt. Si eodem modo & Arabismi annotentur, non paucae tollentur quæ ex anomala, ut jam videtur, literarum transpositione, literarum quiete, otio, redundantia, defectu aut usu promiscuo, quæ in lingua ista notissima, aliisque causis oriuntur. אֵת Atta Tu M, quoties sine ו scribitur, ut anomalum notatur; dicunt semper Arabes أنت Atta, (nun enim non elidunt.) In הַמּוֹתָיִם 2 Reg. xi. 2. ו loco non suo positum observant pro הַמּוֹתָיִם. At Arabes utrique ו illud postponentes in con. Secunda מוֹתָיִם dicerent, in Quarta מוֹתָיִם: In המּוֹתָיִם eodem c. v. 4. & 9. literam ו redundare dicunt, ut Arabes ipsam otiosam retinentes מוֹתָיִם scribunt, אֵת c. xiii. 6. quod הַתְּשִׁיָּה cum ו legendum monent, conferri potest cum Arabum forma أَتَشِي. Ibid. v. 17. per Apocopen legi videtur pro מוֹתָיִם (quanquam hoc non pro Keri annotatur,) causa istius Apocopes forsan non male peti potest è lingua Arabica, ubi Imperativum præcedens futuro Apocopen inducit. Hæc, quod uno intuitu sub oculos librum 2 Regum inspicienti caderent, annotavi, qui id operæ pretium duxerit, meliora, seu magis appositâ facillè addet. Ubique obvias habebit istiusmodi formas, quas Arabismos dicimus, non tam quod Judei antiquiores eas ab Arabibus mutuati sint, quam quod (uti de Syrorum usu literæ ו affirmasse Capellum vidimus) Hebraismi antiqui dialecti vel formas aliquas, quarum exempla jam minus usitata, ubi in Scripturis occurrunt, pro anomalis habentur, nobis exhibeat lingua illa, quæ parentem suam in multis refert, & quam latè olim patuerit ostendit. Ac certè quod de lingua Hebraica diximus, haud à vero alienum probabitur aliarum linguarum exemplo, si quis loquendi, pronuntiandi & scribendi formas antiquas cum novis, vel diversarum דמוגלשסון provinciarum dialectos inter se conferat, ubi non minorem in vocalium & diphthongorum ו & sono, & promiscuo dem hæc in textu Biblico, ideoque pro Anomalis habentur, cum præcepta quæ habemus Grammatica ad ejus unius exempla confirmata sint; quòd si plura Hebraismi antiqui monumenta extarent, plura forsan occurrerent, quæ & istiusmodi formas olim non ignotas fuisse, aut inusitatas probarent. Chaldaeus certè Paraphrastes eo, quem innuimus, modo verbum Caari summissee videtur dum per נחבין mordent, effert. At illud, dices, de suo supplevit, ut sensum perficeret, dum quod in textu legit, הֵן כֶּאֱרִי Sicut Leo, vèrterit. Imò potius hoc, mihi, sono verbi vicino id ipsi suggerente, addidisse videtur, ut modum quo crudelia manibus & pedibus ejus, de quo hîc sermo est, vulnera inflixerint, leonis immanitatem referentes, aptius exprimeret. Et quid si ab eo, hoc pacto, fluxisse putemus, istam, non dicam lectionem, sed notionem, quâ כֶּאֱרִי Sicut Leo, denotare existimatur, nisi quis ita ab aliquo ipso antiquiore intellectum probaverit, dum quod ille, ob eam (quam diximus) rationem posuit, ideo posuisse autumarent recentiores, quod ita ad literam sonare dictionem istam judicaverit? aut quid si ab illis, qui vocem כֶּאֱרִי ideo fodiendi significatu reperendum minimè putarent, quòd illud jam dictum in הקיפו videtur? Quamvis enim illud vulgò reddatur, Circumdederunt me, non minùs tamen commodè, atque huic loco forsan convenientius, reddi potest, ωρυξαν, seu perfoderunt aut vulnerarunt. Unde enim הקיף? ab יקף, inquiunt, at formâ quasi à נקף mutuata? ad quod ergò thema ipsum referri posse dicit Ebn Jannabius, cui duos tribuit intellectus, alterum concidendi, vulnerandi, alterum circumdandi: prior ille tam aliis textûs sacri testimoniis, quàm linguæ Arabicae usu confirmatur, atque illi maxime genuinus vulgò censetur. Occurrit, ut alibi, ita Jobi xix. 26. נִקְּבוּ זֶרַח Conciderint, per- foderint, vel perforaverint hoc, ad quorum verborum elucidationem affert linguæ Arabicae auctoritatem, in quâ dicitur نَكَفَتْ رَاسَهُ Nakasto rasabo, i. Caput ipsi comminui: Ita certè & Arabum Grammatici, نَكَفَ الرَّأْسَ Al Nakfo est سَمَرُ الْهَامَةِ مِنْ Ita caput comminuere, ut cranium à cerebro separetur, aut ضَرْبُهَا امْشَدَ ضَرْبَ أَوْ عَصَا ipsium ictu quàm gravissimo contundere, vel bastâ aut baculo cedere: item aliàs idem quod نَقَبَ وَشَقَّ Perforare, vel Terebrare, & findere. Est autem نَقَبَ idem quod نَقَبَ, ut ita tam in lingua Arabica & نَقَبَ, quàm in Hebr. נָקַף & נָקַב affinis sint intellectus. Quid ni igitur & huic loco significatum istum tribuere liceat, ut reddi possit, Vulnerarunt, vel confoderunt me, perforantes manus meas, & pedes meos? Quòd si Leonis significatum hîc retineri quis velit, non video quomodo se aliter expediat, quàm reddendo, Vulnerarunt me, sicut Leo, manus meas, & pedes meos, adeo ut nihil inde lucrentur Judæi ad ωρυξαν seu confodiendi intellectum (quem forsan ut Christianis adimant, lectioni isti tenaciùs adhærent, etiam contrarium monente Masoretarum notâ) ex hoc textu eliminandum. Certè dum verbi הקיפו alteram istam circumdandi notionem amplectuntur, & Leonis simul in כֶּאֱרִי retinent, ea ad sensum perficiendum proferunt, quæ ipsi forsan aliàs riderent. Quid enim David Kimchius, author, ut doctus, ita (nisi ubi nimio in Christianos zelo præceps rapitur) sobrius & gravis, ad lectionem istam illustrandam: כִּי הִקְפּוּנִי כְמוֹ הָאֵרִי שֶׁמֶקֶף בּוֹנֵנוּ בִיעָד וְכָל חֵידָ שֶׁתִּרְאֶה אוֹתָהּ הָעֵנּוּלָה לֹא תֵצֵא מִשֶּׁם נִמּוּרָה הָאֵרִי וּמִפִּהּ וִירָאָתוֹ יֵאָסְפוּ יְדֵיהֶם וּרְגֵלֵיהֶם וַיִּנְצֵץ הָאֵרִי שֶׁרָפוּ בְּתוֹךְ עֵנּוּלָתוֹ כֵּן אֲנַחְנוּ בְּגִלּוֹת בְּתוֹךְ הָעֵנּוּלָה לֹא נוֹכֵל לִצְאָת מִמֶּנָּה שְׁלֹא נִהְיָ בִּיד הַטּוֹרִפִּים כִּי אִם נִצָּא מִרְשׁוֹת הַיִּשְׁמַעְיָאִים נִכּוֹא בִּרְשׁוֹת הָעֵרְלִים וְהִנֵּה אֲנַחְנוּ אוֹסְפִים יְדֵינוּ וּרְגֵלֵינוּ וְעוֹמְדִים יְרִיאִים וּפּוֹחֲדִים בְּפִנּוּהֶם כִּי אֵין לָנוּ

promiscuo saepe usu, ac literarum transpositione, otio (ut loquuntur, dum scriptæ haud pronuntiantur) & mutatione, varietatem reperiet, quàm variantes istæ linguæ Hebraicae indicant, nec si quis ubi tale quid occurrit, aliam in margine, ac magis forsan nunc temporis in usu scribendi vel proferendi formam annotaverit, quid immutasse vel corruptum aut corrigendum indicasse, re eodem recidente, sensusque inviolato manente, censebitur. Quamvis igitur voces quædam juxta regulas quæ apud Grammaticos recentiores obtinent anomalæ videantur, ne tamen pro erroribus statim habeantur, atque è textu ut erroneæ abliminentur, suadet & ab immedicabili Hebraismi antiquioris ignorantia, & à vicinarum, quæ quicquid ferè habent linguæ isti primavæ debent, usu petita ratio. De iis quæ sæpius occurrunt, quo in genere est illa quæ digressionis istius ansam præbuit, liberè pronuntiat non uno loco D. V. Ludovicus Capellus qui variarum lectionum faventior habetur, ob illas potius ampliandas esse regulas, aut exceptionibus suis limitandas, quàm eas quod regulas (ad alia exempla conformatas) expungendas. Videtis ipsum, p. 122. & 128. ubi hæc habet verba, "Quid ni possit regula illa non esse universalis, & admittere suas exceptiones, cujus exceptionis illæ voces, aliæque his similes exempla esse videntur? Itaque malim ex ejusmodi vocibus extruere exceptionem regulæ, quàm ob regulam expungere sine necessitate literam vau in vocibus illis, &c. nec non 137, 143, &c." Imo si vel semel occurrat quid regulis istis minus consonum, nè tamen vel ipsum temere ac nisi gravi de causa, mutetur, sive quoad literas consonas sive puncta vocalia, monebit tum aliqua antiquitati debita reverentia, tum res periculosa plena alex & in qua haud nimum conjecturis indulgendum. Si igitur quis, susque deque habitis (quibus jam insignita reperitur vox ista) vocalibus, legi velit מִיֹּרֵר in Cetib, Miyorede, quare non & alii eadem licentiâ מִיֹּרֵר Keri vocalibus nudatum eodem modo efferant? quid impedit? sin uti jam in textu habetur relinquatur; מִיֹּרֵר Miyauradi olim pro plurali מִיֹּרֵר Benoni habitum, pari ratione ac מִיֹּרֵר pro infinitivo, videri possit. &c.

IN superioribus loca aliquot Veteris & Novi Testamenti inter se contulimus. Hoc caput duorum, quæ in Novo occurrunt, collationi, & discrepantiæ, quæ inter eâ esse videtur, tollendæ, vel saltem alteri alterius ope illustrando dabitur. Illis inter se conciliandis linguæ Arabice usus nobis commendatus est, his, disciplinæ etiam Rabbinicæ ad difficultates in S. Scriptura occurrentes tollendas utilitas aliquatenus demonstrabitur: quem in finem & hunc dissertationi huic locum tribuimus, cum aliter ad ea spectet quæ ad præfationem in Seder Taboroth dicenda essent. Loca quæ innuimus sunt Mat. xxiii. 27. & Luc. xi. 44. quorum ille ita se habet, 'Ουαὶ ὑμῖν γραμματεῖς καὶ φαρισαῖοι ὑποκριταί, ὅτε παρομοιάζετε τὰφοῖς κεκονιαμένοις, οἵτινες ἔξωθεν μὲν φαίνονται ὡραῖοι, ἔσωθεν δὲ γέμουσιν ὡς ἔων νεκρῶν καὶ πάσης ἀκαθαρσίας. Væ vobis, Scribæ & Pharisei Hypocritæ, quoniam assimiles estis sepulchris dealbatis, quæ extrâ quidem apparent speciosa, intus verò plena sunt ossibus mortuorum omnique immunditiâ; Hic verò sic, 'Ουαὶ ὑμῖν γραμματεῖς καὶ φαρισαῖοι ὑποκριταί, ὅτι ἔστε ὡς τὰ μνημεῖα τὰ ἄδνηλα, καὶ οἱ ἀνδρες οἱ περιπατῶντες ἐπάνω ἐκ ὀιδασιν. Væ vobis, Scribæ & Pharisei Hypocritæ, quia estis ut monumenta quæ non apparent, & homines ambulantes supra nesciunt. Aliud sonare videntur sepulchra κεκονιαμένα, dealbata, adeoque omnibus conspicua atque apparentia, quibus apud Matthæum assimilantur Hypocritæ, aliud μνημεῖα ἄδνηλα, monumenta quæ non apparent, quibus apud Lucam. Ideoque diversis ad eundem finem, scil. insignem Scribarum & Phariseorum hypocrisin denotandam, comparationibus usus viris doctis videtur Christus.

tus. Inde Illustrissimus Grotius ad Luc. xi. 44. hæc habet, Apud Mat. est alia comparatio à monumentis sumpta idem significans. Fieri potest ut modo hanc, modo illam Christus usurpaverit. Quod tamen an hîc fecerit quærere liceat, & annon potius una eademque prorsus verbis istis, κεκοινιωμένοις & ὀρώταις, apud alterum Evangelistarum quod voce ἀθῆλα, apud alterum, quamvis inter se primâ fronte diversissimis, indigitetur: quod ut manifestum fiat, ad ea quæ in Judæorum libris de munditie & immunditie traduntur recurrendum est; atque ille imprimis mos observandus, quo sepulchrorum immunditiei, quæ בוקעת ועולה בוקעת ויורדת perrumpens & ascendens, perrumpens & descendens, i. sursum atque deorsum se diffundens, obambulantes pollueret, aliisque quæ inde sequerentur incommodis obviam ibant. Sepulchra enim polluendi vim ex ipsius legis Mosaicæ instituto habebant, Num. xix. 16. וכל אשר יגע על פני השרה בחלל חרב או במת או בעצם אדם או בקבר יטמא Quicunque tetigerit in superficie agri occisum gladio, aut mortuum, aut os hominis, aut sepulchrum, immundus erit septem diebus. Quæ explicans traditio sic habet, הקבר כל זמן שהטומאה בתוכו מטמא במגע ובאהל כמת דין תורה שנאמר או במת או בעצם אדם או בקבר, ואחר הנוגע בגוו של קבר או בכוחו Sepulchrum, quamdiu in ipso inclusa fuerit immundities, polluit tactu & ratione tabernaculi [seu obumbratione] sicut mortuus, secundum sententiam legis [seu de cujus immunditie statuit lex], sicut dictum est, Num. xix. 16. Si tetigerit mortuum vel os hominis, vel sepulchrum. Perinde autem est sive tetigerit tectum sepulchri, sive parietes ipsius. His ut caverent, sepultis plerumque (ut videtur) cippos extruebant, quos נפשות appellabant. Ita colligimus ex iis quæ passim in Rabbinorum scriptis occurrunt. Maimonides in suis ad Mishnaioth commentariis, Oholoth, c. vii. §. 1. hæc habet, נפש דו אלכניאן אלדי יבני עלי אלקבר מרתפעא עלי סטח אלארץ ואסמה אלמשהור ענרנא שוכה אלקבר, Nefesh structura est quæ sepulchro superstruitur, elata super terræ superficiem, quæ apud nos vulgò ^bShaucato'lkabri appellatur. In ipso Mishnaioth, textu Shekalim, cap. 2. 5. נתן ר' אומר מותר המת בונין לו נפש על גבי קברו, R. Nathan dicit, Eo quod reliquum est mortuo (scil. è nummis ad ipsum sepelendum collectis) extruunt illi Nefesh super sepulchrum ipsius. Ad quem etiam locum Maimonides, Nefesh eodem, quo vidimus, modo explicans addit (vel saltem qui ipsum in linguam Hebraicam transtulit) והוא נקרא ציון בלשון הקדש Idemque in lingua Sancta vocatur Tsiun, in testimonium adducens Ezek. xxxix. 15. locum ad illud de quo agimus satis appositum, imò præcipuum traditionum, quæ à nobis laudandæ, fundamentum, ועברו העוכרים בארץ וראה עצם אדם ובנה אצלו Et circuibunt peragrantes terram, cumque viderint os hominis, statuent juxta illud [Tsiun] titulum, donec sepeliant illud pollinctores. LXX σημεῖον: Syr. ܐܬܝܢ ܐܝܢܐ, statuet juxta illud Tsiuoyō, quod est, explicante Bar Ali, signum è lapidibus. Unde confirmatur Ebn Jannabii sententia, qui nominis ציון thema statuit ציה, non ut alii צין, autoritate linguæ Arabicae motus, quod in illa idem vocetur צונה Sawah, à themate صوا, accedente linguæ etiam Syriacæ testimonio, quamvis alias ציון affinitatem habere posset cum Arabum صون Sana, quod est custodire, vel صوان Sawan, quod lapidis durioris genus, qui forsan ad hunc usum frequenter adhiberi solitus. Ita & R. Tanchum locum istum explicans ציון dicit esse صوة quod est (inquit) جعل علي القبر او في الطريق علامة lapis vel super sepulchrum, vel in via positus in signum. Ita ad Jerem. xxxi. علامات علي الطرق (inquit) dicuntur و كذلك الينا يجعل علي القبر علامة له بسمي ציון מה הציון הלו وكذلك يقول الاول ציון לבית הקברות اي علامة وخاجر متنوع ציון, Signa viis apposita; atque ita structura sepulchro imposita in signum appellatur Tsiun, ut ibi dicitur, Quod est [Tsiun] signum istud? Atque ita dicunt Majores, Tsiun juxta locum sepulchrorum, i. e. signum seu septum quo impediuntur homines ne per sepulchra transiant. Locus in testimonium è textu allatus est 2 Reg. xxiii. 17. ad quem etiam nomen illud explicans dicit esse الحاجر الدابر عند من يخشا الله تعالى وكذلك الحيزي لآل حيون وقيل كبر او بناءة Septum sepulchro circumdatum, ut elongetur ab ipso qui immunditiam cavet, atque ita dicitur, Statue tibi Tsiunim, vel juxta alios, Lapidem magnum aut ædificium super sepulchrum, ut sit in indicium & signum. Ex his quæ adduximus constare videtur, nomen Hebraicum ציון latioris esse ambitus quam quàm נפש Rabbinorum; cum scil. ציון quodlibet signum sepulchro appositum denotet, נפש propriè cippum eidem impositum. Hanc differentiam innure videtur alibi Tanchumius, dum נפש explicans, illud, ait, על בנין על קבר מן הבנין Ædificium extructum super sepulchrum, quo dignoscatur sepulchrum esse, atque ab eo longius recedatur, חצר כאלסור בביתא חוץ ציון, Septum instar muri circum sepulchreta extructum, ne ea conculcent qui per viam transeunt. Quæ tamen haud ita puto intelligenda, ut vel ציון huiusmodi tantum septum denotaret, (cum ex ipsius verbis jam antea laudatis, tum ex iis quæ Kimchius ad Ezek. xxxix. annotat, scil. מאבן ציון Maabon Zion, vel è lapide uno, vel è pluribus congestis, quodlibet signum ita appellari pateat) vel non sub ambitu suo etiam נפש comprehendat, sed ut hanc in communi Rabbinorum usu inter hæc verba differentiam indicet, quæ generalius signa illa quæ sepulchris apponuntur, ac communiter pluribus simul circumdantur, denotat, נפש autem propriè (ut diximus) cippum, ab amicis mortui ipsius privatim sepulchro impositum, quod nec solum in immunditiei cautelam aliis, sed mortui etiam memoriæ testandæ fieri solitum videtur. Quod testatur celebre illud è Talmude Hierosolymitano Sbekal. cap. 2. אין עושין נפשות, Non faciunt Nefashoth [monumenta] iustis, verba ipsorum ipsis memoriam conservant. Ac tale visum est R. Davidi, fuisse ציון istud, 2 Reg. xxiii. 17. scil. illustre aliquod monumentum ac inter cætera conspicuum, Prophetæ Dei alterius istius à quo seductus fuerat iussu ac sibi una erectum, eo consilio ne idem ossibus ipsius contingeret, quod aliis minatus fuerat ille, futurum, sc. ut cremarentur, cum haud dubium ipsi esset, quin nuntii à Deo missi ossibus parceret Rex pius, signo hoc ubi quiescerent monitus. Alterum enim quod è Midrash citat, (quodque pro vero amplexus videtur R. Salomo) illud quod Regi mirabundo hoc quærendi ansam præberet fuisse, quod ad hunc tumulum, secus ac juxta alios, ab altera parte urticas & carduos crescere videret, ab altera myrtum ac herbas odoriferas, quod in eo, scil. simul conditi essent Prophetæ verax, & mendax, joculari est. Obiter hîc notare liceat hunc etiam vocis נפש (quam non solum πολυσσημον sed & ἐναντιοσημον esse alibi notavimus) intellectum apud Rabbinos usitatum; atque inde forsan monumento tributum, quod illud mortuo novæ instar animæ ætatem prolonget, ac vivum in hominum memoriis conservet, nisi à contrario potius significatu cadaveris quod regit, cujusque indicium est, nomen sortitum putemus. Jam ne frustra hæc, ac sine ullo operæ pretio, ad dictionum istarum significatus eruendos congestisse videamur, constare simul arbitror nullum apud Judæos sepulchrum absque signo aliquo, sive ציון sive נפש ultro relictum. Hoc enim tum perpetuum serè immunditiei contrahendæ religiosioribus metum, tum damnum insuper illis manifestum intulisset. In eundem enim redacta fuisset statum illa, quam Sanctam vocitarunt, cum profanis gentium terris, quæ ex præscripto ^d Magistrorum pro immundis habentur, juxta illud, כל ארצות העמים עפרם, מטמא במגע ובמשא, Omnis gentium terræ pulvis contactu & gestatu polluit. Adeo ut qui eam calcet, imò vel in aerem ipsius caput & majorem partem corporis sui immittat, immundus evadat, ut videre est. Oboloth, c. ult. §. 6. & Maimonidis ad locum istum commentariis: causa est, quod cum illi minùs de rebus istis solliciti sint, officula quædam vel mortuorum particulæ pulvere ipsius misceantur. Eandemque ob causam etiam in terra Israëlitica ager quilibet in quo aratro effossum fuerit sepulchrum, ac officula mortui dispersa & deperdita, pulvere suo vel contacto vel gestato polluit, scil. ne forsan illo commistus fuerit עצם כשעורה, os aliquod quod magnitudine granum bordei æquet:^e eodemque se modo habet ager in quo deperditum fuerit sepulchrum, etiamsi non effossum, iisdemque vel gravioribus legibus obnoxium est. Adeo ut nisi his sedulò occursum fuisset, non fuisset quo se verterent sanctimonix abundantioris studiosi, nec habuissent quo se ab omni immunditie subtrahendo Pharisæorum nomen mererentur. Haud opus fuisset illis occinere illud Poëtæ,

Ex his satis liquere arbitror quinam sint τάφοι κεκοιναμένοι, ὅτι οἱ ἐξωθεν μὲν φαίνονται ὡραῖοι, apud Matthæum, & τὰ μνημεῖα τὰ ἁδῆλα, apud Lucam, quibus insignem Scribarum & Phariseorum hypocrisin perstringens Christus ipsos assimilat; Eadem nempe sepulchra, quæ quod ἁδῆλα essent, utpote gramine & herbâ obducta, adeoque ὡραῖα, seu speciosa hominibus apparerent, adeo ut iis inambulantes incauti polluerentur, κοινὰ seu calce aquâ temperatâ pro more signabantur: non enim ideo quod κεκοιναμένα essent, ὡραῖα videbantur, sed contra, quod speciosa, herbis forsan virentibus tecta (ut solent ferè sepulchra præ vicinis terræ partibus) atque vestita, vel saltem à reliqua terra nihil specie exteriori differentia, adeoque ἁδῆλα nullâ latentis immunditiei notâ insignita, calce in cautelam notabantur. Nec aliud, puto, apud Christi auditores sonabat τάφοι κεκοιναμένοι, i. e. ad verbum קברות מסודות Sepulchra calce obducta, quàm מצוינות בסיד calce, eum quem diximus in finem, signata, quæ ergò Syrus appositè reddit קברא מכלשא Kabre mecalshe, & Arab. القبرى Alkobur Al-Mockallasab, Sepulchra gypsata, gypso vel calce notata. Hebræus à Munstero editus, מולבנות dealbata, eos fecutus (puto) apud quos verbum illud reperit, quod ita intelligendum ut eodem cum cæteris tendat. Quod si quis dealbata atque opere albario incrustata ad ornatum putaverit, totam similitudinis vim mihi tollere videtur. Neque enim istiusmodi ornatus immunditiem sepulchri tolleretur, sed omnibus manifestam redderet, & ne propius accederent admoneret, ut ulteriori cautela opus haud fuisset. Ipse enim candor ossa mortuorum in memoriam revocabat, seu potius ob oculos ponebat [ideoque teste R. Obadiab] aquâ macerabatur clax quo magis albeceret. Jam verò Christus, qui intimos cordium recessus perspectos habuit, tales depingit, qui exterius nihil nisi sanum & speciosum, nihil quod hominibus suspicionem moveret, instar sepulchri herbæ quâ tegitur grato oculis virore fallentis, præ se ferentes, pleni intus fraudis & versutiae erant; quibus ne ulterius hominibus imponent, hæc ejus redargutio κοινὰς, seu calcis in signum affusæ instar erat, quæ non esse תוכם ככרם, quod intus celarent, sicut illud quod palam essent, ominibus indicaret. Interim haud dubium verissimum esse quod asserit Illust. Grotius ad Mat. xxiii. 27. Compa-

rationem albarii operis fuisse usitatam Judæis ad notandos mores personatos, uti apparet ex Pauli verbis, Act. xxiii. 3. Futurum est ut percutiat te Deus, τοῖς κεκοιναμένοις, paries dealbate: sed idem licet sit verbum, locus & res substrata distinguendum monent: atque aliâ ratione epitheto isto insigniri parietem, aliâ sepulchra, cum ille ornatus & tegendi, quod minus oculis placeret, gratiâ dealbaretur, hæc in immunditiei obtektæ signum, & quod illic ad accedendum homines invitaret, hîc ab accessu procul arceret: nam hunc non tantum calcis sepulchris ἁδῆλοις in signum injectæ, sed & נפשות cipporum, qui honoris etiam causâ imponebantur, finem fuisse vidimus.

CAP. VI.

In quo variæ Judæorum de resurrectione mortuorum sententiæ expenduntur.

Pag. 60. Quod ad resurrectionem mortuorum, est ea fundamentum è fundamentis Legis Moſis, quod si quis non credat, non est ipsi in Judæorum religione fors aut locus. Pertinet ea ad solos virtute præstantes, &c. Et rursus, Pag. 66. Fundamentum decimum tertium est, Resurrectio mortuorum, quam jam explicavimus.

HIS verbis quid senserit de resurrectione mortuorum, vel saltem quantum de sententia sua proferre visum ipsi fuit, declarat Maimonides, in quibus tamen tantum abest ut suorum nonnullis satisfecerit, ut quod nemini sub omnimodæ ab Israelis sorte exclusionis pœna negare permiffum afferit, ipse penitus negasse ab illis incusetur; resuscitatum, scil. iri mortuos. Testatur ipse hoc in Epistola quadam Apologetica, hac de re conscripta, in qua quid ab adversariis sibi objectum fuerit, & quid ipse statuatur, fusiùs enarrare profitetur; in eadem tamen vix aliis quam hîc & in l. Yad. Tract. Teshubah, seu de pœnitentia, c. 8. (ad quod annotat Ha Rabad, propè eum abesse ab iis qui corporum resurrectionem prorsus tollunt) verbis usus. ^a Sûntque ea re verâ דברים סתומים, qualibus in rebus dubiis seu de quibus in varias partes à pluribus itur, loqui novit (teste authore Ceseph Mishna) qui aliàs maximè omnium dilucidè, adeo ut num quod senserit totum protulerit forsan dubitet qui illud scire aveat. Ipsi Abarbineli, qui ipsius partes sequitur, plus à se hoc in articulo præstitum asserere, quam præstiterit, videtur. Sic enim ille in suis ad Pirke Ab. c. 4. commentariis. Ecce, inquit, Doctor magnus in expositione Mishnæ, dum articulos [fidei] recensens singulos ipsorum explicat, שמר לפניו מהסוס בעקר הזה, hoc in articulo ori suo capistrum imposuit, nihil aliud dicens, quam הוּא הַיּוֹם הַזֶּה העיקר הוּא, תחיית המתים וכבר ביארנוה ענינו וסודותיו, Articulus 13. est resurrectio mortuorum, cujus intellectum & mysteria jam explicavimus. ° At nescio (inquit) ubi ipsum explicaverit: Ecce enim in libro Madda [scientiæ] in Tract. Yefude Hattorah, [de fundamentis legis] & Deoth, [de variis hominum opinionibus], & Teshubah [de pœnitentia] ubi mentionem omnium articulorum facit, nec non de adventu Messie loquitur, לא דבר מתחיית המתים כלל, nihil prorsus de Resurrectione mortuorum dixit; ut & in Moreh Nevochim הסתיר פניו ממנו ab eo faciem suam abscondit. Invenimus tantum Epistolam ab illo de Resurrectione mortuorum conscriptam, in qua articulum istum confirmavit, עם היות שבקצת שרשיה לא הסכימו עמו שאר החכמים, ita tamen ut in quibusdam ipſus fundamentis non consentiant cum ipſo reliqui Doctores. Hæc Abarbinel, qui tamen ab ipsius partibus stat contra Nachmanidem. Sciendum enim in hoc articulo dividi חכמי ישראל האחרונים לשתי דעות Sapiantes Israelis posteriores in duas sententias (ut Joseph Alb. l. 4. c. 30.) five classes, quarum altera ducem sequitur Rambam, seu Mosen Maimonidem, altera Ramban seu Mosen Nachmanidem, ita interim ut tot ferè invenias sententias, quot Doctores, licet sub eodem vexillo militantes, adeo ut si rem rectè perpende-deris, haud aliud ferè reperias de quo pluribus eorum inter se convenisse afferas, quàm credendum & expectandum esse aliquid, quod resurrectio audiat; de re ipsa singulis ferè diversa asserentibus, ac veterum dicta ad partes suas trahentibus. tianam injuriâ & frequentibus calumniis λογوماχίας istas inter se exercent, dum unamquamque sententiam, non quàm prope ad veritatem accedat, sed quàm longè à Christianorum dogmatis recedat, ad examen revocant, atque ideo vel amplectendam, vel abdicandam censent, uti ex iis quæ (dante Deo) dicturi sumus patebit. Non erit mihi interim aliqua contra ipsos disputatio instituenda; satis erit, ipsorum sententias & rationes nudè proponere, quo & in fumum abeant perversæ ipsorum calumniæ, & veritas à nobis recepta suâ se simplicitate tueatur. Quæ hunc in finem dicenda erunt difficile erit ad ordinem reducere, quod tamen ut quantâ maximâ possumus perspicuitate præstemus, eam sequi methodum statuimus, ad quam quæ ad articuli istius elucidationem pertinent, redigenda censuit Abarbinel, alios obscuritatis & confusio- nis redarguens. Quæ tamen ipsa si ἀμεθοδίας & ταυτολογίας incusetur, hoc nos excusabit, quod ita tractari à nobis debuit negotium, ut nullam iis quibuscum res est, in ipsorum sententia referenda injuriam intulisse videamur; à qua culpa non melius nos immunes præstare possumus, quam ipsorum & methodum & verba exhibendo. Tribus igitur ab Abarbinele in libris, de hoc articulo ex professo institutus videtur sermo, primò in libro cui titulum Tsedek Olamim imposuit, secundò in Nachalat Aboth, seu Commentariis quæ in Pirke Aboth, scripsit, tertio in eorum quæ in Isaiam commentatus est præfatione; primum istum librum nondum videre nobis contigit, & periisse videtur, ibi de iis fusiùs forsitan egit, de quibus in secundo isto & tertio tractatu haud nimis compendiosè. Ex illis igitur depromenda erit ipsius sententia, quam in utroque in 14. שרשים seu Radices (sic fibras minores ab eadem radice ortas vocat) divisam tradit, quem etiam & nos sequemur numerum, hoc solum nobis concedi postulantes, ut utrumque inter se conferre liceat, & si quid in tertio tractatu aliter, quam in secundo dicatur, illud ad ipsius capita prolixitatis vitandæ gratia reducamus. In singulis sectionibus primas tenebit Abarbinelis sententia fideliter exposita, deinde, si opus fuerit, quasi explicationis gratia, quæ ab aliis traduntur, adducentur, eo candore, ut libros istos insipientibus nullius (uti spero) fraudis rei videamur. Nec omnes passim authores sectabimur, sed eos ferè, qui ab ipso Abarbinele, ut præcipuè notæ & fidei inter eos qui hoc ar-

Radix prima est, שנהפסד האדם ובמותו יפסד גופו וחומר ויפרדו חלקיו ובמותו יפסד גופו וחומר ויפרדו חלקיו, אבל הנפש השכלית תשאר נצחית, Cum homo morte corrumpitur, corrumpi ipsius corpus, & materiam, partésque separari, animam verò rationalem immortalem persistere: utpote quæ licet ortum habuerit, haud tamen necessariò corrumpatur, cum nullæ ipsi corruptionis causæ insint, הפך הדעת האפיקורוס המאמין שהנפש תכלה contra Epicurum qui credidit animam perire. Artic. hunc probat ex illis Eccles. verbis c. xii. 7. Et revertetur pulvis in terram sicut fuit, & spiritus revertetur ad Deum qui dedit illum; ubi observari vult dici de corpore sicut fuit, at non ita de spiritu, quia spiritus perfectionem acquirit lege & præceptis observandis, & post mortem præmium suum accipit, aut ob ea neglecta pœnâ afficitur, at non corpus quod nullam acquirit perfectionem; quia pulvis est & in pulverem revertitur. Hinc illud Rabbinorum dictum in Mafseceth

biles, ut [cūm dicit] * Ut stent dies multos. Quod si dicti Abigalis textu isto scopus fuerit hoc innuere, indicio est mysterium istud [hominum] intellectibus peregrinum, & à cogitationibus longè remotum, ad cuius scientiam non perveniunt sapientiâ insignes, nisi post laborem multâsque exercitationes & disquisitiones, ac argumentationes difficiles, illis temporibus notum fuisse, & quod in eo reconditum est, manifestum vel mulieribus; idēque argumentum validissimum, latè diffusam fuisse in gente nostra sapientiam, sicut de ipsis dictum est, † Sanè populus sapiens & intelligens est gens ista magna. Utut autem vel mulierculis apud gentem cœlitus institutam nota erant priscis istis temporibus, quæ de animæ post mortem statu, resurrectione, & vitâ futurâ credere oportuit; postea tamen cūm alveo angustiori flueret ipsorum sapientia, (quod scientiam operibus confirmare renuentibus interminatus est Deus, ‡ Ecce ego addam ut mira faciam populo huic, &c. Peribit sapientia à sapientibus ejus, & intellectus prudentum ejus abscondetur) magnâ ex parte deleta est harum rerum cognitio, adeo ut vel ipsarum veritas in dubium vocaretur, prorsus negantibus Sadducæis esse in homine aliquid morti non obnoxium, vel ipsum denuò vitæ redditum iri. Impiam hanc sententiam traxisse perhibetur sectæ Pater Sadocus à dicto præceptoris sui Antigoni Socensis malè intellecto, qui quo homines ad illum pietatis gradum, quem cultum Dei ex amore vocant, perduceret, monuerat Deo servire non ut fervi qui ad obsequium sola spe præmii alliciuntur, sed sine ullo mercedis intuitu: * Hinc ille perversi ingenii vir unâ cum condiscipulo suo Baituso, nullam manere eos, qui Deum colerent, mercedem, sive præmii, sive pœnæ conclusit; atque ab eo nomen traxit secta inter Judæos ista, quæ licet legem Moysi amplecti profiteretur, affirmabat tamen שהשכר והעונש הוא גשמי בלבד ובעולם הזה כמו שזכר באבות ור"ן נתן הכחישו השכר הרוחני אחר המות מכל וכל ויביאו ראיה לדבריהם ממה שלאזכר לפי דעתם בתורת משה גמול נפשי יכלל אלא הצלהות גשמיים, "præmium & pœnam non alia esse quam corporalia, atque hujus mundi, (uti in Aboth R. Nathan traditum) "præmium aliquod spirituale post mortem [expectandum] penitus negans, "atque inde sententiam suam confirmans, quod (ut ipsis videbatur,) nufquam in lege Moysi mentio fieret præ-

"mii quod animæ proprium esset, sed "prosperitatis tantum corporalis": sententiam eorum referente Josepho Albo, qui & ideo eos ad hæc asserenda impulsos ait, quod animam hominis mortalem crederent, nec ab anima brutorum hac ex parte distare, verum כמות זה כן מותו וזו כמותו וזו כמותו ut hæc moritur, ita mori & illam. Secta hæc quamvis aliis Judæorum sectis sequacium numero impar, dignitate tamen ferè superiorum erat, teste Josepho, cujus verba Antiqui. l. xviii. c. 2. hæc sunt, εἰς ὀλίγους τε ἀνδρας ἔτα οὗ λόγου ἀφίκετο, τὸς μὲν τοι πρῶτους τοῖς ἀξιωμασι. Nec mirum, si illi, quibus maximè faveret hic mundus, ad illam propenderent sententiam, quæ alterius, in quo seciùs illis futurum esset, metum tolleret. Sic fieri solet, dum quod mallent homines faciliè credunt. His ergò cum reliquis Judæis, ac præcipuè celebri Phariseorum secta (quos ridebant, quod הן מצערין עמנו בעולם הזה ובעולם הבא אין להם עונש בלום, ut refert R. Nathan, se in hoc mundo cruciarent, cūm in altero nullum eos præmium maneret) lis ferè perpetua, his, quæ illi negabant, animæ, scil. immortalitatem, mortuorum resurrectionem & vitæ futuræ præmium adstruentibus, sed dubio, ut videtur, successu. Hinc illis animus etiam Christum aggrediendi, palmario illo quo aliis crucem figere solebant argumento, de muliere quæ septem in hoc sæculo maritis nupserat, cui tandem futuro adjudicanda esset, quæ certè difficultas erat iis qui ex crassis hujus mundi deliciis, alterius mundi voluptates (quibus nihil inter se commune) metiebantur (quæ tunc temporis Phariseorum opinio fuisse, uti & posteriorum, videtur) haud facilis enodatu, at quam Dominus, aliâ quam vel ipsi vel Pharisei somniarant vitæ illius ratione patefactâ, ita solvit ut quod contra hiscerent non haberent; neque hoc contentus, eorum argumentum quo resurrectionem impugnabant, retudisse, alio eandem contra ipsos adstruxit, quo utut sententiæ suæ tenacibus os planè obturavit: illo nempe ex Ex. iii. 6. petito, ubi Deus Moysen sic allocutus est, Ego sum Deus Abraham, Deus Isaac, & Deus Jacob, insolubili prorsus, & irrefragabili, nisi quis promissâ olim Patribus à Deo facta, irrita esse dicat, totâque legis Mosaicæ veritatem abneget; quâ enim ratione dici possit Deus, Deus Abrahami, Isaaci & Jacobi, magis quam aliorum, nisi plura & majora in ipsos beneficia conferendo?

quod cum in hac vita non præstitum, quam majori cum felicitate, & rerum externarum affluentia transegerunt non pauci, à Deo alieniores, necesse est ut proprium remunerationis tempus post hanc vitam fuisse, & superesse, vel vitæ restitutum iri, quò præmium accipiant, concedat, qui non frustra hæc à Deo dicta putaverit, quod nemo nisi planè ἀθεῖα dixerit. Porro, hæc ad Mosen post tot sæcula ab illis sepultis locutus Deus, se, esse, non fuisse, eorum Deum dicit, unde ut de ipsius Dei immutabilitate constat, ita nec ipsos prorsus periisse, cum Deus non sit Deus mortuorum, qui nullius beneficii capaces sunt, sed viventium; vivunt ergò Deo tam ipsi quam alii omnes, quorum & animæ jam permanent, & corpora iterum vitæ restituenda sunt, tantâ promissi divini certitudine, ut vel jam nunc vivere censendi sint, atque in illâ demum vita promissorum, quæ dum hîc viverent ipsis facta sunt, impletionem expectâsse, eâque fide mortuos divinos istos Heroas, optimè concludit Epistolæ ad Hebræos author, Secundum fidem (inquit) mortui sunt isti omnes, non adepti promissa, sed eminus ea conspicati, postquam credidissent & amplexi essent, ac professi fuissent se hospites & advenas esse in terra. Nam qui hæc dicunt, palam ostendunt se patriam quærere. Quod si illius memores fuissent ex qua exierant, habuissent tempus ad revertendum. Nunc autem meliorem expetunt, hoc est cælestem: quapropter non erubescit ipse Deus vocari Deus eorum, paraverat enim eis urbem. His è lege depromptis cum Sadducæos ad silentium adegisset Christus, dicitur perculsam fuisse turbam doctrinâ ejus. Unde patet luculentiori ipsum contra eos argumento usum, quàm ullo adhuc uli fuerant Pharisæi, qui terrenis (ut videtur) nimis affixi, cœlestia, ad quæ vocaret atque institueret lex, oblivioni ferè tradiderant. Argumentorum ab ipsis urgeri solitorum quæ supersunt videre est in Gemara cap. Chelek, ejusque excerptis à Doctiss. V. J. Cochio editis: quæ & à recentibus addita, enumerare non est institui nostri. Apud Manassem Ben Israel in libello de resurrectione, videat cui libet.

Duas adducit Maimonides in Epist. de resurrectione, quæstiones, quarum solutio ad articulum istum spectat; quarum prima est, de locis Scripturæ non paucis, quæ ejus fidem tollere videntur. Ad hanc certè haud alio opus est responso, quàm quod tum ipse, tum ante ipsum R. Saadiah attulit, non aliud istis locis afferi, quam haud vel ordinariâ naturæ lege, vel propriis hominum viribus fieri posse, ut mortui denuò vitæ restituantur, atque esse hoc ex eorum numero, quæ sint, נמנעות אצל הטבע, naturæ impossibilia, at אין נמנעות בחק הכוּרָא, respectu Creatoris nequaquam impossibilia, ut loquitur Joseph. Alb. l. i. c. 22.

Alterâ est, Quare non sit facta mentio articuli istius in lege, בגלוי ובביאור, apertè & explicite, sed obscuris tantum indiciis innuatur? Atque hoc ab aliis etiam quæri solet. Ad quod quid ab illis respondeatur, videre potest cui libet apud Manassem Ben Israel l. i. de ref. c. 13. Miror ipse potiùs hoc ab illis quæri, ac tantam hoc pacto cavillandi occasionem Sadducæis præberi, contra quos conclusum à majoribus volunt, nullam esse illi in seculo futuro sortem, qui dixerit, אין תחיית המתים מן התורה, non esse resurrectionem mortuorum è rebus in lege [traditis] quæ verba post Rab. Solomonem explicans R. Judah Zabarah צרין שתדע כי עקר אמונת תחיית המתים מן התורה והמאמין אמונה קיימת בתחיית המתים ואינו מאמין שהיא מן התורה הרי זה ככופר כל כך, Oportet scire fundamentum fidei de resurrectione mortuorum, ex lege esse. Quod si quis crediderit fide firmâ resurrectionem mortuorum, non autem credat esse eam ex Lege, ecce ipse nihilominus instar Infidelis est. Petenti Sadducæo locum aliquem sibi proferri è lege quo credat hoc in lege doceri, eritne hoc quod os obstruat; licet non in lege asseratur, subinnuitur tamen? Negabit ille quod ipsi affirmare non audent. Certè tam illis quam ipsorum adversariis meritò oggeri posse videtur illud Christi, Erratis nescientes scripturas, quarum sensum genuinum si ab ipso discere vellent, haberent quo perpetuò, ut ille olim, Sadducæis os occluderent. ^c Argumento e- quidem illo à fœdere cum Abrahamo, Isaaco, & Jacobo inito, usus perhibetur aliquando R. Simai, sed promissio ad res tantum terrenas restricto, quasi non aliter præstari posset quam si illi vitâ iterum donati in terram Canaan remitterentur, adeò ut vim suam prorsus amittat, & ab adversario facile eludi possit; Promissum est, Ut dem ipsis terram Canaan, Non dicitur (inquit) vobis [i. ipso- rum posteris] sed ipsis: Qui ergò resus-modis peccati frui, majores arbitratus divitias, probum Christi, quàm Ægyptiorum thesauros, intuebatur enim in præmii largitionem. Meritoque hoc appellat הגדולה הטענה argumentum magnum, tanti certè momenti, ut si nihil aliud, vel apertè, vel occultè dictum fuisset in lege quo adstruerentur resurrectio & vita futura, articulum tamen istum non è כתר תורה, è rebus legis occultis (ut vocat Abarbanel) quæque (ut loquitur Manasse Ben Israel) ex ea apodicticis demonstratioribus probari non possint, sed verisimiliter tantum convincuntur; habendum esse, sed ejusmodi, ut si quis ipsum non & corde credat, & ore palam profiteatur, audacter, ut contra Sadducæos, concludere deberent, אין לו חלק בתורת משה, Nullam esse ipsi in lege Moysi omnino sortem. Certè enim qui articulum istum negaverit, vel de ipsius veritate dubitaverit, non magis inter eos qui legem à Mose traditam amplectuntur, censendus est, quam Christianis illi (λυμαι certè & φθοραι των ανθρωπων) qui ad alteram vitam resurrectionem negantes, Evangelio tamen se credere, idemque promulgare profitentur, accensendi. Quod si ratio aliqua ultra Legislatoris liberrimi beneplacitum reddenda sit, quare in Evangelio magis perspicuè tradita sint, quæ ad resurrectionis articulum spectant, quàm olim in Lege, quid ni dixisse sufficiat, Legem à Mose Abrahami posteris datam esse, qui de ipso minimè ambigerent, sed ad vitam spe istâ dignam instituendi essent, Evangelium autem gentibus, quibus doctrina ista nova prorsus atque inaudita fuit. Unde illud Atheniense istorum de Paulo, Jesum & resurrectionem prædicante, Act. xvii 18. Εἰπὼν δαιμονίων δοκεῖ καταγγελεῖς εἶναι.

Radix secunda est, מתי יהיה זמן התחייה, De tempore resurrectionis, quando, sc. futura sit? num postquam omnibus hominibus morte sublatis desolata fuerit terra, ut antiquorum quidam existimarunt, an vivis adhuc aliquibus; & num illi unâ cum mortuis resuscitatis in judicium vocandi? De his varias sententias retulisse (a) R. Saadiah ait. Ipse statuit ultima omnium generatione futuram, cum & istius sæculi homines morti jam propinqui videbuntur, neque tamen ipsos hoc pacto à morte liberatum iri, sed diu quidem victuros: Ita tamen ut tandem communi mortalium sorte obeant. Ut huic sententiæ consentaneum, asserit Deum initio omnes omnium, qui unquam victuri essent, animas simul creasse. Cum ergò haud ultra superfuerint animæ aliquæ in corpora demittendæ atque infundendæ, tum futuram resurrectionem mortuorum; quam sententiam המקובלים Cabalistarum, seu eorum qui traditione innituntur, fuisse asserit, qui dicunt עד שיכלו כל נשמות שבנוף (b) donec defecerint omnes animæ quæ sunt in Goph, quod illis nomen loci cujusdam est in cœlis, in quo repositæ sunt animæ istæ. Atque ita in Tract. Talmudico Chagigah dici; Inter ea quæ in cœlo supremo sunt, esse נשמות של צדיקים ונשמות ורוחות שעתידין להבראות Animas justorum. & animas ac spiritus adhuc creandos. Ad hanc radicem digitum intendisse etiam (c) Nachmanidem in c. Gamul. Hæc in Nachalath Aboth, at in præmissis ad suos in Isaiam Commentarios aliis verbis, licet eodem forsitan spectantibus, quæstionem hanc de tempore quo resuscitandi sint mortui, solvit, scil. futuram resurrectionem mortuorum הגלויות בזמן קבוץ הגלויות או קרוב אליו tempore colligendæ captivitatis, aut sub ipsum, ideoque frequenter in Prophetis temporum istorum mentionem conjunctim fieri.

(a) Sententiæ istæ à R. Saadiah, lib. Emunoth c. vii. Rad 7. recensentur, & ad ipsam potius spectant, quæ revera eadem prorsus est cum posteriori hujus parte. Quod ad tempus autem resurrectionis, ipsam statuit regnante in terris Messia futuram: ita promissum, quo Deus Israelitas è sepulchris suis educturum se pollicetur (quod de resurrectione mortuorum intelligi vult) præstandum dicit בעולם הזה נחשוב שהוא In hoc mundo, ne putemus ipsum ad alterum mundum pertinere, ut nec vaticinium illud Danielis de multis eorum qui in terra dormiunt resuscitandis, cum aliis Scripturæ locis, sed ad עת הישועה tempus salutis, vel quod idem sonat ימות המשיח dies Messia; quod & veteres sensisse probat ex eo quod dicunt מי שכפר בתחיית המתים לא יהיה המשיח Quisquis negaverit resurrectionem mortuorum, non victurus est diebus Messia, etiamsi reliqua ipsius opera bona fuerint.

(b) Occurrunt verba ista in Gemara, tum Tr. Yebamoth, c. 6. tum Avodah zarah, c. 1. utrobique à Rabbi Asi dictum fertur

אין בן דוד בא עד שיכלו כל נשמות, שכנוף, Non veniet filius Davidis antequam consummatae fuerint omnes animæ quæ sunt in Goph; quod mirâ consequentiâ probat ex Is. lvi. 16. Quid sit Goph docet Raschi & interpres in Ein Jacob ad utrumque locum, sc. Repositorium quoddam in quo sint spiritus & animæ מששת שנבראו ימי בראשית העתידות לנתן כגופים, העתידות להבראות, Quæ creatæ sunt usque à sex diebus Bereshith, ut inderentur corporibus quæ creanda essent. Eo, scil. tempore simul creatas fuisse הנשמות שעתידין לילד animas quæ nascituræ erant. Hæc dum citat Abarb. ostendit idem se tum hoc loco, tum in præmissis ad Isaiam asserere, quod ad tempus resurrectionis mortuorum, cum ultima mundi generatio, in qua scil. Psychodocbeion istud evacuandum sit, & dies Messie juxta ipsorum placita, idem constituent sæculum. Quod ad idem confirmandum è Massechet Chagiga adducit, habetur ejus Tr. c. 2.

(c) Neque enim ex professio de ipsa agit, aut certi aliquid statuit, tantum in c. Gamul, libri Torath Adam, fol. 105. ex antiquorum traditione docet, Olam habba, seu Mundum futurum, initium habiturum באלף שביעי millenario mundi septimo. Diem autem judicii (quod f. 100. ait futurum die aliquo ימות מתחלת ימות התחייה sub initium dierum resurrectionis) & מלכות בית דוד regnum domus Davidis, quæ ipsum præcedunt, futura באלף הששי millenario sexto. F. 106. ait dies Messie esse מכלל העולם הזה bujus mundi spatio accensendos, וכסופן יהיה הדין eorum autem sine futurum judicium & resurrectionem mortuorum, quæ est mundus venturus, i. e. ejus initium, quem, scil. f. 104. tempus esse dicit ימות תחיית המתים quod resurreet. mort. sequitur, & paulo post exemplo rerum futurarum à 7. diebus primæ creationis petito subinfert, וכן מלכות בית דוד באלף הששי ita futurum est regnum domus Davidicæ millenario sexto, ejusdemque fine dies judicii, cum septimo incipit mundus futurus. Videtur tamen aliquod temporis intervalum inter resurrectionem & mundum futurum statuere, quo in hoc mundo, ut ante, degant, qui resuscitati fuerint, cum f. 106. objectioni quâ quæritur cur in mundo futuro admittenda sint corpora, cum nullus ibi sit amplius ipsorum usus, respondet, quod cum resumpta fuerint corporis membra tempore resurrectionis ad functiones corporeas obeundas, אין הקבה, Nolit Deus Benedictus ea denuo ad nihilum redigere. Meminit & ipse dicti istius è Chagigab, de loco animarum quas initio creatas volunt, nondum in corpora demissarum, sed non eo fine quo Abarbenel, viz. ut inde de tempore resurrectioni præstituto conjecturam ferat. Maimonides rem in medio relinquere videtur, dum in Epistola sive diatriba de resur. m. contra aliquos qui ipsum resurrectionem negasse dicerent, asserit è nihilo quod ab ipso dictum sit concludi posse, שהשם לא יחיה מתים כשירצה ולמי שירצה אם ימי המשיח או לפניו או אחרי מותו, Deum haud resuscitaturum mortuos, quando voluerit, & quos voluerit, sive tempore Messie, sive ante ipsius adventum, sive post ipsius mortem. Quamvis aliàs Nachmanidi visus sit eam ad Messie regnum referre, hanc enim sententiam ipsius esse ait, c. Gamul f. 107. Reversuras animas in corpora tempore resurrectionis, ac resuscitados mundi hujus deliciis fruituros בימות המשיח diebus Messie. ^h At Josephus Albo omnino asserendum ait juxta eorum sententiam qui dicunt, Nullum esse inter hoc sæculum & dies Messie discrimen (in quorum numero est Maimonides, qui sæpe illam sententiam repetit) nisi quod tum subjuganda sint regna, non futuram resurrectionem tempore Messie. R. Judab Zabaráh eam millenario sexto aliquando post reductionem captivitatis fore asserit. Verba ipsius, libelli sui cap. 1. hæc sunt, מכואר זמן תחית המתים שהוא באלף הששי אחר קבוץ גלויות אכל אין מפורש אם סמוך לקבוץ גלויות או מופלג Manifestum est tempus resurrectionis fore millenario sexto, post collectionem captivitatis, at non est explicatum utrum proximè à collectione ista, an longo post tempore futura sit. Idem, c. 4. pluribus prosequitur, ubi de ipso nihil disertè in scriptura statutum fatetur, patere tantum ex Daniele post Israelitarum è captivitate liberationem futurum, cum dicit, ⁱ Tempore illo stabit Michael princeps, &c. eoque tempore evadet populus tuus omnis qui reperi-videatur. Est ea, R. Eliezer dicit dies Messiae Israeli sunt quadraginta anni, sicut dictum est, Quadraginta annis tæsum erit populi. R. Eleazar, f. Azariæ, Septuaginta anni, sicut dictum est, Et oblivioni tradetur Tyrus septuaginta annis, secundum dies Regis unius, Quis iste Rex singularis? Rex Messias. Rabbi dicit, duo vel tria sæcula, sicut dictum est, & coram Luna in seculum seculorum. R. Hillel dicit, Non erit Israeli Messias, cum jam ipsum comederint [i. acceperint] tempore Hezekiæ. Dixit R. Joseph, Condone Hilleli, Domine. Hezekiah quando vixit? Sub templo primo; at Zacharias fil. Iddo, vaticinatus est de [Messia] sub templo secundo, Exulta valde, filia Sion, &c. Ut tollatur quicquid præ se fert hoc dictum absurdi, ipsumque rectè intelligatur, sic interpretandum putat, ex sententia nimirum R. Eliezeris, non futuram resurrectionem statim post Israelis ab exilio reductionem, sed demum, postquam quadraginta annos regnaverit Messias; ex sententia R. Eleazaris, postquam 70. ex sententia Rabbi, postquam duobus aut tribus sæculis. R. Hillelem autem ab his omnibus diversum dixisse, non necessario sequi è Scripturæ locis quæ ab ipsis allegata sunt, dies Messiae post captivitatis restitutionem protrahendos, sed vel לזמן מועט אחר כך statim, vel haud ita multo post, futuram resurrectionem mortuorum. Cum ergò dixerit, non esse Messiam, voluisse אין ימות המשיח Non futuros dies Messiae, sc. quibus ipse ante resurrectionem mortuorum in terris regnet; atque eo modo intelligenda esse ipsius brevitatem affectantis verba, manifestum esse ex loci ratione, in quo, sc. de ימות משיח diebus Messiae, quamdiu duraturi essent, quærebatur. Ipsum interim, dum dixerit, eos accepisse Messiam sub Hezekia, voluisse כי כל מה שנבאו הנביאים מוזמן טוב העתיד לבא על ישראל אין הכרח שיתקיים בימי משיח שנברא אכלוהו בימי חזקיה, Omnia quæ vaticinati sunt Prophetæ de temporibus felicibus, quæ Israeli eventura sunt, non necessario esse præstanda diebus Messiae, cum ipsis potiti sint sub Hezekia. Neque ignorasse ipsum Zachariæ prophetiam, quam in ipsum torlit R. Joseph, sed eam ad tempus colligendæ captivitatis retulisse, de quo nulla fuit inter eos controversia. Atque hoc modo intellectam R. Hillelis sententiam pulcherrimam esse, atque ab omnibus amplectendam, לפי שאחר שנעשה קבוץ גלות מה אנו צריכים המשכת ימות המשיח הלא ענין תחית

המתים גדול יותר מאד לישראל מימות המשיח, &c. Postquam enim facta fuerit collectio captivitatis, quid opus est nobis ut protrabantur dies Messiae? annon ipsa resurrectio mortuorum longè præstantior est Israeli, diebus Messiae? &c. diebus ergò Messiae (quales alii sperarunt) susque deque habitis, Hillelem tempus resurrectionis, & עולם הבא שהוא אחר כך חכלית כל טובה לצדיקים Mundum venturum, qui post ipsum omnis boni perfectio est iustis, respexisse, & præ iis terrena omnia haud digna quorum fieret mentio putasse. Nihil tamen interim, vel è R. Hillele constare, futurane sit resurrectio conjuncta collectioni captivitatis, an ulterius differenda, sicut voluerunt cæteri doctores, neque באי זה יום באי זו שעה מן האלף הששי quo die, vel quâ horâ millennarii sexti futura sit. Ut ut autem R. Judæ placuerit ista R. Hillelis sententia, alios haud parum adversos habuisse indicat, ut illa loquendi formula quâ de eo usus est R. Joseph, ita & quæ eodem capite paulo superius habentur, ab eodem forsitan Josepho profecta, ubi dicente Rab. Futurum est ut annos Messiae comedant [i. e. iis fruantur] Israelitæ, regerit Rab. Joseph, Liquidum id quidem. At quis illis fruatur? Homines quique, excepto R. Hillel, qui ait, Non est amplius Messias Israeli. Jam enim eo potiti sunt tempore Hezekiæ. Juxta regulam, ut videtur, quam in judiciis Dei observari volunt, cum eo agi voluit, scil. מדה כנגד מדה ut mensura pro mensura reddatur: ira initio capitis, ideo nullam istis qui mortuos resurrecturos negant, in resurrectionis beneficio sortem concedi volunt, neque hîc, (sententiam ferente R. Joseph,) Hilleli in hujus vitæ bonis sub Messiae expectandis, quod ea negaverit. Aliter etiam ab aliis intellectam Hillelis sententiam, quàm à Juda Zabara explicata est, patet è Josepho Albo, qui lib. 1. c. 1. inde adventum Messiae haud inter articulos fidei Judaicæ necessario numerandum concludit, quod R. Hillel, licet eum negaverit, haud tamen habitus fuerit רבי הלל הוה דוטא inter negantes articulum aliquem fundamentalem. מאמין בביאת הנואל אבל R. Hillel peccavit quod non crediderit adventum redemptoris, at non negavit fundamentum. Interea dum hoc sine hæreseos nota (quam ab eo longissimè amolitur R. Juda prædictus, ideo quod inter doctores Talmudicos ut famæ integræ recensetur) asseruerit R. Hillel, hinc constat, vel non ulterius in terris terris expectandum Messiam, vel saltem sine regni terreni pompâ cum expectandum ab illis fuisse, apud ipsos Judæos affirmare, non hæreticum vel blasphemum esse. Hæc etiam apud eorum plebrosque inter se necessario quodam nexu conjuncta haberi, Messiae adventum, resurrectionem mortuorum, Judicium magnum, & mundum futurum, quamvis de eorum tempore & mutuo intervallo in diversas itum sit sententias. De millenario non pauci (ut videmus) audacter statuunt, dum tamen de anno, die, horâ, rem in medio relinquunt, satis tutos, ut videtur, se putant ab anathemate isto in eos, qui tempora, his rebus præstituta, computant, pronuntiato. Majorem tamen, ut mihi videtur, modestiam ac sobrietatem requirere videntur illa apud Jos. Alb. I, qui è verbis Magistrorum incertitudine, anni redemptionis notantibus, de quibus ad ^m Is. lxxiii. 4. commentantur, לבא לפומא לא גלי פומא למאן גלי Cor meum ori non revelat, os cui revelaret? sequi ait, שאפילו המלאכים אינם יודעים Vel ipsos etiam Angelos terminum redemptioni præstitutum ignorare, cum illum ipsis haud revelaverit Deus; sententiâ veritati Evangelicæ consonâ. Quis interim fuerit R. Hillel iste, cujus sententiam retulimus, alius, scil. ab Hillele Magno, Sbammai collegâ, docebit Cl. V. Joannes Cochbius in suis ad excerpta Gemara Sanhedrin notis, in quibus & multa de resurrectione & præmio futuro juxta Rabbinorum sententiam occurrunt eruditè observata, quæ si huc transferrem injuriam Lectori facerem, qui majore suo commodo ipsum Doctiss. Viri opus consulere possit.

(c) Inter ea quæ in cælo supremo reposita sunt, c. 2. Chagigah jam superius laudato, statuunt להחיות "טל שעתיד הבה" Rorem quo futurum est ut Deus benedictus vitæ restituat mortuos. Eiusdem meminit & Josephus Albo, l. iv. c. 35. à quo Abarbinel noster ea quæ de vi ejus, quæ semen virile in prima hominis generatione refert, mutuatus videtur, qui & ibi rectius sentire videtur de iisdem planè corporibus, non parili, sed eadem prorsus quæ prius fuerant materiâ, vitæ restituendis; quæ iisdem animabus ob impressionem quandam ab iis pridem in ipsis factam nec adhuc oblitteratam, recipiendis paratiora erunt, ut & ipsæ ad illa rursus informanda proniores, quod similitudinibus à lignis, quæ prius ab igne correpta fuerant, à virga Moysi, & Elishæ baculo illustrat deinde subinfert, Ita in resurrectione mortuorum, גוף הצדיק מצד הרשם שנשאר בו מהרוח האלהי שהיה משכן לו יהיה מוכן בלא ספק אל שיקבל הרוח האלהי ההוא שנית יותר, כמה שהיה בראשנה, Corpus iusti ob impressionem in ipso reliquam à Spiritu divino, cujus habitaculum fuit, paratius absque dubio erit ad spiritum istum secundo recipiendum, quam primò fuerat. Quo spectat & illud Rabbiorum dictum. Quod non fuit est, quod fuit multo magis [erit] q. d. (inquit) cum illud quod non fuit idoneum ad recipiendam supernè influentiam illam semel receperit, quanto magis ad illam secundo recipiendam idoneum erit? זה לפי שכבר נשאר בו אי זה רשם והכנה לקבלו פעם אחרת בנקל, quod jam reliqua sit in ipso impressio aliqua, qualis qualis, ad eam secundo recipiendam facilius quam primò receperat. Hinc fieri ait, ut in more apud ipsos sit, cum angustia aliquâ oppressi fuerint, ad piorum sepulchra se coram Deo prosternere, viz. מצד הרשם שנשאר בעצמות ההם מהרוח האלהי שהיו משכן לו והם יותר מוכנים מוולתם להמציא על propter impressionem quæ in ossibus istis reliqua est à Spiritu divino, cujus habitaculum fuerant, quare & magis idonea esse, quam alia [loca] ut ipsorum ope recipiatur influentia divina; quasi & adhuc vel ossibus istis gratiæ divinæ eliciendæ, & preces juxta se fufas quam alibi alibi acceptiores reddendi vis conspicua infit. Sed non est quod his vel recensendis vel expendendis immorer; ex jam dictis constare arbitror ipsum corpora omnimodè eadem quæ fuerant, resuscitatum iri statuere, nec esse יצירה חרשה creationem novam, sed restitutionem propriè dictam. Ad Abarbenel redimus, qui non prius dimittendus est quàm injuriarum postuletur, tum ob calumnias Christianis illatas, tum quod quam aliis impingit sententiam, & ut falsam rejicit, ipse (faciles sibi & immemores pollicitus lectores) ut verissimam & rationi maximè consentaneam amplectitur. Christianos, dum in קדמונים Antiquiores, & אחרונים Posteriores distribuit, omnes complecti videtur, & quid eorum præcipui hæc de re sentiant, proferre voluisse. Ac certè si Christianorum sententiam edicere voluisset, quid ab iis qui pro Orthodoxis & præcipuè apud suos autoritatis habentur, statuatur, docere debuit. Aliàs enim si quicquid seciùs senserint Heterodoxi aut hæretici quidam, pro Christianorum opinione obtrudi possit, pari jure dicemus & Judeos resurrectionem mortuorum penitus negare, quòd eam Sadducei negaverint, vel non aliud eà denotari quam, sensu Allegorico, è gravioribus malis emersionem, quod ita (ipso asserente) senserint eorum nonnulli. A quibus ergò probatæ fidei Christianis affirmatum reperit, Resurrectionem non aliam esse quam quæ sensu translato dicitur? Certè nullæ unquam difficultates Christianum quempiam sanum & sobrium eò adegerunt, ut vel dubitaret futuram resurrectionem propriè sic dictam, quæ quidem nulla est, nisi sit, שוב תאו הנפש, Animæ ejusdem, in corpus idem à quo separata fuerat, reditus, quo iterum vitæ restituatur quod mortuum est, ut vel ipsius Maimonidis verbis utar. Nec cum objiciuntur corpora à feris, volucris, piscibus, anthropophagis devorata, & in ipsorum substantiam conversa, sumus nos ex illis à quibus quæri oporteat, cur horum instaurationem magis quam alia Dei miracula negemus; utpote quibus εὐ ἀδυνατίσαι παρὰ τῷ Θεῷ πάν ἥµα, omnium quæ ipse à se vel facta vel facienda dixerit, infallibilem certitudinem abunde probans, omnesque prompti assensus remoras è medio tollens. Non magis Judeorum est quam nostrum illud in Gemara Gebibæ f. Pesise attributum, ולא הוו הוו, Cum, qui nulli essent, extiterint, iidem, cum extiterint, nonne multo magis [iterum] existent? لا يمحى من خلق الانسان وغيره اول مرة ان يعيد خلقه متى شا وكيف شا فان قدرته غير متناهية. Non erit impossibile illi qui homines cæterisque creaturas primâ vice creavit, à se creatum restituere, quandocunque, & quomodocunque voluerit, cum potentia ipsius infinita sit. من قدر علي الاول قدر علي الاخر. Qui unum potuit, potest & alterum præstare. Verba sunt à Christiano prolata, & à Christianorum nemine in dubium vocanda. Quomodo autem hoc fiat, ut corpora corporibus ita permista iterum secernantur, ut quod suum est unicuique reddatur, rimari, curiosi magis & in res Dei, ulterius quam par est, inquirentis, esse videtur, quàm de fidei veritate solliciti; adeò ut quid nonnulli inter Christianos, ut R. Saadias apud Judeos, quo à fide alienis os obturent, huic importunè quæsito responderint, recensere operæ pretium non ducam. Quare arridet illud à Tacritio subjunctum responso Abi Alis Christiani ad illud ab Ebn Annabæ Judeo (ex eorum, ut videtur, numero qui resurrectionem tantum Allegoricè intellectam somniant) objectum. Inquit Judeus, ان الانسان قد ياكل الاسد وغيره من الحيوانات وقد يحترق بالنار ويصير رمادا واذا اكل السمك يحترق ان ياكل الناس ذلك السمك ويعود بعض الحيوانات ياكل الذي اكل السمك وكذلك واحدا بعد واحد فكيف يجري الامر في يوم القيامة. Est cum aliquem devoraverit Leo, vel aliqua alia fera, aut ipsum consumpsit ignis, ut in cineres redigatur, vel deglutierit piscis quem alii deinde homines comederint, atque illos rursus alia, ut & alia nescio quæ animalia carnivora, quid ergò hoc fiet die resurrectionis? Responderat Abn Ali, de elementorum partibus ad sua quibusque elementa redeuntibus, atque inde pro arbitrio Dei omnipotentis eadem quantitate desumendis. At Tacritius, evanescere hîc quicquid est difficultatis solâ mentione potentiae illius quæ hominem prius è nihilo produxit. Interim verò ليس ينبغي لليهود ان يعترضوا بمثل هذا الاعتراضات مع قراتهم ما جاء في التوراة وغيرها من تلك المعجزات التي لا يقوم عليها برهان سوي الصفة بصدق من ذكرها. Minime oportuit Judeos hujusmodi asferre objectiones, postquam ea legerint, quæ in lege aliisque libris sacris recensentur miracula, quæ non aliâ probantur demonstratione, quam descriptione veracitatis ejus qui ipsa narraverit. Optimè, ut mihi videtur. Neque aliud de resurrectionis modo aut ratione curiosius inquirenti retores, tum Patres tum Scholasticos ac Interpretes legerit, planè aliam esse, sc. nec in aëre, vel quâlibet aliâ carne (ut quidam delirant) resurrecturos nos, sed in istâ, quâ vivimus, consistimus, & move-mur; ut verbis Concil. Tolet. utamur. Qui aliter sentiunt delirare asserit concilium, & merito; quis enim sanæ mentis compos, cum illius quod cecidit sit resurgere, vel animæ in aliud corpus transmigrationem, vel novi corporis, quod immeritò alterius vice Dei iusti iudicis tribunali sistatur, creationem, resurrectionem vocet? Hoc interim monendus est Abarb. ne eo quòd corpus, quod animale prius fuit, tum spirituale (non quod in spiritum mutetur, sed spiritu gubernetur) quod prius corruptioni obnoxium, tum incorruptibile atque immutabile & ἰσαγγέλων futurum & ignominiae loco fulgido gloriæ amictu induendum asseramus, eâdem manente carnis substantiâ, sed mutatâ ipsi qualitate, probari putet corpora à prioribus diversa statui; quomodo enim quæ per gloriam diversa sunt, per naturam tamen eadem maneant, exemplo non inepto luti in testam cocti illustrat modò laudatus Tacritius, quod ipsius verbis in Philarabum gratiam apponere non gravabor, ان بقال فاذا كان الامر علي ما تقولون من ان الناس يقومون روحانيي فان الجزا يكون لغير هذه الاجسام التي كانت في دار الدنيا وعليها يجب العقاب ولها يجب الثواب والجواب عن ذلك ان ابدانها تقوم روحانية لطيفة مثل ما قام جسد المسيح من القبر فكما ان الطين اذا صار فخارا هو طين ايضا ولكن لا يفسده الماء كذلك تتغير حالات الابدان وتصفوا في يوم القيامة من الاكدار والادساخ الهولانية. Quod si dicat quis, si ita se res habeat, uti dicitis, scil. resurrecturos homines spirituales, futurum est, ut reddatur merces corporibus aliis ab istis quæ in hoc mundo fuerunt, quibus vel pœna, vel præmium debitum erat; respondetur, corpora nostra resurrectione quidem spiritualia & subtilia, quale Christi corpus è sepulchro resurrexit, & quemadmodum lutum postquam factum fuerit in testam, etiam adhuc lutum manet, verum obduratum, ita ut ab aquâ corrumpi non possit; sic & futurum est die resurrectionis, ut mutantur corporum affectiones, ipsaque à facibus & sordibus à materia fluentibus repurgentur. Tollitur vi ignis luti mollities, quæ illud aquæ injuriæ obnoxium reddidit, eâdem manente substantiâ; quanto magis potentiae divinæ efficaciam à corporibus, ipsis iisdem manentibus, quod ipsa corruptioni & mutationi obnoxia reddidit, tollatur? Malè ergò Abarbinel hoc commune Christianorum dogma haberi vult, homines, scil. non aliâ ratione eisdem resurrecturos, quam quod eadem anima diversa informatura sit corpora. Alios, quibus hoc impingi possit; quærat; et quid ni ipse sibi, sui oblitus, primo omnium occurrat? Alio mallet quam me iudice stet vel cadat, ὁμοφύλω, nempe suo Manasse Ben Israel, cuius verba, l. 2. de Res. c. 15. hæc sunt, "R. Hasdai, & R. David Kimchi, (uti liquet ex illis, quæ notat ad finem " Malachi, de corpore Eliæ) existimant " Deum in resurrectione mortuorum pro- " ducturum esse nova corpora, eâdem " quantitate, qualitate, ac temperie prædi- " ta, & formâ atque figurâ prioribus paria, " atque istis corporibus infusurum pro- " prias animas; cùmque operationes ani- " mæ sequantur temperamentum corpo- " ris, futurum inde, ut idem homo nu- " mero resuscitetur; atque hâc ratione " actionem illam propriè dici posse re- " suscitationem mortuorum. Eandem " opinionem sequitur Isaak Abravanel in " libro suo Nabalat Aboth [illo qui à " nobis laudatur] & Mahumedanus ille " Abn Chamad. Sed quantum mihi vi- " detur, error hic à priore non abludit: " nam licet corpus eâdem formâ ac fi- " gurâ præditum restituatur, non desinit " tamen aliud numero esse corpus, quem- " admodum statuae eâdem prorsus for- " mâ ac figurâ ab artifice elaboratæ, non " possunt dici una eademque numero " statua. Adde, cum finis resurrectionis " sit, ut idem corpus animæ junctum, " præmio aut pœnâ factorum afficiatur, " quis non videt hoc fieri non posse, si " novum atque aliud numero corpus " sit?" Hæc doctissimus ille Judæus. Ipsene ergò Abarbenel, qui hoc nomine Christianos (nihil tale docentes) accusat, quod frustra resurrectionem se affirmare profiteantur, dum corpora à prioribus diversa illo tempore animabus informanda statuunt, ad eundem offendit lapidem? Qui illum Christianis hæc impropertem audiverit, haud facile crederet; at qui verba ipsius, quæ attulimus, legerit, dubitare de eo non peterit. R. Chasdai, qui eam sententiam ab Abi Hamed mutuatus videtur, penes nos non est. R. Davidis verba, quæ innuit Manasseh, ita se habent, הנה אנכי שולח לכם אף עלפי שאני מזוהרים על תורת משה בכל דור ודור אף עלפי כן לטובתכם אשלח לכם את אליהו הנביא והטעם שישב נשמתו שעלתה לשמים אל גוף נברא כגוף הראשון כי גופו הראשון שב אל הארץ בעלותו כל יסוד אל יסודו ואחר שיחיה אותו

bini, Surgent cum nævis, dein sanabuntur. Dixeruntque ideo præmississe ipsum, Ego occido & vitæ restituo; Percussi & medebor. Dixerunt etiam, Tunc aperientur oculi cæcorum, & surdorum aures, tunc saliet claudus instar cervi, & cantabit lingua muti. Eadem ferè habet & R. Juda Zabara c. 11. מבואר כי בתחיית המתים יעמדו באותו ענין שהיו בשעת מיתה רל שטומין וחגרין וגבנונים יעמדו כמו שהיו Manifestum est in resurrectione mortuorum resurrecturos ipsos eodem statu quo horâ mortis fuerunt, viz. cæcos, claudos, gibbos eodem modo se habituros. Ita in Bereſh. Rab. dicunt, Percussi & ipse medebor: quia, scil. ipsos cum maculis, quas è mundo secum attulerunt, vitæ restituiam, ut ita se mutuo cognoscant, nec dicant עולם חדש הוא Mundum novum esse, [& medebor] sc. medebor ipsis in altero sæculo. Manifestum etiam (inquit) est justos non resurrecturos nudos, sicut in prima creatione fuerunt, juxta illud quod scriptum est, Fueruntque ambo nudi, Adam, scil. & uxor ipsius, verum resurgent amicti vestibus pulchris, unicuique congruis, ne, sc. pudore suffunderentur, cum omnes de arbore scientiæ comederint. Illud quod Adamo in causa fuerit ne ipsum nuditatis suæ puderet, fuisse ait כח נבואה ושכל גדול שהיה בו Vim prophetiæ & intellectum eximium, quo prædictus fuit. Quod patere, ait, exemplo Saulis, qui spiritu prophetico ad tempus afflatus nudus incesſit, שכח נבואה שבו היה quod vis Prophetica quæ in ipso fuit, corpus ipsius [rerum corporearum] sensu privaret. Quanto magis Adamus ita se habuisse censendus, donec arboris vetitiæ esu, dona ista eximia perdiderit? Hoc autem non intelligendum necessariò ממש מלבוש באותו מלבוש de iisdem vestibus quibus sepulti fuerant, cum eæ sine dubio consumptæ fuerint, verum יעשה להם שהשווה יעשה להם, מלבוש הראוי לכל אחר ואחר Deum facturum ipsis vestes, prout unicuique ipsorum convenerit. Cautè hoc ab ipso observatum, ut ita multis occurratur objectionibus de iis, qui forsan vestibus spoliati, nudi sepulti, vel in mare nudi, vel culeo inclusi projecti fuerint, & ut magnâ sollicitudine morituros nonnunquam liberet. Annotat idem argumentum istud קל והומר [à minori ad majus] à tritico sumptum non esse Kal vechomer necessario concludens, sed Kal vechomer פריכא כבמה טעמים fragile seu invalidum ob multas rationes.

Cum hoc ut extra dubium ponat, (quod tamen radice demum xiii. ostendere nititur, cui ergò hæc erat postponenda) non omnes mortuos resurrecturos, quod illis in Daniele verbis probari putat, (a) * Multi è dormientibus in terra expergiscuntur, &c. quærit quinam ergò resurgent, & quomodo inter mortuos fiat distinctio. Num casu, & prout accidit? vel qui fiat ut unus præ alio resuscitetur? Respondet, Horâ mortis de hominibus statui, num in resurrectione mortuorum sortem habituri sint necne, ac resuscitandos האנשים היותר רשומים בשלימות eos qui perfectione præ cæteris insignes fuerint, & secundum opera quæ in hac vita præstiterint rem peragendam; adeò ut justus ex operibus suis de præmio sibi reposito judicare possit, וידע אם הוא עתיד לתחייה אם לא & scire num ipse resurrectionis particeps futurus sit necne, uti illo ad Danielem Angeli dicto innuitur, Stabis לגורלך in sorte tua in fine dierum, in sorte tibi debita; unde & dictum illud Rabbiorum, מראה לצדיקים שהקנה' הזה מתן שכרם לעולם הבא Deum benedictum ostendere piis in hoc mundo, quodnam præmium reportaturi sint in mundo futuro.

(a) Frequens est in ore Judæorum locus iste, cum de resurrectionis articulo loquantur, utpote qui (cum eo qui proxime ex eodem Cap. laudatur) solus ferè sit (teste Maimonide) שואא לפרשו qui aliò torqueri non possit, nec à sensu literali ad allegoricum abstrahi. Ac multum certè omnibus seculis passa est veritas à duobus hominum generibus, altero eorum qui omnia in Allegorias & sensus (quos falso vocant) spirituales vertunt, altero eorum qui omnia nudè ac ad literam exponunt. Ab his Deus corporeus, cathedræ affixus, omnimodis affectibus obnoxius fingitur, & perpetuâ inter se pugna scriptura & ratio committuntur; ab illis ipsum veritatis fundamentum tollitur, nec solidi quicquam, in quo se sistat credentium fides, relinquitur. Ut primos hîc à R. Saadia, ita posteriores in superioribus à Maimonide reprehensos vidimus, pag. 144, 145, &c. Interim dum in hoc Magistris istis as-

בתכלית התחייה, De fine resurrectionis. Merito enim quæri, למה תשוב הנפש אחרי היותה במחינתה בשכרה או בעונשה לחול שנית בגוף הנגוף אחרי צאתו ממנו Quare reverteretur anima, postquam loco suo fuerit vel præmii vel pænæ particeps, ad habitandum in corpore jam percusso ex quo dudum exierat. Magnum Doctorem Maimonidem, cum nullam hujus rei rationem inveniret in Epist. de Resurr. scripsisse non oportere quæstionem movere de alio hujus miraculi fine ultra Dei O. M. beneplacitum, magis quam de cæterorum, v. g. quare virga Moysi in serpentem potius quam in lapidem conversa sit, &c. quam tamen Maimonides ratiocinationem infirmam esse ait, cum de miraculorum istorum fine, (scil. ut iis ad credendum adigerentur homines) constet, nec de modo aut specie quærere necesse sit: at hîc de fine magni hujus miraculi (quod sine dubio ob finem aliquem notum, & rationem necessariam facit Deus) quæri. Respondere ait Haggaonem, cujus sententiam etiam sequuntur Nachmanides, R. Chasdai & plerique alii, finem resurrectionis esse, ut ita judicio sistantur homines & mercedem ultimam accipiant, quæ בעולם in animarum mundo non recipitur, cum non permittat justitia divina, ut cum anima & corpus conjunctim cultum illi præstiterint, soli animæ merces rependatur; quæ ergò ad resurrectionem differtur in mundo futuro, cum rursus unienda sint anima & corpus, ut Dei judicio magno sistantur, quando judicaturus est populos, ut unicuique secundum vias suas, atque operum suorum fructum retribuatur. Hanc responsionem non prorsus rejicit Abarbenel, nec tamen ei assentitur, utpote qui judicium illud, quo Deus omnes homines judicaturus est, hujus mundi esse statuatur. Aliter enim sequi resurrecturos indiscriminatim omnes, quod ipse negat, dein, injuriam esse manifestam, nifestam, si tam diu differretur præmium eorum qui mandata præstiterint; cum juxta eorundem Doctorum sententiam, scelerati pœnæ statim à morte adjudicentur, cum aliis ejusmodi, quibus sententiam hanc obnoxiam esse putat, difficultatibus. De judicio isto inquirere hujus non esse loci, satis esse in præsentiarum, ut ponatur unum resurrectionis finem esse Judicium istud; ac Rad. v. in præfat. Isai. sententiam hanc refutasse se ait, in l. Zedek Olamim, dum præmium & pœnam ad animam tantum spectare probaverit. Ibi & alias ipse affert rationes, quæ hic Radices viii. & x. constituunt, atque ibi ideo recensendæ. Interim, neque hîc, neque illic quæstionem satis explicatè posuisse videtur; vel saltem responsum haud satis distinctè adaptasse. Nam cum ipse inter alios non paucos corpora, quæ vitæ restituentur, iterum moritura existimet, præmiûmque ac pœnam animarum propria, aliud ab eo responsum expectabitur, ac ab iis qui eadem immortalia futura asserant: dum, sc. quæretur, quem in finem anima jam gaudii alterius mundi particeps facta, in mundum hunc, variis casibus, angoribus, & miseriis obnoxium, detrudatur? Alii eam annorum tricies sexies mille spatio definiunt, quo stellæ fixæ, toto orbe cœlesti peragrato, ad eam unde primo exierint partem reversæ fuerint. Alii eidem annorum trecenta & sexaginta millia tribuunt, juxta uniuscujusque sphaeræ partes, quarum partium singulæ mille annis inserviunt: alii mundo annorum millia duodena juxta signorum Zodiaci numerum tribuunt: alii quadraginta novem millia, habitâ ratione septem Planetarum, quorum singulos septem mille annis mundo dominari putant: alii septem tantum millia, secundum numerum etiam septentarium planetarum, quorum unusquisque mundo mille annis imperet; millenario verò septimo, qui penes Saturnum est, omnia corruptum ac destructum iri, donec ipsius dominii fors exitum habeat, redeunte ad Jovem imperio millenario octavo, quo tempore renovabitur mundus & ad statum pristinum redibit. Hæc retulisse ait, R. Abrahamum, Bar Chaia, in l. Megalleh Hammegillah, ubi & sententias antiquorum recenser, quæ vel signis Zodiaci omnia tribuunt (nixæ על כן תהו ואבני בהו) vel planetis nihilo magis solidè. Quas omnes sententias inde in mentem hominibus istis venisse autumat, quod à priscis sæculis aliquid per traditionem de resurrectione aliquando futurâ acceperint. Quorum sententiam hinc refutat, quod non aliam statuunt resurrectionem, quam quâ processu temporis redeant res ad eum quo ab initio hoc usque tempus fuerunt statum, vi causarum cœlestium, ac motuum ipsarum; cum Mosis doctrina doceat mundo statum suum retinente, resurrecturos mortuos, eosdémque individuos corpore & anima vitæ isti simul restituendos, iisque qui in vivis tunc erunt consociandos; quod miraculum, dum simul resuscitabuntur mortui, simile (inquit) erit, sine dubio, primæ Adami creationi, quia sicut ipse è pulvere creatus est, inspirante in nares ipsius Domino halitum vitæ, statûque perfectio productus, eumque in finem creatus ut serviret Deo, ita futura est resurrectio mortuorum, quam ideo nemo præter Deum, qui mundum de novo creavit, efficere potest; quo digitum intendit in Mose dicens, Ego Ego ille, Ego morti trado, & vitæ restituo, i. Ego qui creavi, & ego qui resuscito. Quin & tradidisse sapientes resurrectionem (a) ex iis esse quæ non sunt in legatî alicujus manum tradita. Eliam & Elisham non suâ ipsorum potentiâ mortuos resuscitasse, sed hoc à Deo precibus impetrasse ut ipse faceret, uti ex historia patet; cum in aliis miraculis patrandis non legatur Elisha ad preces confugisse, quia licet alia in mundo mira præstandi potestas data sit Prophetis, at non in animam & vitam hominis potestatem habet præter solum Deum qui illam creavit. Inde & in (b) benedictionibus ipsorum hoc Deo proprium adscribitur: Tu potens in sæculum Domine, qui vitæ mortuos restituis, &c. quia hoc in ipsius solum potestate est, atque ex iis in quibus potentia ipsius immediatè elucet.

posterius est resurrectione mortuorum, qui est perfectè justorum tantum, qui resurrectionis participes erunt, cum in eo majora quam antea mandata præstando mereantur, cum gradus prævius & inferior iste Omni Israelitæ contingat, & unusquisque ipsorum in Olam Haneshamoth, mundo animarum, gradum aliquem & sortem consecuturus sit, ut & חסדי העולם aliarum gentium pii. Gradum istum inferiorem intra duodecim menses à morte vocari, ait, Gan Eden, quo nomine denotatur, מדרגה חסדה מתוך יב' חדשים ולאחר יב' חדשים מדרגה חסדה העולם הבא והוא למדרגה מדרגת שלמות וכבוד gradus imperfectior intra duodecim menses, post quos evehitur quis ad gradum quendam è gradibus seculi futuri, perfectionis, nempe è gloria, tum dici animas נגזרות תחת כסא הכבוד sub folio gloriæ reconditas esse. C. xxxiv. dicit animas justorum ex veterum sententia prioribus duodecim mensibus ascendere & descendere, nondum loco fixas, אבל לאחר יב' חדשים נשמה עולה ואינה יורדת, at isto spatio exacto ascendere spiritum ita ut non amplius descendat. Quo innui vult etiam justorum animas haud facile statim à rerum terrenarum, quibus assuetæ sunt, studio avelli: tempus purgationis & defæcationis duodecim menses statui, כלומר זמן מקיף בד' תקופות שהם q. d. tempus quo revolvuntur quatuor anni tempestates, quæ omnia temporis eventa continent. Ideoque intra duodecim menses potuisse Pythouissam Samuelem evocare. Solus Elias adhuc ascendere & descendere traditur. De istius sententiæ explicatione, scil. duodecim mensibus animas ascendere & descendere, consuli potest Ramban, c. Gamul, f. 103. Ejus quod dicunt, ער יב' חדש גופו קיים ונשמתו עולה ויורדת לאחר שנים עשר חדש גופו בטל ונשמתו עולה ולא יורדת, duodecim mensibus permanet corpus ipsius, animaque ascendit & descendit, postea corrumpitur corpus, animaque ascendens non amplius descendit, sensus est (inquit) tamdiu כח הגוף קיים vis corporis remanet, & anima inclinatur לרעתה, &c. ad opiniones & facta sua quibus assueta erat, quam [propensionem] post duodecim menses exiit, & לכשה מלאכות Angelicam naturam induit, & coronatur coronâ seculi futuri Shel Olam habba. (c) Postulat locus iste, ut in sensum & significatum nominis Cereth, seu Excidii, cui post mortem obnoxia sunt improborum animæ, paulo altius inquiratur, cum discrepantes sint de ipso, perinde ac de statu animarum à corpore separatarum, Migistrorum sententiæ: Quem tamen laborem nobis supervacaneum prorsus reddidisset Abarbenel, si eâ, quâ expectaveramus, fide ab aliis ea de re prodita retulisset. Rectene enim ab ipso affirmetur (ut videre est in Excerptis ex ipsius in legem^a Commentario, à Cl. Buxtorffo editis) "Maimonidem & Nachmanidem " consentire tum in Excidio animali (quod " vocat, animæ, sc. proprio) quod consistat in privatione animæ, & corruptione vel destructione ejus totali; tum " in excidio quod in Idololatram & blasphemantem pronuntiatum, quod est " corporis, animæ," dubitabit lector, cum hanc è Manasse Ben Israel inter duos istos magni nominis sapientes differentiam statui viderit, quod Maimonides Excisionem animæ ejus annihilationem esse existimaverit, secus autem Nachmanides; multo magis cum eorum scripta penitiùs inspexerit, ex quibus nec vel alterum forsitan eorum in hac sententiâ fuisse deprehendetur. Quid autem intelligi voluerit Abarbenel per animæ privationem & destructionem totalem, in ista, quam illis assignat, sententia, patet ex ipsius verbis ubi suam explicat; per excidium, scil. intelligi elongationem à splendore Majestatis Divinæ, &c. non autem privationem animæ meram, aut destructionem totalem; Est enim (inquit) substantia spiritualis, per se subsistens, & naturâ suâ incorruptibilis. Ut ergò suo in his judicio utatur lector, cum vel Abarbeneli, vel Manassi Ben Israel fides necessario deroganda videatur, autorum istorum sententiam ex suis eorumque qui ipsos secuti sunt, scriptis depromptam paulo fusiùs ipsi ob oculos ponemus: Ac primò Maimonidis, qui animas peccantium excidio è medio prorsus tolli statuere pluribus visus est; deinde Nachmanidis, qui contrarium planè asserit, & vel Maimonidem aliter sensisse ostendere conatur. A Maimonide ergò prolata, quæ ita sonare videantur, ac si pœnâ excidii animam ad nihilum redigendam gendam autumaret, occurrunt, tum in superioribus, p. 154. ubi ultimum miserie gradum esse asserit, ut excisa pereat anima, ne durationem consequatur, atque esse hoc Cereth, cujus in lege fit mentio, tum in Yad, Tract. de pœnitentia, c. viii. §. 1. ubi ait, *Retributio impiorum hæc est, ut ne habeantur digni vitâ sed excisi moriantur. Quicumque verò non habetur dignus vitâ istâ, ita mortuus est, ut non vivat in seculum, sed in impietate suâ excisus, instar bestie pereat. Atque hoc est Cereth, cujus in lege meminit, ubi dicit, Excidendo excidetur anima ista, quæ traditione accepimus sic intelligenda, ut verbum [Excidendo] ad hoc seculum, [excidetur] ad futurum spectet: ac si diceret, Anima ista, quæ à corpore in hoc mundo separata est, non solum vitâ mundi futuri non habebitur digna, sed & ab illa prorsus excidetur. Ac rursus, §. 5. Vindicta quâ nulla major, est ut excidatur anima, nec digna censeatur vitâ istâ, sicut dictum est, Excidendo excidetur anima ista, iniquitas ejus ipsi inest. Atque hæc est perditio, quam Prophetæ parabolicè appellarunt Foveam perditionis, & Abaddon, & Tophet, & [Alukah] Hirudinem, nec non quolibet vocabulo consumptionem & corruptionem denotante; quia consumptio est post quam nulla est תקומה Tekumah [instauratio] & corruptio, à qua nullus unquam regressus. Videri potest celebris iste Magister, hæc legentibus, statuere impiorum animas non tam à gaudio vitæ futuræ excludi, in miseriam sempiternam ablegatas, quam deleri prorsus, atque è medio tolli. Quod idem sensisse & R. Davidem Kimchium multa in ipsius commentariis occurrunt quæ suadeant: quia tamen contrarium defendit Cl. V. Sextinus Amama, de eo litem movere nolo. Addam potius nonnulla quibus Ebn Latiph eam, quam à Ramban aliisque hauserat, sententiam expressit, העגש הגמור הוא הכרת הנפש ממעלה וואברה רצוני לומר אפיסתה והו הכרת הנאמר בתורה והו מאמר החכם עה בתמיהה ואין ימות החכם עם הכסיל כלום' היאך יתכן שימות החכם עם הכסיל כי נפש החכם תשאר אחר מותו ונפש הכסיל תלך אל האפיסה, Pœna (inquit) absoluta est, ut excidatur anima à gradu isto (gaudii, scil. quo piorum animæ in præsentia majestatis divinæ afficiuntur) & perditio, (viz. ut non amplius sit, vel ad nihilum redigatur) quod est Excidium, cujus in lege mentio, atque hoc est quod dicit Sapiens admirabundus, Et quomodo moritur Sapiens sicut Stultus? q. d. cet alibi satis dubiè locutus sit, arguere videntur, non est cum Manasse Ben Israel ea inter eorum sententias discrepantia statuenda, quòd Rambam excisionem animæ ejus annihilationem esse existimet, secus autem Ramban; ut nec probari potest quod ibidem [viz. l. i. de resurrectione, cap. 10. sub finem dicit] Rabbi Moſen Gerundensem [seu Nachmanidem] asserere nihil aliud esse pœnam illam quâ anima afficietur, quam absentiam & carentiam divinæ gratiæ & gloriæ, quæ pro ratione delictorum longa vel brevis est futura. Post hæc cum punita satis fuerit, & ab omni pœna soluta erit anima, tum jungendum ramulum istum iterum radici suæ à qua abscissus erat. Contrarium enim ex iis, quæ jam ex ipso attulimus, patet: quid enim aliud sonant verba illa apud ipsum, f. 99. מלכד צערי præter cruciatus Gehennæ, quam ipsam bonorum istorum carentiam magnam esse revera pœnam, etiamsi graves Gehennæ pœnæ non accederent? quibus addi possent & ex eodem, Cap. Haggamul plura, cum multus ibi sit in describenda ignis infernalis, sive Gehennæ, natura, esse, scil. ipsum, דקה מן הדקה שאינה גוף, subtilem admodum, tenuiorem quam ut propriè corpus appellari possit, ideoque multum ab igne hujus mundi vel elementari discrepare, cum hic in animam hominis, licet corpus consumat, vim exercere non possit, ille verò שורפת הנפשות animas etiam comburat; qualem (inquit) qui fatentur Deum animas & spiritus creâsse, negare non debent, posse ipsum creare eique vim indere, quo in Spiritus istos agat, quare & Gehennam definit, מקום דין המשפט לענוש בו החטאים in pœnis suis pœnis cruciati, quibus nullæ in hoc mundo similes sunt: Cum hujus seculi pœnæ in corpus tantum naturæ crassæ agant, illæ verò in animam, quæ substantiæ purioris est, ideoque longe excedant illas, quas hic pati quis possit, &c. Idem licet aliquorum pœnis certum statuatur terminum, aliorum tamen cruciatus omni termino carere, ut vidimus, asserit. Eo tendunt & quæ apud eundem, f. 97. occurrunt verba, היורד לארץ שוב אינו עולה והם נדונים לדורי דורות, Qui in Orcum descendit, haud unquam iterum ascendit, & qui ibi sunt, puniuntur in secula seculorum: imò potius ex ipsius verbis animarum abolitionem, quia verbo כלל consumptionem de-

Atque ex his quæ allata sunt judicet etiam lector, quomodo intelligendum putet quod à Josepho Albo dictum, l. iv. c. 34. ubi dicit diversos esse pœnarum, ut peccatorum, gradus; fieri enim non posse ut qui aliis patrandis benè, aliis malè, meritis sit, יהיה נדון תמיד בצער המופלג, perpetuo puniatur extremo cruciatu, cum brevius temporis spatium לשכח ההרגל והמנהג sufficiat ad eorum, quibus in hac vita assuetus fuerat, oblivionem inducendam, duodecim, scil. mensium ex sententia veterum, quo postquam pœnas luerit, למדרגה מה ad aliquem præmii gradum transfertur, pro meritorum ratione, alios verò spatio isto exacto, quo ea quibus assueti fuerant dediscant, cum nulla sint ipsis merita, quibus ad istiusmodi gradum provehantur, aut boni alicujus spiritualis participes fiant, ישארו נעדרים manere privatione [damnatos] atque hoc esse כרת Excidium, cui in lege adjudicatur anima peccatrix; atque de his à veteribus dictum, duodecim mensibus exactis absumi corpus ipsorum, spiritum comburi, ipsosque à vento sub plantis pedum iustorum dissipari. * Pœna impiorum in Gehenna, 12 mensium est.

Quod dicitur in contemptum sempiternum, לא ירא להם תקנה, non dici quod nulum sit illis remedium, אלא נדונים יב' חדש, ועולים כראמין כשפט רשעים בגיהנם יב' חדש, Sed puniuntur duodecim mensibus, deinde ascendunt, sicut dicunt, Judicium improborum in Gehenna duodecim mensium est. Sic & quod dicitur (inquit) c. Hazabab. (4. scil. Babæ Metc.) Tres descendere in Gehennam qui non rursus ascendunt, intelligendum דאין עולים לאלתר, quod non statim ascendunt. (sunt illi, הבא על אשת איש והמלכין פני חברו, ויהמכנ' שם רע לחברו, Qui cum alterius uxore rem habuerit, qui socium suum coram multis ad pudorem adigit, qui socio suo nomen infame imponit.) Vel num hæc omnia de Israelitis tantum asseri dices? de quibus Erubin, cap. 2. & Chagigah, cap. ult. dicitur. פושעי ישראל אין אור של גיהנם, שולטת בהם, In peccatores Israelis non habet potestatem ignis Gehennæ, descendente, scil. Abrahamo, atque ipsos ex eo reducete; ut & in Tosiphta ad locum istum, Judicium רשעי ישראל ex Israele est duodecim mensium; post quos, לא חיינ ולא נדונים ושריין בלא טובה ובלה רעה, nec vivunt, nec judicantur, manentque absque bono & absque malo.

(d.) At non omnium בינוניים seu Mediorum, quos vocant, eadem ab ipso ratio statui videtur. Ita certè Shammæi discipuli, c. Rosh Hashana sententiam suam efferunt, לגיהנם יורדים בינוניים, ומצפצפין ועולים, Medii in Gehennam descendunt; ibique ejulant, deinde ascendunt; at Hillelis asseclæ, רב חסד מטה כלפי חסד, Dominus misericordiæ inclinatur ad misericordiam, lancem, scil. propendere facit ad partem innocentiae, לגיהנם, ואינן יורדין Nec descendunt in Gehennam, ut explicat ibidem Scholias. Jam verò Nachmanides, ut distinctè sententiam istam efferat, Quod ad medios (inquit) שעונותיהן, Quorum peccata & merita sunt æquè librata seu æqualia, Deus, qui magnus misericordiæ audit, versùs misericordiam inclinatur. Quod si in מחצה שלהם parte peccatorum quorum rei sunt, sit פושעי ישראל בגופם, sit Peccatum aliquod eorum quæ committunt transgressores Israelis corpore suo, e. g. ut si capiti nunquam Tephillin induerint, eodemve modo in quibusvis præceptis corporis ministerio paragendis, perpetuæ omissionis rei fuerint, ut si nunquam Keryath Shemaa legerint, nec capto cibo gratias egerint, &c. qui ita se habent יורדין לגיהנם, ומוצפצפין ועולי' הימנה, In Gebennam descendunt, ibi vcciferantur, dein ex eadem ascendunt. Quod si alicujus peccata meritis plura sint, atque ex illis transgressionibus quarum Israelitæ (ut dictum) corporibus suis rei fiunt, vel etiam aliæ gentes corporibus suis, v. g. si עריות congressus illiciti reus fuerit, &c. ipse in Gehennam descendens ibi duodecim mensibus detinetur, quibus exactis גפו בלה, &c. corpus ipsius consumitur, spiritus crematur; deinde à Gehenna ejectum ventus sub plantis pedum justorum dissipat. Verum, יהודים המלעיגים על דברי חול', Judæi qui verba sapientum ludibrio habent & Epicurei, & qui legem, & qui resurrectionem mortuorum negant, & qui se à viis cætus [Israelitici] segregant, & qui terrorem suum terræ viventium incutiunt, (viz. Gubernatores qui nimium populo metum incutiunt, non gloriæ Dei causa בגון מלכי הודו, puta Reges Indiæ) licet haud ipsos ad peccandum cogant, sed rectè gubernent, excepto quod homines opiniones & facta sua eò dirigant ut ipsis obsequantur, non ad cultum omnium Domini, & qui peccant, multosque in peccatum trahunt, v. g. Jeroboam f. Nebat, ipsiusque socii; hi omnes in Gehennam descendunt, ibi in secula seculorum cruciandi. Hæ (inquit) tres classes sunt judicandorum die Judicii magni, qui dies præstitutus est ad omnes judicandos, quique est יום חמן העולם הבא, Dies, & tempus [quoddam] seculi futuri, non quod in illud tempus differatur peccatorum poena, cum animæ & ante diem illum in Gehenna crucientur, sed quod & qui jam antea crucientur, היום העתיד, נדונים כאותו היום, ומהכרת והאבד הנפש מתוך העונש והצער הגדול המתחדש עליהם, Die isto futuro judicandi sint ut in Gehennam remittantur, ibique excidatur perdatûrque anima. ipsorum præ cruciatu, & afflictione magna, quæ in ipsos renovatur. Huic judicio prævium est illud, quo de unoquoque horâ mortis statuitur, quo perfectè justî in Gan Eden (qui & ipse est מה"י העולם הבא, Vita quædam seculi futuri reputandus) statim admittuntur; summè impii statim in Gehennam ibi torquendi detruduntur; Medii [eam etiam gustare jussi] inde miserabiliter ejulantes educi se petunt in locum refrigerii. Quod cum in hoc judicio, tum in futuro de iis asseritur. In singulis hisce judiciis ei qui levissimæ omnium pænæ adjudicatur אין לו קצבה non est definita aliqua mensura, sed unusquisque secundum opera ipsius punitur, dein postquam ejulans misericordiam diam imploraverit, liberatur; qui gravissimæ, in secula seculorum cruciatur; Mediorum pœna duodecim menses perdurat, post quos tempore isto, quod iudicium extremum antecedit, à Gehenna liberati מנוחה ואין להם מנוחה silentio traduntur, nec ullius refocillationis participes fiunt. At post duodecim menses à Iudicio extremo, ubi consumptum fuerit ipsorum corpus, ac spiritus igne crematus, ventus ipsos sub plantis pedum iustorum dissipat, quamvis interim gradus ipsis pœnarum discrepantes sint pro diversis peccatorum gradibus, durante illo duodecim mensium spatio, & גיהנם מניחם Gebenna Gebennâ gravior. Hæc fusiùs ex ipso Nachmanide transcribere libuit, quod verba ipsius ab Abarbenele in compendium redacta non integram forsan ipsius sententiam exhibeant; præcipuè verò quod aliter cum sensisse alibi (ut vidimus) affirmet, ubi in hoc ipsi cum Maimonide convenire statuit, quòd uterque excidio omnimodam animæ è medio sublationem indigenti asserat. Quo nihil sententiæ Nachmanidis magis contrarium videtur: qui & Maimonidem aliter sensisse probabile facit. Ipsum verò hoc asseruisse nemini puto, excepto Abarbenele, visum est. Manasse Ben Israel hanc vidimus inter Doctorum istorum sententiâ discrepantiam statuere, quod Rambam animas excidio ad nihilum redigi asserat; secus verò Nachmanides. Certè verbis tam dubiis atque incertis tam suam quam aliorum sententiam hac de re, excidii, scil. animæ naturâ, exprimunt Judæi recentiores, ut vix mihi vel aliis satisfacere, dum eorum doctrinam enarrandam susceperim, aliter possim, quam (ut Judæ Zabara, pari de causa prolatis, verbis utar) dicendo, כתבתי לך הכל ואתה תבחר הנכון, Totum tibi descripsi, tu quod optimum tibi videbitur eligas. Tantum abest ut Abarbenel nobis quod pollicitus est de aliorum sententiis referendis, in illo tractatu præstitisse videatur, ut majorem nobis in iis indagandis, atque inter se conferendis molestiam creaverit: satis est si ipsius sententiam inde hauriamus. Sed lectori id iudicandum relinquimus.

Judab Zabara quæ de animæ post mortem statu & iudicio extremo refert, Nachmanidis doctrinæ consentanea sunt, scil. עולם הנשמות ענין אחר ועולם הבא, aliud esse mundum animarum, aliud mundum futurum, illum, scil. & jam

esse, hunc tandem post diem Iudicii millennario septimo futurum. Gan Eden ergò describit locum esse in eum finem paratum, ut ibi delicerentur piorum animæ במה שישגו מזיו השכינה, Eo quod assequuntur de splendore Majestatis divinæ, &c. quem statum diversis nominibus exprimunt Magistri, scil. dicendo, ipsorum animas positas esse בצדור החיים in fasciculo vitæ, במרום in excelsis, באוצר in thesauro, quibus omnibus nihil aliud innuunt, quam עין מהשגת זיו השכינה consequi ipsos voluptatem è perceptione gloriæ Majestatis divinæ, idem significari eo quod dicunt recondi ipsas sub folio gloriæ. Quâ tamen loquendi formâ subinnui vult, שאין Nondum ipsas perfectionem affecutas; כי לא יתכן לשון גניזה לדבר, שיש לו שלמות quia non convenit verbum גניזה [i. Abscondio, repositio] rei statum perfectum consecutæ. Statum autem istum, Gan Eden dictum, non esse omnibus piis æqualem, sed מעלה ויתרון בין צדיק ל צדיק לפי מה שהטיב מעשיו בעולם הזה, esse unæ præ alio gradum & excellentiam, prout facta sua melius in hoc mundo ordinaverit in sapientia & rectitudine. E contra, Gebennam locum esse paratum, שם נפש הרשע באשו של גיהנם שהוא דק ראוי להיות מלהט, ut in eo uratur animâ impii igne Gebennæ, qui subtilis est, idoneus ad comburendas impiorum animas: respectu cujus, ignis communis est אחד מששים unus è sexaginta. Neque Gebennam omnibus impiis æqualem esse, sed hunc illo pro scelerum, quæ in hoc mundo commisit, ratione graviùs torqueri, כי לפי חיונם ענשם, quia secundum reatum est & pœna ipsorum. Esse eorum alios qui duodecim mensibus puniuntur, deinde ejulant & ascendunt; alios qui in secula seculorum cruciandi sunt: Medios Deum pro misericordia sua à Gebenna eripere. Tres iudicandorum classes tum in iudicio extremo, tum in eo quo de unoquoque horâ mortis statuitur, esse: Deum, cui omnia manifesta sunt, cum videat quinam idonei sint ut in Gan Eden admittantur, quinam ut in Gebennam detrudantur, pœnis ac præmiis in hoc seculo dispensandis, quò illos ob peccata in vita præsentî puniat, hos ob benefacta remuneret, utrosque ad ea quæ post mortem ipsos manent parare, ne vel male facta cuiquam impunè cedant, vel quæ bene, mercede sua careant. Ita statuunt;

statuunt; כשם שנפרעים מן הרשעים בעולם; הנבא אפילו על עברה קלה שעשו כך נפרעים מן הצדיקים בעולם הזה אפילו נפרעים, על עברה קלה שעשו, &c. Ut in mundo futuro vindictam sumunt de impiis etiam ob levissimum peccatum quod commiserint, ita de piis in hoc mundo etiam ob levissimam transgressionem. Et è contra, ut in seculo futuro piis vel ob minimum quod præstiterunt mandatum mercedem reddunt, ita in hoc seculo impiis: Deo inrerim de unoquoque secundum cordis propositum, sive in bono sive malo faciendo sententiam ferente, cum & aliquando secus agant, qui bene agere statuunt, & bonum agant quibus haud rectum est animi propositum, quod & illustrant exemplo ejus qui in foro pauperi Eleemosynam dâns ideo tamen malè facit qui hoc eo fine facit, vel ut ipse benefici nomen consequatur, vel ut pauperi, qui palam accipit, pudorem inferat, cum עקר צדקה Fundamentum Eleemosynæ,^a seu veræ eleemosynæ ratio, sit ut nec sciat qui donat cui dederit, nec qui accipit à quò acceperit. rum quam horum agris inde irrigatis, cum resurrectionis utilitas & præmium iustis tantum erunt; reliquos autem resurgentium præterquam quod in mundo Dei veritatem & divinitatem notam faciant, pœnis cruciandos. Quod & probat dicto R. Eleazari Pirk Ab. c. 4. & è precationum quibus initio anni utuntur formulis, è quibus patere ait, & Davidem & Messiam resurrecturos, & licet Deus in tota terra cognoscatur, futuram tamen & tunc temporis Jerusalem Regis [Dei] sanctuarium. Innui interim etiam dicto R. Eleazaris, non omnes qui ab orbe condito mortui sunt tunc resurrecturos, neque casu fieri ut hic aut ille præ cæteris forte illâ gaudeat, sed prout decreto divino statutum fuerit, ex hac gente decem, centum, aut mille, & ex aliis similiter, prout postulat resurrectionis & cognitionis Dei manifestandæ ratio; minimè autem dubium esse ex Israelitis justos quoscunque resurrecturos, ut redemptionem consequantur, & salutem Domini videant, iisque impletum iri loca desolata, adeò ut dicant, Angustus est mihi locus, &c. huc spectare quod dicitur, Omni Israelitæ sors, &c. interpretantibus Rashi & Ramban, &c. doceri, scil. hac Mishna resurrecturos primo omnes ex Israele justos, ac venturos ut terram possideant, &c. Hæc dum asserit R. Eleazar, scil. morituros, qui nati sunt: mortuos victuros, &c. non tamen dicere כל הילודים omnes qui nati, sed indefinitè, ut ita appareat resurrectionem קצתית particularem futuram, eâ ratione quam ipse descripsit [scil. ex omni gente aliquos tantum comprehensuram.]

In illo dicto, Tres libri aperiuntur initio anni perfectè justorum, perfectè malorum, & mediorum, perfectè iustum appellari eum cujus opera bona multa sunt, perfectè malum cujus opera mala plura, &c. Dicunt, si cujus merita multa sunt, transgressiones paucæ, illum ob transgressiones paucas in hoc mundo puniri, ut in futuro plenam bonorum mercedem recipiat: è contra cum eo cujus transgressiones multæ, bona opera pauca, agi.

Convenit cum hac, in præfatione ad Is. radix sexta, ubi ait, impossibile esse ut omnes, qui unquam ab initio mundi vixerint, resurgant, quia non caperet eos terra: Deinde cum statuunt non omnes resurrecturos, quærit quinam resurgent, aut quomodo fiet discrimin? num casu & fortuitò, an aliter, &c. Deinde aliorum sententias recenset, quibus eodem quo hîc modo confutatis, addit de sententia ista, Beneficium pluviae omnibus, resurrectio mortuorum justis tantum, esse eam è Baraittha, dictum R. Abahu, c. 1. Taanioth, neque ab omnibus receptam, quia & ibi dictum, Dissentit R. Joseph, &c. Et in Pirke Eleezer ad illud, Victuri sunt mortui tui, dici à Sapien- tibus, Omnes mortuos ascensuros in resur- rectione mortuorum exceptâ generatione diluvii, de quibus dictum est, Mortui sunt, non resurgent, &c. cæteras gentes, quæ sunt cadaveribus bestiarum similes, resurrecturas quidem, non autem victu- ras.

(a) R. Saadiah c. Techiat Hammetim. Si quis (inquit) quærat quinam resurre- turi sint tempore salutis, respondeo, om- nes justos & על תשובה pœnitentiam agentes. Quisquis enim sine pœnitentia moritur, est ipse è numero הענושים pu- niendorum, &c. quod & rationi (inquit) consentaneum, cum Deus pœnitenti spem fecerit se ipsum acceptum habiturum multis Scripturæ locis, quæ promissa ad omnes pœnitentes pertinere asserunt Rab- bini, qui peccatores in quatuor classes distribuentes, 1. cum quis præceptum ali- quod affirmativum violaverit. 2. cum è negativis aliquod transgressus fuerit. 3. cum peccata Excidii & morti à Beith Din seu Judicibus infligendæ obnoxia commiserit, 4. cum ab ipso profanatum fuerit nomen Dei. Dixerunt postea, vel forsan fieri potest, ut propitiationem illi acquirat mors, quod docet, Ecce ego aperio sepulchra vestra: Ecce pertinet resurre- ctio ad omnem qui pœnitentiam egerit. Dico (inquit) insuper paucos è gente nos- trâ sine pœnitentiâ mori.

&c. q. d. principii gratiâ totum creavit. Dixerunt etiam ibidem, Quo tempore ve- nit Serpens ad Evam, inquinamentum su- um in ipsam injecit, per quod intelligen- tur concupiscentia mala, ideoque pœ- næ mortis adjudicatum est semen ejus. Israelitis, qui in monte Sinai steterunt, i. e. Legem acceperunt, quæ est arbor vitæ, ablatum est inquinamentum illud, & idonei facti sunt qui in seculum vivant; Gentibus quæ ibi non constiterunt, non ablatum est in- quinamentum suum, nec idonei sunt qui vi- vant. Non convenit ergò resurrectio alii quam Israelitis. Hoc de gente [quâ- libet] in genere, affirmatur; sunt tamen individui quidam è piis gentium qui vi- vent quibûsque fors est in mundo futuro, uti declaratum est Tract. Abud. Zar. c. 1. hoc certò affirmâsse R. Hakkadosh Antonino. Insuper manifestum est, re- surrectionem justorum esse, non improbo- rum, juxta illud ipsorum dictum, De- missio pluviae ad pios & impios pertinet, resurrectio mortuorum ad justos, non ad in- justos. Quin & hoc suadet ratio, quia impii etiam dum vivunt pro mortuis ha- bentur, quia vitæ quæ animæ est, curam non habent, sed corporis tantum, dum voluptatibus corporeis indulgent. Quo- modo ergo vivent postquam mortui fu- erint, uti verba exposuerunt in cap. Mi- shemeto ad verba בן איש חי Filius homi- nis vivi, ut dixerunt, c. 1. Taanioth, Jacob pater noster non est mortuus, quod verum est etiamsi condierint ipsum pol- linctores, & sepelierint vespillones. Dix- erunt etiam c. היה קורא Hajab kore, &c. Ubi de R. loquitur, quod fuerit נעתק מן החיים à vita ad vitam transla- tus.

Consona sunt hæc iis quæ supra, p. 157, occurrunt, ubi & veterum dictum lauda- tur, Mali etiam dum vivunt mortui appel- lantur, &c. quam loquendi formam eti- am à meliori magistro accepimus. Ita Christus, Mat. viii. 22. Sine mortuos sepe- lire mortuos suos. Et Paulus, 1 Tim. v. 6. Quæ in deliciis versatur, ea vivens mor- tua est. Sic & locutos veteres Arabes, tes- tatur illud Poëtæ,

ليس من مات واستراح عيت
انما الميت ميت الاحياء

Non qui devixit & quievit, mortuus est, sed [verè] mortuus mortuus est vivorum. E contra ut Judæis justi etiam post mor- tem vivi audiunt, sic & in Alcor. اموات Mortuos imo vivos apud Dominum suum, legimus Sur. 3. Sed & quemadmodum resurrectionem justorum tan-

tantum esse volunt eorum nonnulli, ita & in N. T. Resurrectio iustorum appellatur, non quod impii non sint resurrecturi, sed quod prodibunt qui bona fecerunt soli in resurrectionem vitæ; qui vero mala, in resurrectionem condemnationis, quæ mors potius quam vita censenda: cum illi omnes quos iustorum nomine indignos censent, resurrecturos negent. Ubi observatu dignum quos tandem privilegio isto exclusos volunt, viz. non solum improbos & sceleratos, sed & totam Idiotarum turbam, quam ut & è Johan. vii. 49. discimus, pro execrabili habebant, quorum alicui non aliam patere volunt ad alterum seculum viam, quam quæ ipsi docti cunjuspiam, cujus sibi favorem conciliaverit, gratiâ aperiatur. Hoc est, quod è Tractatu Talmudico Cetuboth. [scil. c. 13.] laudat idem Judab Zabara שעמי הארץ, Quod populus terræ (ut vocant) sive Idiotæ non sint resurrectionem consecuturi, nisi respectu necessitudinis alicujus, quæ ipsis cum discipulis sapientum fuerit, veluti, si filiam illis dote magnâ elocaverint, aut mercaturam pro ipsis exercuerint, ut ipsis lucrum inde accedat, & quod negotiis vacui legis studio incumbant: hoc enim ipsis imputatum iri, ac si ipsi divinæ Majestati adhæsisent. Quanti doctorum interesset hoc à vulgo seridè credi?

Eandem fere sententiam de eorum qui resuscitandi sunt paucitate, amplexus videtur Josephus Albo, qui Ikkarim l. iv. c. 31. quatuor ait esse accipiendæ mercedis tempora, 1. העולם הזה in hoc seculo. 2. העולם הבא אחרי המות אם קודם תחיית המתים, In seculo futuro, post mortem, tam ante quam post resurrectionem mortuorum. 3. ימות המשיח Diebus Messia. 4. תחיית המתים In resurrectione mortuorum. Præmia his temporibus distribuenda, diversorum etiam generum esse: Atque esse aliquos, quibus hæc omnia contingent, viz. perfectè justos, alios, qui hoc tantum seculo remunerabuntur, impios, scil. quibus paucorum quæ præstiterunt bonorum mercedem in hoc mundo reddit Deus, quo in futuro puniantur; alios è iustorum numero, quibus in hac vita nullum reddetur præmium, statim tamen post mortem vitam seculi futuri consequentur; nullam autem in resurrectione mortuorum sortem habituri sint; alios demum qui etiam vitâ seculi futuri fruentur & diebus Messia. Duas ergò tantum hominum, in quatuor divisorum, classes, easque sine dubio reliquis numero impares (ut summe bonorum quam aliorum minor copia est) statuit qui resurrectionis participes futuri sint. Eadem de re cap. 35. pluribus agens, postquam dixerit rem esse consideratu dignam, אם התחיה כוללת לכל העולם כמו שקצת האומות ואומות או תחיה לכלל האומה או לקצתם, Futurane sit resurrectio toti mundo communis, uti asserunt gentes aliquæ, aut toti genti Israeliticæ, aut parti tantum ipsius, addit, כי זה דבר לא נמצא, Rem esse, cujus nullum sit in Scriptura satis firmum indicium. Quod enim in Daniele dicitur, Multi ex dormientibus, &c. si de resurrectione intelligendum sit, probare resurrectionem nec universo mundo, nec omnibus Israelitis, imo nec multis admodum ipsorum competere, sed potius paucis; eum enim esse hoc loco nominis רבים Rabbim, intellectum, ut & alibi, e. g. Ester. viii. 17. ורבים מעמי הארץ כתיב, Et Rabbim è populis terræ facti sunt Judæi, non de multis, (inquit) sed de paucis intelligendum, tribus forsân, quatuor, quinque, sex, vel & centum, vel mille, ut vertatur & aliqui. Nec non, Prov. xix. 6. רבים יחלו פני נריב Rabbim, multi, i. e. [aliqui] precabuntur faciem liberalis. Confirmari hoc dicto illo veterum Plurivæ beneficium probis & improbis commune, resurrectio mortuorum perfectè iustorum propria. Quod si (inquit) dixerimus resurrectionem mortuorum toti vel mundo, vel saltem populo Israelitico communem futuram; omnes nempe resuscitatum atque in judicium die ei rei præstituto vocatum iri, quo meneant pii gaudii perpetui participes, impii verò pœnas sempiternas sustineant, tum non erit locus iste Danielis de resurrectione mortuorum intelligendus, sed de gentis Judaicæ, sive eorum qui digni visi fuerint, ab humili in meliorem statum, eumque stabilem nec mutationi obnoxium, sive sub Hasmoneis, sive sub Messia, electione. Utut ergò fieri possit ut sit resurrectio universalis, non tamen esse in scripturis aliquid unde disertè probetur. Porro ex eorum sententia, qui eum autumant esse resurrectionis finem, ut corporis ob cultum ejus operâ Deo præstitum ꝑ perficiatur merces, cum hoc Dei justitiæ consentaneum sit ut eidem qui bene fecerit præmium, eidem qui malè, pœna rependatur, (quamvis haud satis validum sit hoc argumentum, cum non instrumentum, sed qui eo usus est, puniatur, non gladius, sed homicida) sequi non futuram ipsam סגולות אלא ליחיד Nisi particularibus quibusdam notæ primariæ, e. g. Mosi, Aaroni, &c. tunc miraculosè resuscitandis, ut Dei fidem per totum terrarum orbem notam faciant. Ex eorum verò, qui ejus finem asserunt hunc esse; ut corpus Dei obsequentis præmio, rebellis pœnâ afficiatur, statuendum futuram ipsam vel toti hominum generi, vel cætui Israelitico, vel saltem majori ipsorum parti die judicii, cum omnes vel præmium, vel pœnam meriti sint; quod tamen ut minimè probabile putat, ita & absurditatis arguere conatur quærendo, "quodnam tandem hominis corpus tunc temporis resurrecturum sit, cum quotidie mutetur corpus pro alimentorum ratione, adeo ut necesse sit ut cum Rubene multa ac diversa resuscitentur corpora pro temporum quibus mutationem subiit discrepantia, quo singula felicitate istâ fruantur. Neque enim sufficere ut dicatur, Rubeni novum fore corpus priori prorsus temperamento, figurâ & proprietatibus simile, quo præmium illud accipiat, quænam enim hîc esset Dei justitia? neque enim convenit ut Simeoni merces reddatur ob illud quod à Rubene præstitum." Argumentum fanè frigidum & dilutum, & quo se excusare possit sceleratus quis ad pœnas ob flagitium à se commissum post aliquod temporis intervallum postulatus, alium, scil. se jam factum, alias esse manus istas quam quæ furtum, aut homicidium patraverunt. Præfert tamen ergò Rambami sententiam, quâ mercedem seculo futuro conferendam animæ propriam statuit; ac resurrectionis finem non esse לתור שבר ad præmium corpori reddendum, sed ut majorem perfectionem consequatur resuscitatus, obstaculis, quibus antea in præstandis Dei mandatis impeditus fuerat, jam è medio sublati, unâque magna Dei potentia ipsiusque veritas illustretur, ideoque esse ipsam justorum tantum privilegium, non aliis communicandum. Hinc igitur de ipsius opinione satis constat, non admodum multos resuscitarum iri, nedum generalem fore resurrectionem, quod tamen erant forsan è Judæis, qui assererent: inter quos censendus videtur Abul Baracat iste, qui commentarios in Ecclesiasten Arabicè scripsit, dum ad verba ista, c. iii. 21. Quis novit si Spiritus hominum ascendat sursum, & si spiritus jumentorum descendat deorsum; hæc habet, פקאל מי יודע וג' עלי רסם אלתוכיך ואלנכרה עליהם פקאל אן מן הו עארף מתהקק רוח בני האדם עולה למעלה ואנהא מחפופה ענר אלכאלק אלי יום אלנשר פירדהא אלי גסדהא ואן רוח הכהמה לים להא רגעה כל הי נאולה אלי ספל אלארץ מתל אלנסם אלדי יתלאשא ויצמהל פארא עלם דלך ותהקקה פינג עליה אן לא יקים נפסה כאלכהאים וירכב שהותה והו יעלם Dixit, Quis novit, &c. viâ increpationis & averſationis ipsorum, quasi diceret, Quisquis noverit, ac pro certo habuerit, Spiritum hominum ascendere sursum, ac servari ipsum apud Creatorem usque ad diem resurrectionis, qui tum in corpus suum ipsum remittet, spiritum autem jumentum non iterum reverti, sed descendere in imum terræ instar corporis quod tabescit & dissolvitur; hæc cum certò noverit, oportet illum non se jumentorum more gerere, & cupiditatibus suis indulgere, cum sciat Deum de ipso rationem sumpturum. Hæc sive ex sua, sive R. Samuelis etiam cujusdam quem laudat, aliorumque sententia proferat, videtur hanc inter hominum in genere & brutorum animas differentiam statuere: Quod hæc unâ cum corporibus pereant, illæ in manus Dei tradantur, iterum corporibus die resurrectionis mortuorum omnibusve ad rationem revocandis præstituto, restituendæ. Autor commentarii perhibetur اوحده اتران Aubado-zzaman [Phoenix sæculi] Abul Baracat Medicus, ille forsan cui nomen alias هبة الله Hebatol lai, qui sub Moktaſho Ebnil' Mostadberi Chalifa floruit, & à Judaismo tandem ad Mohammedanismum descivit: vir eruditione insignis, libri inter cæteros, Philosophici, cui titulum المعتبر Al Motabar indidit, autor, quo tantopere gloriatus est, ut monumento suo inscribi moriens juberet, قبر اوحده الزمان ابي البركات ذي العبر صاحب المعتبر Sepulchrum Auhadi-Zaman, Abil Baracati, variis casibus insignis, authoris [libri] Al Motabar. Cujus inscriptionis ad illustrationem quæ faciant hujus loci non sunt.

Porro, quæ jam apud Judæos invaluerunt (ut vidimus) sententias de subjecto resurrectionis non malè retulit Tacritius, ubi & easdem confutat قاما اليهود فيقولون &c. Judæi verò dicunt, tum demum cum advenerit ille quem Messiam autumant, resurrekturos homines; resuscitatum iri, scil. Israelitarum præstantissimos è sepulchris, e. g. Noam, Abrahamum, Isaacum, Jacobum, &c. atque in hoc mundo vitam corpoream vikturos, unâque cum illis Judæos omnes, esuros, bibituros, & uxores ducturos. Alii è Judæis, dicunt ejusmodi resurrectionem

surrectionem ad Israelitas tantum, non alias gentes pertinere; neque enim illam cæteris nationibus communem esse, quod confirmare satagunt è visione, quam vidit Ezekiel Propheta in valle extra Babellem, cum Deum rogasset ut ipsi ostenderet, quo pacto mortui resurgerent. fuisse ergo illum Deum in vallem exire mortuorum cadaveribus refertam, dixitque illi, Vaticinare: [quod illo faciente] flanteque vento unitæ sunt compages, ossaque alia aliis conjuncta, superveniente carne, &c. [Hinc patet] non esse rem Deo impossibilem, neque ultra potentiam ejus, qui initio hominem formavit, eundem, quando & quomodo voluerit, statui pristino restituere; cum potentia ejus infinita sit. Nos autem dicto huic eo fine adducto ut probeatur omnes gentes perditum iri, neque resurrekturos alios quam Israelitas aut vel ex ipsis justos, ut autumant Judæi, opponimus, Deum justum esse, & erga nos & illos; justitiæ autem non est, ut quis, benè merentium quibusdam omissis, aliis benè faciat, aut aliis quam mala patrantibus malum rependat. Quod si bonos benè, malos malè tractare statuerit, non convenire ut بعض دون البعض hoc aliis præ aliis faciat, cum remuneratio justa لا يكون مقصورا على أمة دون أمة أو على شخص دون شخص non restringatur ad gentem, præ gente, vel personam præ personâ: quod si dixerint, Deum hoc facere, prout Israelem sibi in peculium præ reliquis gentibus elegerit, ut ad illos nuntios & Prophetas mitteret; atque ita & resurrectione alios præ aliis dignari: respondemus, Si contenderetis futuram resurrectionem Israelitarum tantum, non aliarum gentium, fuisset in eo quod dicitis بعض الضلالة error aliquis [forsan legend. العدالة æquitas aliqua] atqui vos eam Israelitis propriam, exclusis Esauï aut Hami posteris, statuitis, deinde Israelitarum aliquibus præ aliis, في باب quod nihil cum æquitate commune habet. Nos autem Christiani confitemur resurrectionem omnibus hominibus communem futuram, credentibus, & infidelibus, bona & mala facientibus, parvis & magnis, viris & fœminis.

(b) Ita etiam & Josepho Albo videtur. Qui asseruerit (inquit) tempore resurrectionis perstitura corpora vel in gaudio vel cruciatu perpetuo, ita interim ut nec edant nec bibant, nec amplius moriantur, quo præmium perpetuo duraturum vel pœnam accipiant, neque tamen fore resurrectionem toti mundo, vel majori hominum parti communem, imò nec vel omnibus Israelitis, vel majori ipsorum parti, sed paucorum tantum ex iis, viz. perfectè justorum, propriam, הנה הוא כמי שקבץ בין הסלוק והקיום ולא ירגיש בזה, Ecce est ut qui idem simul affirmat, & negat, neque illud percipit: cum si affirmetur partem tantum hominum, omissis aliis, resurrekturos, statui non possit eum in finem ipsos resuscitari, ut factorum mercedem accipiant, sed ob alios quos jam dixit, fines, scil. fidem Dei publicandam, vel ut nonnullis majora merendi opportunitas præbeatur.

Ait ergo Cl. Vir Johannes Cochius, sectam Nachmanidis “duplicem statuere resurrectionem, generalem, scil. omnium hominum in decretorio illo die Judicii magni, cum supremi judicis sententia alios vitæ æternæ, alios Tartaro adjudicabit, &c. Ante hanc verò aliam, quâ non nisi qui meriti fuerint, ad consueta vitæ terrestris munia reverti sint, quando Christus advenerit; eosque exacto justo tempore vel iterum morituros, vel mutatum iri.” Rationi certè consentaneum videtur, ut qui primam resurrectionem tam paucorum statuit, aliam pluribus communem statueret; sed hoc, ut vidimus, in Magistro istius doctrinæ desiderant è suis alii: & nescio an ex ipsius verbis tale aliquid colligi possit, utpote qui, cap. Gamul, f. 100. dicat judicium illud magnum statim resurrectionem hanc primam secuturum, scil. die aliquo מתחלת ימות התחייה in principio dierum resurrectionis sententiam de omnibus ferendam, על ענין אותו שכר העתיד לעולם הבא אם ראוי לתחיית המתים ולנעם הגוף respektu ejus mercedis quæ rependenda est seculo futuro, num quis dignus fuerit resurrectione mortuorum, & deliciis corpore & animâ isto tempore fruendis. Solos ergo illos qui felicitate ista digni censebuntur resurrekturos, dici ergo in Daniele, Multi, non Omnes.

De improbis ergo quid? יגמור דינם לדראון עולם שלא ינעמו בחיים ההם אלא ישארו בדראון שלהם או וכפל עליהם עונש ממדה קשה לרעה ממנה כפי מה Perficietur judicium ipsorum quo in contemptum sempiternum [cedant] nec delicientur vitâ istâ, sed in contemptu suo maneat, aut duplicetur ipsis pœna à statu [quo sunt] malo in alium adhuc ipso graviorem, prout meriti fuerint: & ubicunque, inquit, inveneris in Rabbiorum antiquiorum scriptis mentionem ארכות העונשים

לעתיד prolongationem pœnarum in futurum הוא מהכרת הנפש ההוטאת intelligendam esse de excidio animæ peccatricis tempore illo. Ac rursus, f. 101. postquam pœnas Gebennæ, quibus crucian turanimæ, descripserat, subjungit, ועוד הדין הזה נכפל על מחוייבי הכרת ביום הדין הגדול ונידונין בו בניהנם עד שמהכלין, Atque adhuc duplicatur judicium istud in excidii reos die judicii magno, quo adjudicantur Gehennæ usque dum consumantur. Quid per consumptionem istam intelligendum jam antea vidimus: nulla hic interim resurrectionis impiorum die isto, neque aliarum, quam quas animabus luituri sunt, pœnarum mentio. R. Judab Zabara, qui in plerisque Nachmanidem sequitur, rem planè dubiam relinquit, iis quæ jam antea laudavimus, verbis, quibus asserit, quod statuti sint improbi in judicio, haud in bonum hoc illis cessurum, sed in malum ut graviora, quam hæcenus, patiantur הן בנפש הן הן בנפש sive in anima, sive in corpore & anima simul: & quæ ex libro מגלה המגלה Megalleh Hammegillab, citat, scil. non posse fieri ut sit dies judicii simul cum resurrectione mortuorum, quòd resurrectio Israelitarum tantum sit, non aliarum gentium, quod nisi aliorum etiam corpora resuscitarentur (quamvis hoc resurrectionis nomine haud appellandum censent) quid impedit quo minus eodem tempore quo vitæ restituerentur Israelitarum corpora, de animabus simul aliorum sententia ferretur? Quamvis autem ex istis, quæ vidimus, Nachmanidis verbis haud adeò perspicuè evincatur duplex, cujus meminimus, resurrectio, (nisi alibi eam adstruat) à Saadia tamen creditam liquet: utpote qui hæc haud alias facilia inter se conciliatu asserat, 1. pertinere resurrectionem mortuorum ad Israelitas solos; eosque justos, vel qui pœnitentiam egerint. 2. quod à quibusdam affirmatur, eos qui tempore resurrectionis in vivis erunt, postquam diu vixerint (annos puta quadringentos vel quingentos) morituros העולם ולא יהיו עד העולם nec rursus victuros usque ad seculum futurum, sibi valde probabile videri. 3. Illis Danielis verbis, Multi dormientium in terra expergiscuntur, illi ad vitam æternam, illi ad contemptum sempiternum, non ita distribui eos qui vitæ restituentur, ut sint illorum alii in Gan Eden, alii in Gebenna, sed eos qui in sepulchris fuerint, ita ut multi illi qui expergiscuntur, vitæ æternæ donentur, reliqui verò qui non expergiscuntur, sint in contemptum perpe-tuum. 4. tam pœnam quam præmium mundi futuri, quæ utraque æterna, לגוף ולנפש corpori & animæ simul contingere in loco, quem ei fini, postquam cœlos hos & terram hanc ad nihilum redegerit, creaturus est Deus, quæ licet his prorsus dissimilia, iisdem tamen nominibus cœli & terræ novorum indignantur. Ubi & obiter sententiam ipsius de Cereth, sive animæ excidio, observare licet, quæ ut magis pateat, apponemus & ipsius responsum ad quæstionem, Quinam sint qui pœnis æternis (aliis alii, pro meritorum ratione) adjudicandi sint, viz. הכופרים והמשתנים ובעלי העבורות, החמורות אשר לא עשו תשובה, Athei, Idololatræ, & transgressionum gravium rei qui pœnitentiam non egerint. De atheis, sive hæreticis, & Idololatræ dici Isai. ult. Egredientur & videbunt cadavera prævaricantium in me, &c. peccatorum gravium reos haberi eos quibus decretum est in lege Cereth, [Excidium] aut mors à confesso judicium infligenda. כי כאשר יכרתו מעולם הזה יציאו אלהכרת בעולם יכרתו מעולם הזה יציאו אלהכרת בעולם Cum enim excidio ex hoc mundo tolluntur, abeunt ut excidio tollantur in altero mundo etiam, è cœtu justorum, eo quod non egerint pœnitentiam. Quòd si hîc pœnam istam non subierint, sed ad justum vitæ terminum pertigerint, patientiam erga illos exercente Deo, neque interim resipuerint, יהיה עונשו יותר קשה והכרתו מבין Futura est pœna ipsorum gravior, ac justius erit ut è cœtu justorum excidantur; eo quòd patientiâ Dei ad resipiscentiam perducere noluerint: at qui istiusmodi peccatorum rei non sint, à Deo propitio veniam consecuturos. Idem & de duplici resurrectione affirmare videtur Aben Ezra, ad Daniel, c. xii. ubi justos, qui tempore Messie vitæ restituentur, iterum morituros, ac in judicio demum extremo alia vice resuscitandos asserit. Verba ipsius ad Artic. 14, adducendi erit occasio.

Sciendum (inquit) esse hâc etiam de re (a) varias sententias. Autumare enim Haggæonem, eos qui resurgent esuros, bibituros, uxores ducturos, uti fecerunt Sarephthanæ & Sbunamitidis filii, quos resuscitavit Eliab, præceptisque implendis præmium mereri; dein ad gaudia mundi futuri translatum iri, ut ibi corpore simul & animâ delicientur, haudquaquam ex esu, cæterisque corporis deliciis voluptatem captantes, quo modo Moses in monte permansit: neque ibi amplius morituros, juxta illud Magistrorum, Mortui, quos resuscitaturus est Deus, non sunt amplius ad pulverem reversuri. Eodem modo scribere Ramban, illos qui denuo vivent, eodem modo se habituros, quo hujus mundi incolæ, sc. esuros, bibituros, Venerem exercituros, filios genituros, &c. qui in hoc tamen ab Haggæone discrepat, quod asserat, eos haud perpetuo victuros, sed multis diebus exactis rursus morituros, juxta illud Prophetæ, Instar dierum arboris dies populi mei. Longævitatē inde esse, quod tunc omnia ad corporis sustentationem spectantia justâ mensurâ & modo peragent, quo æquale materiæ & humoris radicalis temperamentum pro temporis, loci, aerisque ambientis ratione conservetur, quodque tranquillitate sine molestia & tristitia fruituri sint, unâque Domino in omnibus obsecuturi, cujus timor prolongat dies. Diu igitur tunc temporis victuros, necessariò tamen demum morituros, quoniam miraculi ratio in hoc consistit, quod animabus in corpora redeuntibus, ea, ut prius, denuo vivant, non quod naturâ ipsorum mutatâ immortalia reddantur quæ antea corruptioni obnoxia erant, aut membra nulli usui inservientia habeant, ut ita Deus quid frustraneum aut superfluum fecerit. Neque resurrectionem finem hominis ultimum, aut præmium ipsius verum esse, sed bonum illud justis reconditum, viz. præmium ipsorum spirituale animæque proprium in mundo animarum, quo demum revertentur animæ, materia ejusque accidentibus nudatæ, & ab iisdem separatæ. Neque enim putare Doctorem istum præceptorum mercedem corporis atque animæ simul esse, sed animæ, tantum; de hac voluptate [animæ] prolatum esse à R. illud, (b) In mundo futuro nec editur nec bibitur. At Ramban (inquit) non ita sentit, verum post dies Messia revicturos mortuos, animabus particularibus in corpora particularia redeuntibus eodem modo quo in hoc mundo fuerunt: resuscitados autem nec esuros, nec bibituros, neque voluptatibus corporeis ullatenus fruituros, sed è splendore majestatis divinæ corpore simul & animâ voluptatem capturos, ut (c) Moss, cum in monte quadraginta diebus & noctibus subsistit, nihil interim edens vel bibens, contigit, nec non Elia Prophetæ; & ad tempus resurrectionis spectare dictum Rabbæ, in mundo futuro nec editur nec bibitur, quia cum ibi reperiantur corpora, necesse fuit ut indicaret, non tamen desideris corporeis ferri. Et hunc in sensum dictum esse, Absorpta est mors in victoriam. Hanc esse Nachmanidis sententiam, quam amplectuntur etiam רבני צרפת Doctores Gallia, nec non חכמי ספרד Sapientibus Hispania multi, eandemque Christianorum sententiam esse, viz. tempore resurrectionis resuscitados, neque esuros neque bibituros, neque uxores ducturos, aut liberos genituros, neque denuo morituros, sed immortales permanuros, corpore & anima unitis, instar corporum cœlestium, eosque ab ipsis Glorificatos appellari; asserere etiam Nachmanidem ipsiusque sequaces, non esse quod objiciatur, membra nutritioni & generationi inservientia, &c. tempore resurrectionis frustra futura, cum Deus tunc temporis ea restitutus sit eo quo antea fuerant modo, ne ullatenus mutetur natura creationis: Præterea quod in forma humana magna lateant mysteria, ob quæ primo efformata est, & ob quæ continuari eam vult Deus ut perpetua sint, uti & in initio statuerat, cum primò (d) Adamum formaret, etsi è materia compositus fuerit, si non peccasset, ut immortalis esset.

Inter has duas sententias rectè dijudicare arduum & multi studii negotium putat: se tamen (e) ad Maimonidis partes inclinare, cujus sententiam multis se alibi argumentis confirmasse scribit, quorum & nonnulla hîc adducit. 1. Quia si resuscitati membris suis & sensibus nihil agent, eruntque in se immortales, non iidem erunt qui mortui sunt, cum corpora & membra ipsorum non sint eadem quæ ante, cum antea naturâ passibilia erant, פועלים כמזגיהם actiones secundum temperamenti sui rationem edentia, corruptibilia, &c. jam naturæ planè diversæ, incorruptibilis & impassibilis, rationalis, nec tamen facultatibus suis aut sensibus utentis: non minus ergò à præsentibus discrepantia, quam cœlestia à corruptibilibus hisce. Erit ergò nova creatio non resurrectio mortuorum dicenda, magis quam figura in pariete Rubenem referens ipse Ruben dicenda,

2. Quoniam si voluptas, quâ ibi fruuntur, erit à splendore Majestatis divinæ spiritualis, non possunt eâ delectari corpora, cum unusquisque sensus sensibili proprio oblectetur, non aliquo quod cum eo non specie, imò nec genere conveniat, uti odoratus è sonis musicis voluptatem non percipit, nec gustus è formis pulchris; si ergò tum voluptatibus sensitivis non afficietur homo, quibus tandem fruatur corpus ipsius, cum Majestas divina sensuum ejus objectum non sit?

3. Quòd tum (ut objicit Maimonides) frustra essent sensus & facultates [corporeæ.] Cui objectioni non satisfacere ait Nachmanidis responsum, scil. Deum naturam creationis tunc mutaturum, & sensuum usum & corruptibilitatem ablatum; si enim in hoc quod præcipuum est mutabitur natura, quare non etiam respectu instrumentorum & membrorum? Quòd si in figurâ humanâ lateant mysteria aliqua, erunt illa in unoquoque membro & facultate ad finem aliquem directâ; at sublato fine futura sunt instrumenta ista necessariò frustranea. Quòd etiam adducit de Adamo, nihili esse. Nam licet dictum sit, Quo die comederis ex illo, morieris, non hoc indicari, (faciente ipso Nachmanide) tum futurum eum corruptibilem, quòd si non peccasset, non fuisse unquam moriturum, cum enim è contrariis compositus fuerit, necessariò & moriturus erat. Nihil aliud innui igitur verbis istis, quam morti ipsum ante diem suum obnoxium fieri peccato suo. Hoc ex maledicti forma patere, donec redieris, &c. nulla mutationis naturæ mentione factâ. Sapientes igitur, cum dicant Adamum, si non peccasset, haudquaquam moriturum fuisse, mortem animæ intelligere. Ita divinum [illum] R. Simeonem Ben Jochai scripsisse, si non peccasset Adam, futuram fuisse vitam ipsius longiorem, demum tamen moriturum fuisse ratione temperamenti sui & materiæ suæ, quia spiritus supernè deveniens non dat corpori permanentiam & immortalitatem, cum ipsum naturâ suâ corruptibile & è contrariis compositum fuerit, bonitatem tamen dispositionis intellectualis dies prolongare. Supposito tamen Adamum immortalem futurum fuisse si non peccasset, necesse est, ut dicamus Deum ipsum creâsse temperamento ad æquale proximè ac-

cedente, adeò ut eo quod præcepit Deus regimine usus possibile esset ut perduraret: at postquam rebellasset affectibus corporeis indulgens, rebûsque materialibus implicatus fuisset, exiisse è temperamenti æqualitate, & morti facile obnoxium factum. Nihilominus tam ipsum, quam ejus seculi homines, diu vixisse, quòd à temperamento isto parentis primi propius abessent, à quo successu temporis longius recesserunt posterì, donec ad terminum infra quem descendi non possit quòd ad humidum radicale pervenerint, eum, scil. quo nos jam sumus, quibus vitæ terminus septuaginta anni, neque enim ob diluvium (ut putant Nachmanides aliique) abbreviatam fuisse hominum vitam, &c. Corpora ergò si eadem resurgent, eodem futura temperamento, ideoque non ejusdem cum corpore Adami rationis, sed corruptioni magis obnoxia. Quòd de Elia dicitur, ipsum in cælum sublatum fuisse; illud figurate dictum, ipsum enim ad supremam aëris regionem evectum, ubi igne absumptis corpore & vestibibus ligata est anima ipsius in fasciculo vitæ apud Dominum, uti scribit R. David Kimchius: Quòd si concedatur miraculum illud in Elia ob ipsius sanctimoniam, & quòd קנה לאלהי magno zelo Dei gloriam prosecutus est, non tamen convenit ut idem toti hominum multitudini futurum in resurrectione credamus, ut nec idem quòd Mosi contigit quòd ad legem recipiendam idoneus esset, ad quadraginta dies, itane omnibus eventurum dicemus non quadraginta diebus tantum, sed in omnem æternitatem? Quin & textus qui mortem sublatum iri affirmare videntur, si penitius introspiciantur, nihil tale indicare, è. g. Absorpta est mors לנצח in æternum; illud enim vel de tempore captivitatis intelligendum, non amplius morituros Israelitas manu inimicorum, vel morte innui afflictionem, exponente David Kimchio; quòd si de resurrectione exponatur, dicendum tunc quando resurgent mortui sublatum iri falsam illam [quorundam] sententiam, quâ mortem perpetuam fore credunt, i. e. mortuos perpetuo detenturam ne amplius ad vitam revertantur; ut valeat Absorpta est mors in perpetuum, &c. sublata est hæc ex animis hominum sententia, mortem esse perpetuam, &c. & Deum omnem lachrymam abstersurum, &c. quòd tum non amplius lugebunt mortuos, vel Israelitarum opprobrium ablatum, manifestatione veritatis, &c. nequaquam autem dici eos qui resurgent non amplius morituros. Quod ad dictum Angeli [Illi ad vitam æternam,] non indicari eo immortalitatem, sed tempus diuturnum, ut cum dicitur, Serviet ei in seculum, atque ubi dicitur, Ut stellæ in seculum & æternum; seculum & æternum ibi dici de stellis, non de illis qui multos ad justitiam convertent, neque enim illis promississe ipsum aliud, quam fulsuros ipsos in gradu suo, cum sint corruptioni obnoxii, instar stellarum, quæ naturâ immortales sunt & perpetuo duraturæ.

Quod ad testimonium, quod adducunt è Perek Chelek: Mortui quos vivificaturus est Deus, non iterum in pulverem reversuri sunt, illud רעת יחיר Unius esse magistri sententiam, quæ in Midrash Eliæ cujusdam occurrit, statimque in Gemara eadem contradici, dum aiunt, Discimus à mortuis quos resuscitavit Ezekiel, scil. illos ad pulverem reddidisse, ac sic in resurrectione futurum; de quibus quidam dicunt היה נישל parabolam fuisse: alii, eos in terra denuò vixisse, liberos genuisse, &c. affirmante coràm, R. Juda, se ex eorum posteris fuisse, &c. illos ergò, qui parabolam fuisse autumant, nihil hic probari dicere, ac in pulverem redituros negare; secus qui veram historiam, idem enim resurrecturis, quod contigit illis, futurum: Atque hanc sententiam, tum majoris auctoritatis in Talmude doctorum esse, tum plurimum, cum altera illa sententia singularis sit; at הלכה דלכא כרבים juxta plures statuendum est. Deinde verba illa, Non sunt in pulverem reversuri, aliter etiam exponi posse, scil. Non voluisse ipsum illos non morituros, sed cum è materia compositi sint, ac libero arbitrio præditi, non illos rebus materialibus inhiaturos, nec iterum peccaturos, uti in vita priori; quia malum, privatio, & peccatum à materia sunt; atque hoc indicari verbis istis, Non reversuri sunt in pulverem, quod è testimonio Scripturæ ibi allato patere dicit; quod est, Et qui relinquetur in Sione & Jerusalem, Sanctus dicetur. Sanctitatem enim esse separationem à peccato, permansuros ergo eos in sanctitate, nec amplius peccaturos; quam expositionem sequi licet, quamvis non eo sensu sumatur in Perek Chelek.

Quod ad testimonium autem illud, quod adducit Ramban, è dicto Rabba; In seculo futuro nec editur nec bibitur, exposuit Rab. ut dictum de mundo animarum, non de resurrectione: Quod & necessariò sequitur è testimonio quod ad-

ducit [scil. ubi dicitur] Et viderunt Deum, ac ederunt & biberunt: Quia manifestum est, non locutam ibi Scripturam de resurrectione, sed de primoribus Israelitarum, qui apprehensione & visione suâ eodem modo gaudio & lætitiâ affecti sunt, ac si edissent & bibissent, uti & Onkelos verba exposuit. Hinc patet magni Doctoris [scil. Ramban] sententiam veram esse, uti & aliis rationibus probasse se ait in l. Zedek Olamim; alia etiam se Antiquorum dicta invenisse quibus idem probetur, viz. cum in cap. Chelek dicit R. Juchanan, Unde in lege probatur resurrectio mortuorum? Inde quod dictum est, Et dabitis ex ipso Terumah Abroni Sacerdoti: At Aaron tum mortuus erat; docet ergò, futurum ut illi detur tempore resurrectionis, unde liquet, tunc resuscitados dona accepturos, esuros, bibituros: Idem probari ex eo quod dicit R. Simai, Unde probatur ex lege resurrectio mortuorum? Ex eo quod dicitur, Et confirmabo fœdus meum cum Illis, cum Illis dicitur, non Vobiscum, unde liquet ipsos resurrecturos, terram possessuros, eamque inter se partituros, eo quem descripsit Ezekiel modo. Miratur ergò quid viros istos perfectos adduxerit, ut resuscitados corporibus integris gaudere crederent, nec tamen corporis functiones præstare, è materia compositos esse, nec tamen morti & corruptioni obnoxios, cum nec illius meminerit Scriptura, nec traditione à Sapientibus acceptum sit, nec aliis illud argumentis, quam quæ hîc recensuit, confirmare possint, & præterea res sit ab intellectu planè aliena; quin & si hoc ita foret, majus esset ipsâ resurrectione miraculum, scil. ut fieret quod materiale est spirituale, manens interim materiale; & corruptibile, incorruptibile & immortale, & quomodo Prophetæ & Psalmistæ Spiritu Sancto afflati, qui de resurrectione locuti sunt, nullam omnino hujus rei mentionem facerent? aut quomodo Sapientes qui Cap. Chelek de resurrectione disputarunt, num è lege probari posset, hujus fundamenti magis miri non meminere, nec dixere: Ei qui illud negaverit, nullam esse sortem in seculo futuro, ut de articulo resurrectionis dixerunt. In summa, quod ad res, quæ in miraculorum magnorum numero sunt, non teneri nos aliis ex ipsis fidem adhibere, quam quibus vel testimonium perhibet lex, & quæ promiserunt Prophetæ aut quæ Doctores sancti traditione acceperunt: Si cui autem somnium fuerit aut opinio pertinax, non pro vero per traditionem accepto amplexandum est. Quod ad Christianos, ipsorum fidem farraginem quandam esse rerum impossibilium, ideoque libenter alia etiam impossibilia ipsos amplecti; dicere enim ipsos Patres sanctos post mortem in Paradisum non admissos fuisse, sed in gradu medio in quo nec præmio nec pænæ locus est, qui ipsorum lingua limbus dicitur, mansisse, donec adveniens salvator ipsorum, quem Messiam vocant, ipsos inde eductos in Paradisum introduxerit; asserere eosdem Jesus Deum suum incorporatum fuisse, & post mortem revixisse, dein in cælum evectum ibi corpore & animâ sedere neque edentem neque bibentem neque morti obnoxium. Idem etiam affirmare illos de Maria matre ipsius; sedere, sc. ipsam corpore & anima ad dextram ipsius cum spiritualibus quos glorificatos appellant. Hæc cum in fidei suæ fundamentis credant, idem etiam in iis quæ ad resurrectionem futuram spectant credere. Non ita Jacob, nec cogitationes nostræ ut cogitationes eorum, nec viæ nostræ ut viæ eorum. Quare ergo deciperemus nos ipsos omnibus abominationibus gentium istarum, ut dicamus animas in mundo animarum gradu imperfecto manere, nec operum suorum mercedem accipere, donec adveniente Messia nostro & viventibus mortuis prodeant animæ è loco isto imperfecto ad percipiendam voluptatem divinam, ut affirmant gentes de animabus sanctorum suorum, necnon ut credamus, tempore resurrectionis victura corpora sine cibo & potu, neque filios genitura, neque amplius moritura: eademque prorsus impossibilia quæ credunt Christiani de Deo suo ipsiusque matre, credent gentis nostræ sapientes de millies millenis millibus myriadum qui tempore resurrectionis revicturi sint? Quid paleæ cum tritico, & quare errares, filii mi, cum extraneâ? & quid nobis cum sententiis eorum infirmis uredine tactis? an non de hoc dictum est ובילדי נכרים nec non commisti sunt cum gentibus & opera ipsorum didicerunt. Fides perfecta nec addi sibi quid, nec detrahi patitur. Illud ergo quod credere oportet, est, Resurrecturos mortuos cum corporibus, facultatibus, & sensibus suis, & cum revixerint, ad eadem præstanda corpora sua adhibere, quæ alii homines, nisi quod iusti futuri sint, peccati timentes, eodemque gradu quo Adam protoplastus primo creabatur antequam peccasset. Dixerunt in Eica Rabba, Renova dies

nostros, ut olim, instar dierum Adami primi, de quo dictum est quod habitaverit מקדם ab antiquo; atque hoc de resurrectione futura dixerunt, scil. futuros illos, qui resurrexerint, eodem gradu quo fuit Adam, ac demum morituros atque in mundum animarum transmigraturos, ut operum suorum mercedem reportent, juxta normam judicii, quo spectavit Doctor Misnicus dicendo, Neque persuadeat tibi affectus tuus esse in inferno refugium tibi: quo vult, Ne seducat te concupiscentia tua mala, dicendo, Ede & bibe, cras enim morituri sumus, neque sunt opera & scientia & rationis redditio in inferno quo vadis, quia ibi refugium tibi erit contra judicium divinum. Scias aliter se habere, quoniam vel te invito, formatus es (quo innuit resurrectionem, cujus respectu dicitur Deus hominem eodem modo quo se habuit è pulvere formare,) & te invito nasceris (vult, te invito hoc credes, quia tunc tempore resurrectionis mortuorum eris homo perfectus ut Adam cum primo in lucem produceretur) ac vives (ea, scil. exercens opera corporea quæ solent vivi, edendo, bibendo, &c.) & postea morieris, (quia, scil. post resurrectionem denuo morientur qui resurrexerint) ac in mundo animarum rationem redditurus es, viz. ut præmium in Gan Eden accipias, vel pœnam in Ge'benna subeas; secundum opera, &c. Hæc Abarbinel. Quibus omnia ad resurrectionem spectantia, & quæ de eâ ab aliis dici solent, se complexum esse asserit; rectèque solvisse Rambam loca Scripturæ, quæ resurrectionem negare videantur, dicendo, הם מספרים טבע המצות הנהוג, והנורע, Ordinariam rerum naturam & vulgò notam declarare illa, non autem negare resurrectionem, quæ fit על דרך הפלא, ratione miraculi, &c. alibi tamen fusiis se de iisdem rebus scripsisse, adeò ut sint hæc מהרבה מעט è multis pauca.

(a) In hac præcipuè radice totius de hoc articulo, viz. resurrectione mortuorum, controversiæ cardo vertitur. Tres in diversum abeuntium ea de re sententias recenset (ut vidimus) Abarbinel. Prima est Haggaonis R. Saadiæ, secunda Maimonidis, tertia Nachmanidis. Ac verum est quod eas ita inter se discrepare ait, ut tam Haggaon quam Maimonides resuscitados, esuros, bibituros, uxores ducturos autument, sed hæc differentiâ, quod hic diu non autem in perpetuum victuros, ille haud interim morituros statuât, ita ita enim ille cap. 7. Emunoth, אל ימותו אבל מעתיקים אותם מימות המשיח אל נעימות העולם הבא, Non morientur (inquit) sed transferent ipsos à diebus Messiae ad gaudia mundi futuri. Probari hoc, dicto isto veterum, Mortui, quos resuscitaturus est Deus, haud iterum in pulverem suum reversuri sunt. Hic verò diu sed non in perpetuum victuros. Sic enim in Epist. de resurrectione mortuorum, אל האנשים אשר ישבו נפשותם לגופות ההם יאכלו וישתו וישגלו ויולידו וימותו אחרי חיים ארוכים מאד כחיים הנמצאים בימות המשיח ואמנם החיים שאין המות אחריהם הוא חיי העולם הבא אחר שאין גוף בהם Illi quorum animæ in corpora revertentur, comedent, bibent, uxores ducent, gignent; dein post vitam admodum diuturnam, instar ejus quæ diebus Messiae erit, morientur, at vita cui nulla mors succedit propria est seculi futuri, in qua nullum est, uti nos credimus, corpus. At quod Nachmanidem in alteram partem de his omnibus statuere afferit, scil. ipsos nec membra ad corporeas istiusmodi functiones obeundas adhibitueros, nec resumpta iterum unquam deposituros, nescio quod ad primam assertionis partem an sit adeo extra controversiam. Rabbi Juda Zabara enim, qui utriusque Mosis sententiam refert, & à Nachmanidis partibus in plerisque stat, העקר האמתי כי התחיה לגוף ולנפש יחד כמו שהיו קודם לכן ויאכלו ויתענגו בהנאות גופניות אין חולק בזה שום חכם מחכמינו De articulo (inquit) vero [quo affirmatur] resurrectionem [mortuorum] futuram corpori & animæ simul, quod se eodem modo ac prius habituri sint, edantque, ac bibant, & voluptatibus corporeis fruantur, non est è sapientibus nostris, qui litem moveat; at verò utrum, יהיו אחר כך לעולם או אם ימותו לרוב הימים, postea æternum victuri sint, an post dies multos morituri, de hoc inter Magistros controvertitur. Ac certè, qui ipsius Nachmanidis verba consuluerit, merito dubitaverit num ab Abarbinele, esuros & bibitueros qui revicturi sunt, penitus negasse, rectè asseratur. Aliud enim innuere videntur illa, quibus obicienti cui usui futura sint in seculo futuro corporis membra, cum ibi nec edatur nec bibatur, &c. respondet, resumpta fuisse membra ista, לזמן תחית המתים, לצורך השמושים הנזכרים In tempus resurrectionis mortuorum ad functiones memoratas præstandas, dein ea haud denū abolere voluisse Deum. Eodem spectat & quod ex ipso laudavimus, Inservitutum etiam Gan Eden, seu Pa-

radisum propriè sic dictum, præmio quod tempore resurrectionis etiam corpore percipietur: quod confirmat dicto veterum, quo dixerunt, עתיד הבה לעשות סעודה, לצדיקים בנגן עדן, Futurum ut Deus convivium justis instruat in Paradiso, ipsum in medio ipsorum sessurum, singulis ipsum digito monstrantibus, sicut dictum est, Ecce iste est Deus noster. Atque hoc esse עונג ושכר עתיד בזמן התחיה voluptatem & præmium, quæ futura sunt tempore resurrectionis: & illam Majestatis divinæ quasi digito demonstrationem esse apprehensionem gradus & voluptatis unionis cum ipsa inter gaudia corporea, quasi dicat, istius seculi homines pertingere ad gradum Mosis, cujus anima in tantum superior corpore evasit, ut facultates corporales in ipso extinguerentur, & continuè Spiritu Sancto indueretur, ac si visus & auditus ipsius oculo animæ tantum perageretur, nequaquam mediante oculo corporeo, &c. Ex his constat, aliud ipsi esse tempus, seu dies resurrectionis, aliud seculum futurum, atque illo edi, bibi, aliàsque percipi voluptates corporeas, quæ hoc demum prorsus abolitæ cessabunt. Nec tamen ipsum prorsus idem sentire cum Haggaone arbitror, quia Haggaon diuturnius his rebus spatium concedat, annorum forsan quadringentorum vel quingentorum plus minus; at Nachmanides breviusculum, utpote qui *Judicium illud magnum, quod tempus resurrectionis & seculum futurum discriminat, statim resurrectionem consecuturum (ut ex superioribus vidimus) autmet: utpote quod futurum sit ביום die aliquo sub initium resurrectionis, ipsam momento haud perficiendam, ut videtur ratur, & tam resurrectionem mortuorum quam ימות המשיח dies Messiae, in quibus & illa futura sit, hujus mundi bonis accensens. Sed nec hoc modo plenariam sententiarum discrepantium enumerationem nobis exhibuisse videtur Abarbinel: quartam enim nobis præbere videntur Aben Ezræ ad Daniel c. xii. verba, ubi à Daniele affirmari sibi videri ait, שהצדיקים שמתו בגלות יהיו בבוא הגואל כי עליהם כתוב כימי עץ ימי עמי ואז יתענגו בליותן ובזיו ובבהמות וימותו פעם שנית והיו בתחית המתים בהיותם בעולם הבא שאינם אוכלים ושותים רק נהנים מזיו שכניהם *justos qui mortui sunt in captivitate revicturos, cum advenerit Redemptor, cum de illis scriptum sit, Sicut dies arboris dies populi mei; ac tunc ex Leviathane, & [ave] Ziz, & Behemoth delicias capturos, dein iterum iterum morituros, ac rursus viētiuros in resurrectione mortuorum, cum erunt in seculo futuro, ubi nec comedent, nec bibent, sed splendore Majestatis divinæ fruuntur. Quadrimembrem ergo opinionum varietatem habemus, 1. Haggæonis, resuscitandos esuros, bibituros, uxores ducturos, &c. dein postquam diu in terris vixerint, in mundum futurum, ubi nihil tale amplius præstabit, transferendos, nullâ mortis lineâ interpositâ. 2. Rabbi Abrahami Ben Ezræ, eos è rebus quidem terrenis cibo, sc. potu, &c. voluptatem capturos, morituros tamen rursus, ac denuo ad æterna seculi futuri gaudia resuscitandos, ubi nullus erit istiusmodi deliciis locus. 3. Maimonidis, eadem illos, quæ hujus seculi homines, idque diu instrumentorum corporeorum ope, præstituros, quæ tamen post annos aliquamultos nunquam resumenda, iterum deponent. 4. Nachmanidis, qui non aliter ab Haggæone discrepare videtur, quam quod breviori forsan spatio voluptates istas corporeas, post resurrectionem captandas, circumscribat, ac his (vel Haggæoni seorsim) R. Abiron Levita & R. Juda Zabara accensendi; cum R. Abiron (referente Juda isto) statuatur nullam resurrectioni mortem successuram, verum resuscitados diu, ut qui seculis olim mundi prioribus, quantum patietur de millenario sexto, quod tunc temporis supererit, in terra Israelitide victuros, patente ipsis libero in Paradisum, quotiescunque ipsum visere libuerit, ingressu, cujus fructibus, aëre puriore, ac divinæ majestatis præsentia magis conspicuâ deliciabuntur, donec demum purissima fiant ipsorum corpora à crassioribus materiæ facibus purgata, adeo ut gloriosa admodum evadant, cibi & potus haud amplius indiga. Ipse verò R. Juda, ut ipsis eas quæ è cibo & potu percipiuntur voluptates tribuit, nec eas quæ è toro conjugali denegat; ita num liberos procreaturi sint ideo dubitare videtur, quod cum illis in hoc mundo iis tantum annis qui de millenario sexto supersunt degendum sit, quid gravidis & infantibus qui innumeri necessario erunt, fiet millenario septimo, quo Deus עולמו renovaturus sit mundum suum, non adeo facile statuatur. Nescio demum an non & ab aliâ adhuc sententiâ procedat glossa ista R. Salomonis ad verba ista, haud iterum in pulverem suum reversuri, scil. בין לימות המשיח בין לעולם הבא אלא הכשר מתקיים עליהם עד שישבו ויהיו לעתיד לבא, sive diebus Messia, sive seculo futuro; sed manebit in ipsis caro donec rursus viētiuri sint seculo futuro, quasi, scil. morti, sed non corruptioni tradenda sint corpora ipsorum.

(b) Occurrit dictum istud in Talmude, Tract. Beracoth, c. 2. quod integrum sic se habet, מרגלא בפומיה דרב לא כהעולם הזה העולם הבא העה"א אין בו לא אכילה ולא שתיה ולא פריה ורביה לא משא ומתן ולא קנאה ולא שנאה ולא תחרות אלא צדיקים יושנים ועטרתיהם בראשיהם ונהנים כיון השכינה שנ' ויחיו בראשיהם ויחיו האלהים ויאכלו וישתו, *Dictum celebre fuit in ore Magistri, Seculum futurum non ita se habet ac seculum præsens. In seculo futuro nec est esus nec potus, nec liberorum procreatio, nec venditio nec emptio, nec invidia, nec odium, nec contentio, sed justii sedent coronas in capitibus gestantes, & voluptatem capiunt è splendore Majestatis divinæ, sicut dictum est; Et viderunt Deum & comederunt ac biberunt. Hoc uterque tam Maimonides quam Nachmanides ad sententiam suam confirmandam adducit; ille, quia nihil ibi eorum quæ membrorum corporis ministerio præstantur exercetur, nec ipsa corporis membra reperiri concludit. Absurdissimum enim Maimonidi videtur asserere frustra retineri hæc membra ac esse homini os, stomachum, jecur, & membra; procreationi idonea, nec tamen cum edere, bibere, aut liberos gignere, & quod risu excipit, quærens cujus tandem formæ corpora sibi fingant qui hæc asserant, num, כדוריים, מקשיים או עמודים או מעוקבים, Sphærica, solida, cylindrica, vel quadrata, vel conica. Nam ut fingant Deum corpora hominibus dare membris suis distincta, quibus tamen nihil agant, sed sint sicut illa gentium idola, quibus oculi sunt quibus non vident, aures quibus non audiunt, nares quibus non olfaciunt; adeoque frustra aliquid, & ut nulli sit usui creasse, absurdum esse & impium. Eodem ergo antiquorum dicto, quo tolluntur edendi, bibendi, &c. usus, tolli unâ instrumenta corporea, quæ iisdem inserviunt; corporibus quæ hæc non agant, quibus præstandis instituta sunt, nulla posse concedi membra, qualia si quis autumet, אין אלו הדברים אלא שחוק מי יתן, החרש יחרישון ותהי להם להכניה, esse hæc ipsius verba merè ridicula. Quis det ut tacendo tacerent, quo imputaretur ipsis in sapientiam. Urut autem, quod sententiæ suæ majorem conciliet gratiam, contrariam risui exponat, ejusque assertoribus silentium indicat, nihil aliud quam quod absurdissimum est ab ea concludi posse, hominibus* hominibus persuasum cupiens; non potuit, vel ipsius autoritas, vel rationum, quas affert, pondus Nachmanidem per-movere, quo minus veritatem ex altera parte quæreret, & ex dicto illo majorum planè contrarium eliceret, scil. membra & corpora eadem resuscitatis in seculo futuro permanfura, quæ in hac vita fuerunt, sed non iisdem usibus inservitura: quam etiam sententiam amplexi sunt R. Abron Levita, & Judab Zabara, & R. Jacob, libri Ein Israel compilator, &c. dicentes, si seculi futuri participes nudæ tantum animæ celebris istius apophthegmatis auctori visi essent, nihil necesse ipsi fuisse asserere in hoc seculum futurum à præsentī diversum esse, quod qui ipso fruuntur, nec edant nec bibant, &c. quis enim monitu opus habet, ne putet animas hæc, ad quæ præstanda nullis instructæ sint instrumentis, perficere? Hoc verò novum est, nec omnibus ita notum, ut qui & corpora retineant & membra iis olim finibus condita, & diuturno usu assueta, ea tamen jam haud amplius præstent: adeo sententiam istam, quam adducit Rambam ut sit סניגור לוי ipso συνηγορος, esse revera, si rectè perpendatur, קטגור גמור מכל פנים κατηγορον absolutam, & ex omni parte adversantem, annotant, eaque innui seculum istud non esse עולם הנשמות Spirituum proprium, sed & corporum, hominūque integrorum, qui in perpetuum sustententur, ביו הכבוד כקיום הופש בגוף בעולם הזה Splendore gloriæ divinæ, ut in hoc mundo anima in corpore cibi & potus beneficio sustentatur: quod quomodo fieri possit Mosis exemplo patere, qui quadraginta diebus in monte substitit quibus nihil comedens מזון השכינה היה ניזון solo Majestatis divinæ splendore alebatur. tentatum, ut sustentans vi unionis suæ cum eodem: hoc facile credi posse, cum consideretur vis, quam imprimit anima corpori vi unionis cum scientia Dei, ut cum fulgida facta fuerit facies Mosis instar solis, Josue instar lunæ, quod idem affirmant Veteres de Adamo etiam, & de quibuscvis qui Creatori propius uniti fuerint, Spiritūque Sancto induti; ut de Phineaso, cum in ipsum descenderet Spiritus Sanctus, dicunt micuisse vultum ipsius instar lampadis, ut & de R. Eliezere Magno, inter docendum radios ex facie ipsius, ut olim è Mosis facie, prodiisse, adeo ut non dignosceret quis utrum dies esset an nox. Atque item Sifri scriptum, Facies iustorum in seculo futuro futuras quasi Solem, Lunam, Firmamentum, Stellæ, Fulgura, Lilia, lucernas Sanctuarii: quorum rationem si investigare non possumus, quid ni tamen credamus, cum quæ ad animam spectant mysteria perspecta habeat Creator in secula benedictus, licet nostrum fugiant captum? Videmus tamen, cum ea, quæ cupit, consequitur animus, inde & corpori sanitatem & decorem accedere. Eo tendere quod dictum est, Sapientia hominis illustrat vultum ipsius. Contra hæc, quæ de æterna corporis duratione dicuntur, nihil facere argumenta è Philosophorum scholis petita, ac pari ratione, quā credunt illi universalium, credi etiam posse particularium permanentiam: cum tam hæc à particulari Dei voluntate, quam illa à generali, pendeant; secundum quam durationem suam habent, prout ipsi visum est, אם לזמן אם לנצח sive ad tempus, sive in æternum. Nam quod ordinariā mundi lege fieri videmus, particularia interire, universalia manere, hoc animantibus מפני החטא הקדמני primi peccati, & pænæ ob ipsum denuntiatae ratione contingere; voluntatem interim Dei immortalem quicquid vult in æternum conservare. Hæc Nachmanidis doctrina est in cap. Gamul ab ipso explicata; cui consona sunt (ut diximus) quæ ab aliis non paucis traduntur. *R. Nec quod addit, Christi discipulos hunc articulum è fontibus Israelis hausisse, prorsus negaverim. A primis enim patribus gentis istius credita posterisque tradita est hæc doctrina. (c) Mosis exemplum quod urgebant qui corpora membris suis constantia sine cibi & potus adminiculo potentiâ Dei in æternum conservari affirmabant, ne elusum putarent qui Maimonidis partes sequerentur, illud miraculo ascribendo, (quod secundum ipsius doctrinam, in rebus naturâ possibilibus quo constantius & diuturnius est magis mirum habetur, ¹ at in iis quæ naturæ vires excedunt si perpetuum sit, miraculi naturam exuit) respondet Nachmanides, אם נחם זה אל מעשה הנס הזה אליהו יוכיח שלא הו' שלך הנס ממנו ולא נפרד מן הנפש והתקיים מאז ועד עולם, Si hoc miraculosè factum dicatur, ecce argumento est Elia, cujus corpus haud unquam depositum est, nec ab anima separatum, manetque ab eo quo fuit tempore in æternum. Quod etiam in Doctorum expositionibus de Henoch assertum ait. De Elia constare hoc putat ex illis Prophetæ verbis, Ecce ego mitto vobis Eliam Prophetam, &c. Certè haud eadem est omnium Magistrorum de Elia ejusque missione sententia. R. David Kimchius quid sentiat jam vidimus, viz. corpus ipsius in suprema aëris regione igne absumptum fuisse, ipsumque novo, cum mittendus erit, corpore donatum iri. Ad quam sententiam, dum hic contra Nachmanidem disputat, propendit Abarbenel. Cui tamen auris vellenda est, ut qui haud satis sibi constare videatur, cum ad 2 Reg. ii. ex professio contra eandem disputat, ipsamque planè rejicit, הנה אין, ראוי שנאמין לרבריהם (inquit) oportet credere ipsorum verbis; liquido enim constare non fuisse corpus ipsius ab anima separatum, ideoque credere se, secundum veterum sententiam, Eliam in cælum, i. e. aërem, turbine sublatum, in Paradisum terrestrem translatum fuisse, ibique manere ipsum בנפש ובנפש anima & corpore constantem: at quali tandem corpore? corpore quod gratiâ Dei miraculosè factum sit, נצחיים וקיים כאחד מן הגשמים השמימיים ולכן היה קל להראות בכל מקום ולא היה

מגביל מקום ולא מצטרך למאכל ולמשקה ולשאר הדברים הצריכים וההכרחיים לחי לפי שנעשה גשמו מתכונה רוחנית על דרך נס, Immortale, & permanens instar corporis alicujus cælestis, ideoque agile ut ubique locorum compareat, neque loco circumscriptum, neque cibi aut potus, aliarumve rerum, quibus necessario opus habent vivi, indigum, cum induerit corpus ipsius naturam spirituales per modum miraculi. Hoc ideo factum, quod sæpius hominibus apparere deberet, ita sæpius ipsum Prophetis, piisque, & in Rabbinorum scholis, atque alibi apparuisse. Discrepatum est non minus de eodem Elia mittendo ante diem Domini terribilem. Intelligendum illud de ipso Elia non minus Abarbineli quam Nachmanidi videtur, (ut è loco jam proximè laudato patet; sic & Aben Ezra, Kimchio, &c. Sunt tamen qui forsan alium aliquem Eliæ spiritu præditum, ipsius nomine indigitari autumant. Ita Maimonides Yad. l. ult. (Melachim, scil.) c. ult. ex verbis istis Malachia constare ait surrecturum Prophetam quendam ad dirigendum Israelem, quem יש מן החכמים sunt è sapientibus, qui ipsum Eliam esse putent ante Messiam mittendum: unde R. Tanchum ad locum istum Prophetæ, בלא שך ועד בטהור גבי פי יש קבל וקרת טהור אלמשיח בקליל ובעץ אלעלמא ירי אנה אליהו התשבי נפסה והו' אלמוגור פי אכתר אלמדרשות ובעצתם ירי אנה גבי עמימא מתלה פי אלמרתנה קאימא מקאמה פי מערפתה תע' ואטהאר אסמה ולדלך סמי אליה, &c. Est hoc sine dubio promissum de Propheta in Israele manifestando paulo ante tempus manifestationis Messia, quem quidam è doctis putant ipsum Eliam Tifbitem futurum: quæ sententia in plerisque scriptis Homileticis reperitur; at alii censent prophetam magnum fore parilis cum ipso gradus, eodemque loco constitutum quoad cognitionem Dei, & nominis ejus promulgationem, ideoque Eliam appellari, ut vult magnus ille Doctor Maimonides, &c. ולעלה עלי הו' משיח בן יוסף כמא קאל איצא (inquit) Messiah Ben Joseph, ex ejusdem sententia.

Ex his verò quæ ab ipso Abarbenele de Elia affirmata vidimus contra Maimonidis (quam ipse amplectitur) sententiam, concludent qui à Nachmanidis partibus stant, quod in uno factum in pluribus fieri posse, sc. ut immortalia in altero seculo gerant corpora, non iisdem, quibus in hoc, necessitatibus obnoxia, ac voluisse

voluisse Deum, להראות ענינו לדור דורים, כדי שידעו כל ישראל אמתת העולם הבא ומעלתו ויאמינו בו אמונה קיימת, unum illum omnibus seculis in exemplum proponere, ut notam haberet omnis Israel veram seculi futuri rationem, ejusque excellentiam, eamque fide firmâ crederet, ut loquitur Juda Zabara, de Phineaso, quem cum aliis quibusdam Rabbiorum pro eodem cum Elia habuisse videtur. Illi quod regerit Abarbenel, etiamsi concedatur illud Elia ob singularem ipsius sanctionem contigisse, non tamen convenire ut de pluribus credatur, opponi potest, quod de eodem Elia verba faciens habet R. Tanchum, לא באס אן יכון מן נמלה כואץ [אלנפס] וגראיכ אפעאלהא אלא קוית ואתחדת במכדאהא אן תחמל נסמהא, פי אלהוי ולו לס יזכר, nihil impedit quo minus è proprietatibus animæ & miris ejus operationibus, ubi prævaluerit, & principio suo unita fuerit, credatur esse ut corpus [qua velit] in aëre transferat, etiamsi nihil tale in Scriptura memoratum esset, פכין וקד דכרתהא אלנצוץ ואכברת בה ען אלאנכיא לא פרק אן יכון אלאכבאר ען ואחד או ען נמאעא לאנה מנר גרי לואחד פכר ען באב אלממתנע וצאר פי באב, quanto magis postquam expressa sint ejus in eadem testimonia, & à Prophetis tale quid [contigisse] narratum sit? neque enim refert sive de uno, sive de pluribus memoriæ proditum sit. Postquam enim vel uni contigerit, jam ex ordine impossibilibus exiit, & inter ea quæ fieri possunt censendum est.

(d) Ita certè ut sententiam tam Scripturæ Sacræ quam veterum expositionibus consentaneam amplectitur, Adamum, si non peccasset, perpetuo victurum fuisse. Objicitur quomodo hoc fieri possit? Oggerunt Magistri exemplum Elia, ^k דרי אלהיו שלא חטא דרי הוא חי וקיים לעולם Ecce Eliah qui non peccavit, vivit & permanet in seculum. At supposito non peccasse ipsum *Elia*m, quomodo tamen à communi illa sorte, cui Adami peccatum omnes obnoxios fecit, exemptus est? Sunt enim & alii quos peccati immunes perhibent, primi tamen patris rebellione mortalitatis legibus subjectos. Et sicut promisit Danieli, viro desideriorum, ^p Tu autem vade ad præfinitum, & requiesce, & stabis in forte tua in fine dierum; & sicut promisit omnibus cœtibus Israelis per servum suum Ezekielem, f. Buzi, sacerdotem, ^q Ideo vaticinare, & dices illis, Sic dicit Dominus Deus, Ego aperio sepulchra vestra, & educam vos è sepulchris vestris, popule mi, & indam vobis spiritum meum, & vivetis; & statuam vos super terram vestram, & scietis quod ego Dominus locutus sim, & fecerim, dicit Dominus, Exultent Sancti cum gloria, cantent super lectis suis: Gaudeantque iusti & exultent coram Deo, & latentur in salute

In hac precationis formula, dum ea, quibus probari resurrectionem mortuorum putant, Scripturæ loca summam recenset, observari potest, & inter cætera enumerari Mic. v. 5. Et erit iste pax, Assur cum venerit in terram nostram, & calcaverit in ædibus nostris, והקמנו עליו שבעה רעים ושמונה נסיכי אדם, Et statuemus adversus eum septem pastores, & octo principes hominum. Adducitur idem & à R. Saadia, l. Emunoth, cap 7. inter alia ad articulum istum confirmandum argumenta, sed ea potius quæ è Talmude & traditione, quam quæ è Scriptura petuntur. Argumenti enim inde deducti tota vis pendet à traditione, quâ septem Pastores & octo Principes sigillatim enumerantur. Ita in Tract. Succah. c. 5. dicitur, מאן נינהו ז' רעים דוד באמצע אדם שת ומתושלח מימינו אברהם ויעקב ומשה משמאלו ומאי נינהו ח' נסיכי אדם ישי ושארל ושמואל עמוס צפניה חזקיהו ואלהו ומשיח, Quinam sunt septem isti pastores? David in medio, Adam, Seth, & Methusalach ad dextram ipsius, Abraham, Jacob & Mose ad sinistram. Et quinam octo principes viri? Jesse, Saul, Samuel, Amos, Zephaniah, Hezekias, Eliah, Messias. Jam si hos suscitandos (ea enim tum verbi והקמנו vis erit) credideris ut Assyrii impetum frangant, ^r de resurrectione nequaquam dubitabitur. At nescire se ait R. Salomo, unde hæc hauserint: magis tamen mirum, quod & ab ipso in Scholiis ad locum istum Talmudis adducitur, & à Judab Zabara, c. 3. citatur è Midrish Tillim, ubi cum omisso Isaaco inter pastores istos collocentur Abraham & Jacob, quaeritur יצחק האלו Isaac הוכן הלך שאינו בכלל אלו הלך להוציא רשעי ישראל מניהם, ac respondetur, abierat ad educendos sceleratos gentis Israeliticæ è Gehenna^t. Principium autem Orationis hujus sumpta est ex ista, quæ in Liturgia Judæorum publicâ habentur, per sepulchra Israelitarum transeuntibus recitanda præscribitur: sic autem se habet, ברוך אתה יי אלהינו מלך העולם אשר יצר אתכם ברין והחיה אתכם ברין חן אתכם ברין

Quomodo, scil. eos omnes, qui resurgent, capere possit orbis terrarum, nedum angustiores terræ (quam vocant) Sanctæ, limites. Si enim omnes quotquot unquam in terris vixerint, resurrecturos affirmaret, eosque in terrâ habituros, sufficeret forsitan illud quod affert responsum, omnes terræ plagas jam ignotas retendas atque habitabiles futuras; at si vel pauciores resuscitandos autumet, eos tamen & ipsos perpetuo victuros, filiosque & filias, qui & alios gignant, in omnia seculorum secula genituros, non video quomodo spatium hoc molis terrestris terminis non adeò immensis circumscriptum, tantæ hominum multitudini, quantum ab istis, æternitatis duratione continuâ, orituram facillè concipiamus, capiendis olim sufficiat. Secundo & alteram, quam, l. 3. c. 10. movet, utrum, scil. ibi peccato locus sit? Cui & obnoxios illos, qui istiusmodi rebus implicantur, non mirum est si statuatur, quamvis maxima ex parte proclives futuros dicat ad virtutem. Ac R. Saadiam in partes vocat, quem in eadem opinione fuisse ait, Deum; scil. non ablaturum hominibus liberum arbitrium. At loquitur interim Haggaon iste de seculo resurrectionis, seu statu quem mundo futuro prævium statuit, ad quem neminem à Deo admitti vult, nisi quem certo præsciverit, durante ipso, non peccaturum, aut commissurum aliquid, quo עולם הגמול seculo retributionis excidat, eòve indignus fiat: ei verò nihil esse cum hujus vitæ rebus commune ubique afferit, cum de illo ipso seculo, & de præmium jam consecutis loquatur Manasseh. Sed hæc obiter. Ad Abarbenelem redeo. Observandum restat illud, cujus præcipuè causâ fusiorem hanc inter ipsius & aliorum sententias collationem instituimus, scil. hoc ab ipso imprimis Nachmanidi vitio verti, quod sententiam Christianorum doctrinæ affiniorem, & quam ab ipsis partim hausisse videatur, amplexus sit; aliter enim haud facile fuisse, ab ipso an à Maimonide veritas staret, dijudicare. Minimè verò prætereundum, quam iniquè agat, dum quo Christianorum de resurrectione mortuorum dogma absurdi multum in se continere suis suadeat, una cum ipso, alia nihil ad eum articulum spectantia, nec è Scripturis hausta, nec ab omnibus credita proponit, eaque omnia è fundamentis fidei ab ipsis haberi asferit; qualia sunt quæ de Limbo patrum, & de Maria Christi matre in cælum jam corpore evectâ, ibique ad filii sui dextram sedente, ab ipsis asserta refert. Ob hæc Christianorum religionem suis non aliter quam ut rerum planè impossibilium & creditu absurdissimarum meram farraginem visum iri minimè dubitans, facile ab ipsis consecuturum se sperat, ut quicquid a Christianis credatur, vel ob id ipsum sine ulteriori examine respiciant, atque ut à vero alienum rejiciant. Quid paleæ (enim) cum tritico, & quare errares cum extranea, mi fili? Quid nobis cum eorum sententiis (inquit,) &c. Hoc enim nisi ab ipsis obtinuerit, ut quicquid Christiani pro vero habent, illi ideò falsum reputent, satis inpræsentiarum erit ad ipsius arrogantiam retundendam, fidemque apud ipsos minuendam, dixisse, ea quæ, præter ipsorum de resuscitandorum statu doctrinam, recenset, nec universalem apud Christianos fidem obtinere, nec ullum inter fidei articulos locum habere. Quam autem ut proximam ad veritatem viam, quam longissimè à Christianorum doctrina recedere, laudat, quam minimè tuta sit, ipse hâc ratione paleam pro tritico, errorem pro vero, amplexus ostendit. Nollem ego cum ipsis talionis lege agi, aut hanc certam nobis veri indagandi regulam statui, ut quicquid à Judeis (quamvis ad errores sædissimos prolapsis) afferitur, aut ad eorum placita accedit, pro falso habeatur. Hoc tamen monitu haud intempestivum duco, ne paleam ab ipsis pro tritico obtrudi nobis patiamur, aut errores & opiniones minus sanas ab eorum traditionibus magis quam à sincero Dei verbo pendentes facile imbibamus. Quod vereor ne illi fecerint qui de Christi, Sanctorumque cum ipso in terris regno, quo durante rebus iterum terrenis (ad meliores dudum recepti) se immisceri, atque ex iis voluptatem captaturi sint, multa nullo Scripturæ fundamento nixa, & credunt & aliis obtrudunt, quæ (ni fallor) omnia à Judeis, primum, quo olim comparuit, Christi adventum, negantibus atque eludere satagentibus, originem traxisse reporientur. Ab iis enim, quæ Judæi de seculo resurrectionis, quod futurum ante millenarii sexti finem statuunt, & diebus Messie qualis ipsis fingitur, vix latum unguem discedunt. Rectè in hoc Abarbenel, Fides perfecta nec addi sibi nec detrabi patitur. Regulam fidei perfectam à Christo accepimus, nihil nisi quod ipsi consonum sit amplecti, à quibuscunque tandem

Ut verò tandem capiti huic, quod vel ipsum in iusti tractatus molem excrevit, finem imponamus: " His quatuordecim radicibus omnia se complexum ait Abarbenel, quæ de resurrectione quæri, & differi solent; quibus addidimus nos ex aliis non pauca, quæ lectori forsan fastidium pariant, nec tamen quid Judæi de hoc articulo statuunt scire cupienti satisfaciant. Neque enim id polliceri possum, pro ea quæ apud ipsos est opinionum varietate, miræque inconstantia. Inter eos quibus ad ipsorum doctrinam eruendam ducibus usi sumus, si Josephi non meminerimus, haud mirum; cum ille, dum sectarum, quas commemorat, de altero seculo sententiam referens, verbis usus videtur magis ad Græcorum, Romanorumque mores & aures accommodatis, quam quæ legis Judaicæ alumnus intelligeret, vel sensibus suis exprimendis commoda judicaret. Nobis cum iis res est qui traditionum Talmudicarum sequaciores sunt, nec ad חכמה יונית, seu aliarum gentium disciplinam diverterint: In quorum placitis referendis satis pro instituti nostri ratione est, nos bonâ fide egisse, nec sponte quicquam celasse, fecius retulisse, eive addidisse vel detraxisse, quo cujuscumque sententia aliter ac ab ipso tradita est sonare videretur, vel cuiuspiam fraudem fecisse. Autoritates quibus sententias suas confirmant, atque inter se certant, omnes referre ut longum nimis fuisset, & ita (ipso monente Maimonide) ad rem parum. Si interim pro tritico paleam, pro thesauro carbonem, eruisse videamur; ipsis id qui talibus (neglectui, imo odio habitis melioribus) decipi volunt, imputetur. Nobis tamen vel nihil melius apud ipsos invenisse in lucrum cedit non minimum, dum hâc ratione grati agnoscere cogemur non solum resurrectionem mortuorum fiduciam esse Christianorum, sed & ejus mysteriorum scientiam unicum ipsorum privilegium, haud aliis cum ipsis commune. Quod & amplius patebit, ubi proximo capite Mohammedanorum etiam deliria, quibus articuli hujus veritatem adulterant, summatim perstrinxerimus. Lucis, quâ (immensâ Dei bonitate) fruimur, beneficium magis commendatum reddet, ad tenebras in quibus miserè cespitant alii animum advertisse.

SUPEREST ut proximo jam loco Mohammedanorum etiam de resurrectione sententiæ explicationem aliquam polliciti, fidem liberemus, quamvis ultro forsan à lectore nimis jam Judæorum ineptiis detento, eâ solvi possemus. Insignis ille tam Philosophorum quam Medicorum apud Arabes Princeps Avicenna hac de re librum conscripsit, quem in linguam Latinam transtulit Andreas Bellunensis, titulo Libelli Avicennæ de Al Mahad; vocem retinens Arab. المهاد, quæ, explicante ipso, locum vel dispositionem, in qua res aliqua jam fuerit, & ab ea separata ad ipsam postea revertitur, denotat, atque usu ita obtinente privatim, dispositionem aut locum, ad quem pervenit homo post mortem. Ejus l. c. 2. varias recenset de resurrectione sententias, eorum primo quos Arabes Vaniloquentes vocat, deinde Mohammedanorum & Christianorum, nec non sectæ Al Majusi & Altenuicæ, eorumque qui Al Tensach asserunt, contra quas omnes (licet eam quæ Mohammedis & Alcorani autoritate adstruitur cæteris præferat, ipse Mohammedanus) in sequentibus disputat, resurrectionem animæ soli competere contendens; hâc tamen, c. 3. apologiâ usus, totum quod de resurrectione disputavit (quo eam animæ solum competere præbare conatus est) dictum esse secundum discursum rationis, vel secundum intellectum purum; secundum verò discursum permixtum cum eis quæ ad finem pertinent, & secundum revelationes legum divinas, veras & credendas oportet affirmare Mahad attribui corpori & animæ simul, & credere ipsum futurum esse: & jam (inquit) nos verificavimus & declaravimus hoc in libro nostro Alsepha. Præter institutum ergo nostrum erit, iis quæ hac in opella disputat recitandis immorari, cum illud quod agendum suscepimus sit, quid ab iis tantum, qui apud Mohammedis assecclas pro orthodoxis habentur, credatur referre; inter quos nescio an collocandus ipse Avicenna. Sic enim apud Epitomatorem Tasei legimus, Al Farabius Al Cendi, & Ebn Sina متهمون في دينهم De religione suspecti sunt, ut gravius ab aliis dicta taceam. Nec aliam

Varia enim loca pro meritorum atque graduum diversitate animas fidelium excipere, prout in tres præcipuè classes distribuuntur; quarum prima prophetarum est, secunda martyrum, tertia è vulgo fidelium. Prophetarum spiritus in Paradisum rectâ admitti; Martyrum, affirmante Mohamme, manere في حواصل طير خضر تاكل من ثمار الجنة وتشرب من انهارها in vesiculis collorum avium viridium, fructibus paradisi vescientium, & de ejusdem fluvii bibentium. De aliorum credentium, qui beatitudinis participes, spiritibus controvertitur; 1. Dicentibus aliis manere ipsos في اقنية القبور in sepulchrorum atriis; quod tamen non ita intelligi volunt nonnulli, quasi loco isti perpetuo adstricti essent, nec ab eo discederent, verum ita ut interim حيث شات liberè quocunque libeat, abeant, [adeo ut huc referri forsan possit, quod à Maleco Ebn Ans refert Al Gazalius ارواح المومنين في اقنية القبور Spiritus fidelium liberè dimissos esse, ut quocunque velint, abeant.] Hanc sententiam confirmari & dictis & facto Mohammedis, qui quotiescunque ad sepulchra prodiret, salutare ipsa solebat nomine المومنين في اقنية القبور habitaculi populi fidelium, quod certo dicunt indicio fuisse ipsum scivisse ibi versari animas ipsorum, cum pacem comprecari soleant على الموجود لا على المعدم ei quod superstes est, non ei quod è medio sublatum; deinde alias dixerit non minus audire quivè vita excefferint, cum salutentur, quam vivos يستطعون ان يجيبوا nisi quod respondere non possint. 2. Aliis, في البرزخ عند ادم في سما الدنيا in Berzach apud Adamum in cœlo mundano. Qui etiam Mohammedis auctoritate sententiam suam adstruunt, qui ab itinere isto, quo totum cœlum peragravit, reversus, narravit vidisse se in cœlo mundano (citimo, scil. Lunæ proprio) Adamum, cujus à dextra essent spiritus eorum qui Paradiso, à sinistra eorum, qui igni destinati. In qua sententia notare obiter obiter liceat, vocem البرزخ Al Berzach, quæ usus apud Arabes licet haud infrequentis, significatus tamen non unius & aliquantum obscurioris esse videtur, ac forsân non prorsus dissimilis ejus quem aliquando ἄδης apud Græcos obtinet. De mortuis usurpata aliàs de tempore, aliàs de loco, aliàs de statu ipsorum dicitur: Sic explicantibus doctissimis Grammaticis Al Faubario & Al Firuzabadio (ut aliorum descriptiones obscuriores omitram) البرزخ ما بين الدنيا والاخرة من وقت الموت الى البعث في مات فقد دخل البرزخ Al Barzach est quod inter hunc mundum & futurum intercedit, à tempore mortis usque ad resurrectionem; [intermundium,] quicumque autem mortuus est, dicitur ingressus Al Barzach.^b Hic de loco spiritibus tam bonorum quam malorum, postquam ex hac vita migraverint, cum Adamo communi dicitur. Apud Scholiasten Abilolæ ad versum jam hoc capite laudatum فجعته الموت, &c. decubitus mortis, &c. pro loco in quo decumbunt corpora sumi videtur; sic enim ille verba Poëtæ enarrans الضجعة بعد الموت في البرزخ نوم يستريح فيه الجسم Decubitus post mortem in Al Barzach somnus est, dum in eo requiescit corpus à labore qui vitam necessario comitatur: والعيش بعد البعث مثل الانتباه vita autem post resurrectionem instar resurrectionis è somno. Nisi hic de tempore etiam exponi malimus. Sed & annotat Cl. V. Jacobus Golius, in præstantissimo illo linguæ Arab. Thesauo, nomen illud in Alcorano pro sepulchro sumi. Apud Avicennam sensu adhuc diverso adhiberi videtur, dum animas à corporibus separatas in varios distribuens ordines, eas quæ (reddente Bellunenfi) sunt perfectæ habitibus speculativis, sed non sunt innocentes vel innoxie, virtuosæ in operationibus moralibus, esse dicit in Berzach, i. e. in purgatorio (ut vertit ille non incommode, sensu licet à vulgari nominis illius apud Christianos Scriptores discrepante) quod est medium inter ipsam felicitatem & inter denudationem ipsarum & completam expolitationem & liberationem ipsarum à qualitatibus corporeis, & habitibus malis impressis à corpore, prohibentibus ne adveniat hujusmodi animabus felicitas absolute, &c. Berzach ergò Philosopho est status ille, qualem describit, intermedius, seu interstitium vel temporis spatium, quod ad animam à vitiosis affectibus, qui ipsi, dum in corpore fuit, altius impressi sunt quam ut statim excuti possint, purgandam requiritur. At alii dicunt الاصح Rectius esse ut [simpliciter] asseratur animas in cælo esse. Quo referri forsân possit alia, quam innuit Author, Kamusii sententia, dum nomen عليون Aliyun explicans, ait, ipsum plurale esse à singulari علي Aliyon, qui locus est في السماء in cælo septimo, quò ascendunt spiritus fidelium; quæ à Judæorum עלייה ejus, p. 156. meminimus, planè mutuata sunt. 3. Aliis, Infidelium animas in puteo quodam in regione Hadramityca, quem Borbut زمر Zemzam, vel alibi, collocantibus. Hanc sententiam Raphedinorum seu Hæreticorum quorundam esse ait Author Cenzil-asrar. 4. Aliis, eas septem post sepulturam mortuorum diebus, circa ipsorum sepulchra versari, quò vero postea se recipiant, haud dicitur. 5. Aliis ان الارواح كلها في الصور esse spiritus omnes in buccina [illa, cujus clangore olim excitandi mortui.] 6. Aliis, referente Al Gazalio, degere illas صور طير بيض في ظل العرش formæ avium albarum in umbra solii [Dei]. 7. Aliis, nihil esse Spiritus aliud quam accidentia, quæ moriente corpore intereunt: quam sententiam ab Al Sharestanio, Al Asbarianorum quibusdam impingi ait author Cenzil Asrar; at quam verè dubitat, cum quæ apud sectam istam passim obtinere creditur doctrina sit ان الارواح لا تغني وانها باقية Non interire Spiritus, sed superstites manere. Nec certè religionis Mohammedicæ fundamentis congrua videtur opinio ista, لم يقل بغنا الارواح الا الدهريون Non asserunt interire Spiritus præter Dahrianos. XVII. الرّيح التي تقبض ارواح المؤمنين Ventus qui fidelium spiritus excipiet: Ille, scil. de quo, Num. x. diximus. Atque hæc signa etiam majora sunt, quæ resurrectionem ex ipsorum doctrina præcessura sunt, eo quo ipsa ordine recensuit author Cenzil Afrar, quæ tamen horam ipsi præstitutam incertam relinquunt, cujus jam instantis signum dabit præsentius Tubæ sonitus; quem & triplicem statuunt, quorum primum نغمة الفرع Flamen consternationis appellant, quo, scil. فزع من في السموات ومن في الارض الا من شاء الله metu consternabitur quicumque tam in cælis fuerit quam in terra, exceptis iis quos voluerit Deus. Miros ipsi effectus tribuunt, viz. terræ labantis tremorem insolitum, quo conquassabuntur penitusque conterentur, non solum quicquid est in ipsa ædificiorum, sed & ipsi montes & saxa, adeo ut undequaque plana & nuda maneat, omni ab ea inæqualitate sublatâ, ac prorsus mutetur ejus status; cæli liquefacti dissolutionem, solis obscurationem, stellarum ruentium lapsum, morientibus, scil. (ut volunt nonnulli) Angelis, qui ipsas inter cælum & terram suspensas tenent, marium confusorum, secundum alios, in flammam mutationem, sole, lunâ, stellisque in ipsa projectis, secundum alios, exiccationem. Sed hæc, majora licet, à sensu tamen remotiora sunt. En tibi quod flaminis istius terrorem Arabum auribus & oculis propius ingerat! Tantus futurus est, ut neglectui prorsus habeantur [العشار] Camelæ factæ postquam decem jam menses uterum ferentes & prolis & lactis spem largam dederint; ideoque Dominis suis انفس ما تكون rerum omnium pretiosissimæ habeantur خطوبت العرب بامر العشار لانها اكثر اموالا Ideo Arabibus camelarum gravidarum mentionem iniecit, quod iis maxime opes ipsorum consent, usque vicent. Nescio igitur majus dicam an minus, quod addunt, lactantes omnem infantium tenellorum curam abjecturas, & quæ uterum ferunt abortum facturas. Hujus etiam flatus effectum statuunt nonnulli concursum illum ferarum, cujus in

Alcorano, c. Al Tacwir mentio, his verbis واذا الوحوش حشرت Et cum congregata fuerint feræ. De quorum sensu in varias itur sententias, dubitantibus interpretibus utrum futurum sit illud quod dicitur, قبل يوم القيامة او في يوم القيامة ante diem resurrectionis, an ipso eo die. Quid verbis innui velint, qui tunc tandem futurum quod prædicitur statuunt, suo loco dicendum erit: qui antea, (audito, scil. buccinæ terrisonæ clangore) autumant tum animantia omnigena, feritate omni depositâ, in unum locum concursura, scil. metu majore minorem excutiente, ipsaque عن الهرب من الخلق والتوحش ne vel homines vel se mutuo, ut aliàs, refugiant inbibente. Flamen hoc sequuturum aiunt, Israsele iterum tubam ori admovente, secundum, quod نغمة الصعق Flamen exanimationis vocant. Quo, scil. ad aures perlato (ut rursus ipsius Alcorani verbis rem exprimamus) ضعفت من في السموات ومن في الارض الا من شاء الله Animam efflaturus sit quicumque sive in cælis sive in terra fuerit, præter eos quos Deo visum fuerit [communi fato eripere.] Hoc inopinatò ipsis eventurum او هو كلعج البصر او هو velut nictu oculi, imo citius, in instanti. Solum ergò Deum superstitem tum mansurum cum الجنة والنار والعرش (ex Dhabaci sententia) Paradiso, igne, & Throno [Dei.] Docente enim Alcorano, كل نفس دابة الموت Omnis anima mortem gustatura est. ولا خلاف بين علماء الاسلام ان كل نفس من نفوس الادميين والحيوانات البرية والحرية والملايكة لا بد لها من ذوق الموت Nec est inter Mohammedanorum doctos controversia, omnem animam tum hominum tum animalium, sive in terra, sive in mari degentium, tum & angelorum mortem necessario gustaturam. Quadraginta post hoc annis, futurum est tertium flamen, نغمة البعث Flamen resurrectionis. Ne tubicinem desideremus, audito ipsum etiam Israselem cum reliquis Angelis mortuum esse, aiunt, ipsum (unâ cum Gabriele & Michaelae) iterum vivere jussum, atque in حجرة بيت المقدس petra Hierosolymitana (quam terræ umbilicum statuunt Interpretes, reliquaque terrâ octodecim miliaribus cælo propiorem) consistentem, ossa vetustate exesa, compagines divulsas, carnes discerptas, & capillos dispersos convocaturum ut, jubente Deo, ad Judicium subeundum coeant. Eundem jussu Dei cum admotâ ori tubâ omnes undique animas convocaverit, ipsas simul in tubam suam conjecturum, quæ ubi jussu Dei flamen illud resurrectionis emis-

Ab ista mortuorum in sepulchris suis resurrectione nomen sortitus est dies iste يوم القيامة Dies resurrectionis, ex aliquorum sententia, scil. quod الناس يقومون فيه من قبورهم Surgent in ipso homines è sepulchris suis. Alii enim ideo sic dictum volunt, quod tum judicio sistendi sint, à gemina thematis notione, qua & standi & surgendi intellectum habet. Alias autem præter hanc appellationes habet quamplurimas: ultra centum enumerat Al Gazalius, Author Cenzil Afrar, quinquaginta, qui & addit اسما كثيرة غير ما ذكرنا والعرب تسمي الشي باسم كثيرة وتجعل له القابا Sunt & illi nomina alia, ultra ea quæ recensuimus, multa. Solent autem Arabes rem multis nominibus indigitarè, eique cognomina varia imponere, ut ipsam grave quid esse, quæque ad eam spectant solito majora, indicent. His autem quæ de die, negotio, de quo loquimur, præstituto, ejusque adventantis atque jam instantis

signis, ac apparatu diximus, adjicere liceat, & quæ de ejusdem duratione asserunt. Ac mira sunt quæ (omnia tum Alcorani, tum Mohammedis auctoritate confirmata) narrantur; aliàs enim dicitur esse durationis ipsius spatium مائة الف سنة ما تعدون mille (quales vulgo numeratis) annorum, aliàs سنة خمسين annos quinquagies mille. Hæc cum inter se conciliatu non adeo facilia sint, nec alterum alteri præferre audeant, cum utrumque pro oraculo diviniùs edito habeatur, variè negotium expedire satagunt. Quidam, nihil ipsi statuere ausi, rem Deo permittunt. Nescire se quos dies innuat Deus. Alii formas loquendi istas tralatitias esse aiunt, nec aliud quam اخبار عن شدة هولاء لان العرب تصف enarrationes magnitudinis terroris [diei istius, maiorumque quæ infideles obruent] cum soleant Arabes illud quod averfantur, ut longum describere, quod gratum, ut breve. Alii intelligi volunt, مقدار موقوف للحساب totum temporis spatium, quo judicio sistendi sint, ut inter homines fiat distinctio, quod non citius peragetur, cum sit وليس اول و ليس آخر dies resurrectionis ejusmodi, cui sit primum at non ultimum; utpote qui sit dies in longum protensus, seu continuus; alii spatii istius mentione innui difficultatem negotii tum præstandi, verbaque sic interpretanda, ut denotent, أن لو ولي محاسبة العباد الملايكة والجن والانس في ذلك اليوم غير الله لم يفرغ منه في خمسين الف سنة Si creaturis, Angelis, scil. Geniis & Homi nibus ad rationem eo die vocandis, præficeretur quispiam, ⁿ Deo omnipotente excepto, haud peracturum ipsum illud quinquaginta annorum millibus. Cæterorum, quæ aliò abeunt, sententias omittimus. His de tempore præmissis, alia occurrunt quæri solita. Quinam tunc resuscitandi? Quâ forma vel quo modo comparati? Quo loco convenire jussi, & quem tandem in finem? Quod ad primum, communem futuram omnium animantium resurrectionem autumant, viz. للانس والجن وسائر Hominum, Geniorum, ac reliquorum cujusvis generis animalium; quod & indubitatis Alcorani testimoniis de singulis confirmant. Quod ad locum istum, quo præcipuè brutorum animantium resurrectionem probant, illum aliter ab ali quibus exponi jam vidimus; plures tamen hanc sententiam amplecti videntur, quos secutus Author Cenzil Afrar, أعلم الله

De loco ubi conventuri sunt proximè inquirendum est. Unde enim venturi, vel ubi resurrecturi, nihil opus est hîc quærere, cum nihil habeant Mohammedani de cavernis subterraneis, per quas à loco in locum devolvendi sint, sed affirmant, حيث كانوا في ubicunque terrarum fuerint, sive in locis cultis, sive desertis, illinc egressuros. Locum autem quo convocandi sint, etiam terram esse definiunt, præeuntibus & Alcorano & traditione, at in qua ejus parte, vel (ut sic loquar) quâ terrâ, non usque adeo convenit. Quidam enim Syriam à Mohammed de digito monstratam, ei negotio assignatam aiunt. Nec erit interim quod quis ullam sibi injuriam à Deo factam quærat, cum nullum cujuscumque opus bonum mercede sua carere patiatur Deus, ideoque ne quid sit ob quod in futura præmium expectent mali, soleat in hac vita ipsos remunerare. Ne miretur autem quis quod ad trutinam tum examinaturus sit Deus opera ista quæ jam optimè cognita atque perspecta habeat, quatuor assignat Al Thaalabius rationes, ob quas id facturum sit; quarum prima est, امتحان ut servos suos in hoc mundo fide probet. Tertia, تعريف الله تعالى ut العباد ما لهم عنده من جزا علي خبر وشتر notum faciat servis suis quamnam apud ipsum boni & mali mercedem consecuturi sint. Quarta, ut fit quo [eorum quæ fecerint] convincantur, vel, ut rem perspicuè enarrat Al Gazalius, ان الله جعلت في صحايف الاعمال ونزنا بحسب درجات الاعمال عند الله تعالى فتصير مقادير اعمال العباد معلومة للعباد حتي يظهر لهم العدل في العقاب او الفضل في الغفر وتضعيف الثواب Deus pondus libris operum indet secundum gradus quos apud ipsum obtinent opera, ut fit valor eorum quæ fecerint homines, hominibus cognitus, quo appareat vel justitia ipsius in puniendo, vel benignitas in condonando & duplicatione præmii. Finito hoc examine, omnibusque omnium operibus æquâ lance trutinatis, succedit ultio illa (cujus mentionem fecimus) aliis de aliis sumenda, quâ justissimâ talionis lege quæ quisque fecerit patietur. Cujus miram hanc describunt rationem, ut cum non alius tum supersit modus quo par pari referatur, illi qui injuriam fecerit tot de bonis ipsius operibus quæ ei ισορροπα sint subducta, eandem passio imputentur. In hoc argumento, apud eos qui de istiusmodi rebus differunt, est cum excedatur, est cum teneatur modus. Ex iis qui modum excedunt in ° manifestis tollendis eo pervenerunt nonnulli; ut manifesta omnia, vel saltem pleraque aliter intelligi velint, adeo ut dictum illud Dei [Alloquuntur nos manus ipsorum, & testimonium perhibebunt pedes ipsorum] nec non [Dixerunt pellibus ipsorum, quare contra nos testi-monium perhibuistis? Dixerunt, Loqui nos fecit Deus qui omnia loqui fecit] & similiter Moncari & Naciri colloquia, & quæ de Libra & Ratiocinio dicuntur, & quæ inter ignis & paradisi incolas intercedent colloquia, dicentibus illis, Effundite in nos aquam, omnia non aliter intelligenda esse quam quod res ipsa loqui videatur; alii [contra] modum exceßerunt in hac interpretandi ratione prorsus tollenda; inter quos est Ahmed Ebn Hanbal, qui eo processit ut interpretari vetet, ut dictum Dei, Sis & erat, putantis, alloquium literis & voce à Deo expressum reperiri in omni ejus nutu secundum rerum creatarum numerum, adeo ut quosdam ex ipsius affectis audiverim dicentes, non permisisse ipsum interpretatione aliqua explicari, præter tria tantum dicta, viz. quod à Mohammede dictum [Lapis niger est dextra Dei in terra;] & [Cor fidelis est inter duos Misericordis digitos] nec non [Inveni animam Misericordis ad latus dextrum] Ita ad interpretandi libertatem tollendam propendent, qui res juxta literæ sonum intelligi volunt. Ego autem existimo Ahmedem Ebn Hanbal scivisse sessione [quæ Deo attribuitur] non indicari ipsum loco affixum manere, nec descensione, eum à loco in locum transferri; ab his interpretandis tamen abstinere voluisse, quo [licentiæ] portam obstrueret, ac hominum bono caveret; siquidem si aperiretur porta ista, dilataretur ruptura, ac res contineri nescia modum excederet, cum intra debitos modi terminos haud facile sistatur. Nihil igitur in hac cautione inest mali, cui & testimonio suo favet antiquorum consuetudo, qui dicere solebant, Eo modo illud transmittite quo [ad vos] pervenit. Adeo ut diceret Malec, cum interrogaretur de sessione [Dei in Throno] Sessionis res nota est, at modus ejus ignotus; eam credere necessarium est, at in eam inquirere hæresis. Alii autem modum tenentes portam interpretamento aperuerunt in omnibus quæ ad Dei attributa spectant, atque ad mundum futurum pertinent, prout sonant intelligenda reliquerunt, eoque interpretari vetuerunt. Sunt hi Al Affarii. Ulterius autem progressi Motazali interpretati sunt etiam inter attributa Dei, quæ ipsius visionem spectant, atque aliter explicant, quod dicitur, ipsum audire & videre. Interpretati etiam sunt quod de Mohammedis in cælos ascensu traditur, ipsum haud in corpore peractum autumantes: Cruciatum etiam sepulchralem, & libram, & pontem Alserat, cæteraque ad mundum futurum spectantia aliter interpretati sunt; interim

interim tamen confessi corporum resurrectionem & paradysum, & sub eo comprehendendi cibum, potum, Venerem & voluptates sensibiles; nec non ignem, qui & comprehendat corpus sensibile adurens, quod cutimurat & adipem colliquet. Sed & hos hactenus progressos superantes Philosophi, aliter exposuerunt omnia quæ de mundo futuro tradita sunt, ea de pœnis intelligibilibus spiritualibus intelligi iubentes, & voluptatibus intellectu percipiendis; negantes etiam corporum resurrectionem, animarum tantum perpetuitatem adstruentes, ipsasque vel cruciandas, vel lætitia afficiendas, pœnis & voluptatibus quæ sensu non percipiantur; atque hi sunt qui modum excedunt. Mediocritatis autem terminus inter laxiorem istam & Hanbalianorum iusto strictionem interpretandi rationem subtilis est & profundus, quem non vident nisi qui Deum habentes propitium, res divino lumine, non auditu, percipiunt, deinde ubi ipsis retecta fuerint abdita rerum mysteria prout se reverâ habent, ad ea quæ auditu edocti sunt, & verba traditione accepta animum advertentes, ea, quæ veri lumine, perceperunt statuminant, quæ aliter se habent, interpretantur. Quod si quis harum rerum cognitionem auditu simplici hauserit, in qua haud firmiter ipsi consistat pes, nec locum ubi eum figat aliquem designatum habeat, satius ipse est, ut iis, quæ auditu simplici percipiet, contentus sit, prout fecit Ahmed Ebn Hanbali. Atque ita vulgò ea, quæ maximè omnium interpretatione commodâ egere videantur, crassissimo & ab iis quæ credunt Christiani maximè diverso, ab ipsis sensu intelligi, probant (ut alia omittam argumenta) verba illa ab ipsis illi inserta juramenti formulæ, quam Christianis exhibent, cum eos ad pactum aliquod vel promissum sanctè observandum ostringere volunt, eorum, quæ maxime abhorreant atque averfentur, si fidem sefellerint, mentione ipsis injectâ & metu inculcato. Jurare ergò cogunt Christianum, si aliter fecerit, vel promissis non steterit, inter cætera وأنثبت وجود الحور العين في المعاد وأن في الآخرة التلذذات الجسمانية Et affirmabo reperiri puellas pulchras μεγαλοφθαλμους in resurrectione, esseque in altero mundo voluptates corporeas. Atqui plane ridicula sunt (inquies) & plusquam absurda, quæ prolata sunt, si hoc modo fumantur: Sic mihi, sic tibi, sic Christiananis omnibus videntur, & sunt revera; at quanta interim mundi pars, quique se aliis sapientiâ præstare judicant, aliter censent? Quantas igitur gratias Deo misericordiarum patri debes, qui tibi in ea religione & nasci & educari concessit, quæ de his & meliùs scire & rectiùs sentire doceat? Neque enim minima (si qua major esse potest) felicitas est, de magno hoc articulo rectè institutum esse; quem meritò appellat R. Moyses Nachmanides חוקת כל נקוה להקבה Spem omnis in Deum sperantis, quoque sablato omnis similitum in Deum fides, tum ergà homines pietas, (quicquid nonnulli de nudæ virtutis illecebris, quibus homines nullâ vel præmiorum spe, vel pœnarum metu adductos ad se trahat, subtilius philosophentur) corrui; at quem qui firmiter credit, & quæ pollicetur, vel sperat, vel timet, magnam ejus in se vim, quâ vel stimuli quo ad bene agendum incitetur, vel fræni quo à male agendo cohibeatur, vice fuerit, necesse est ut sentiat, adeo ut non immerito Al Gazalius Atheismi, vel, quod eodem recidit, Sadduceismi illum incuset, qui resurrectionem mortuorum, & alterius vitæ mercedem credere se professus, nullam tamen inde hujus rectè instituendæ curam hauserit, cum (ut loquitur) تكذيب العدل ابلغ من تكذيب الاسان Gravius alicui mendacium factis quam linguâ impingatur. Mohammedani equidem vel falsâ illâ, quam amplexi sunt, de his rebus opinione tam ad severissima religionis suæ præcepta anxie observanda, quam ad eandem vitæ hujus dispendio tuendam ac propagandam animantur. Quod tum ea quæ vulgò apud ipsos fieri solent perpendenti, tum ipsorum scripta, ac nominatim celebris istius concionatoris Ebn Nobatæ homilias, in quibus omnia fere, quæ vel ad peregrinationes lege institutas, aliaque quibus vel labor vel sumptus non mediocris impendendus fuerit, vel ad bella contra Christianos fortiter atque imperterrito animo gerenda, vitamque profundendam incitant, argumenta ferè non aliunde petantur, quam ab iis quæ in altero mundo expectentur, insipienti facile patebit. Tu igitur, qui à Christo, verbo Dei æterno, præceptore certiore, harum rerum cognitione imbutus fueris, nisi ad faciliora ipsius præcepta diligentius observanda, omniaque tum in Deum, tum in homines pietatis officia præstanda, eâ permotus fueris, cave ne cum advenerit tremendus ille, ab utrisque expectatus dies, illos contra te testimonium perhibentes habeas, reque non (ut falsò illi autumant) ob fidem falsò conceptam, sed ob facta fide verâ indigna, & quibus nomini Christiano dedecori fueris, condemnantes. riorum Judæi, ideo ipsum statim tanquam minus huic rei idoneum missum faciamus; cum quibus artibus ea omnia nobis eripere conentur illi viderimus. Monuerunt viri nominis, merito suo, magni, ne contra religionis Christianæ hostes urgeantur, quæ ab ipsis facile contemni possint testimonia. Quibus equidem assentior. Eatenus tamen, ut de istiusmodi locis quæ parum re verâ in se ponderis habent, non de iis quorum illi quod vim metant ideo contemnere se simulant, intelligatur. Vereor enim ne nimis aliquando faciles hac in parte fuerint nostri, eaque illis indulerint, quæ nec ipsi sibi vindicare nec eludere poterant. Exemplum (ni fallor) ne gratis hoc dixisse videamur, luculentum præbebit locus iste, qui Jer. xxxi. ver. 22. occurrit, כִּי בָרָא יְהוָה הָרֶשֶׁת בָּאָרֶץ נִקְבָּה כִּי בָרָא תִסְבֵּב גִּבֹּר. Quia creavit Dominus novum in terra, fœmina circumdabit virum. Quæ verba explicans Summus Vir Johannes Calvinus, Merito rideri ait à Judæis eorum sententiam, qui hæc de Maria Virgine, quæ in utero suo Christum gestaverit, interpretantur, quod tamen Christianos fere uno consensu fecisse dicit. Haud certe mirum est à Judæis explodi quamlibet, quæ ad Christianorum fidem stabilendam faciat, interpretationem. At merito hanc ab ipsis risu excipi non adeo constat. Mihi equidem omnium quæ adducuntur optima videtur, cum reliquæ planè frigidæ sunt, quas afferunt sive Christiani sive Judæi, adeo ut si hæc vera non sit, nondum quis rectum verborum sensum affecutus videatur. Si dicant mulierem virum ambituram seu amplexaturam, cum vir alias mulierem ambire soleat, quæ Kimchii sententia est, quid adeo in hoc mirum, ut ideo novum creasse dicatur Dominus in terra? Annon hoc inter Judæos lege יָבוּם seu Levirationis (ut loquuntur) & fieri debuit, & sæpius factum est? sic pia mulier Ruth Boazum ambivit. Imo & ut mulier, quæ à marito suo alienata aliis se adjunxerat, ad ipsum, facti sui pœnitentiâ ducta, redire cupiat, non adeo inter homines inauditum videtur, ut novæ creationis opus dici mereatur. His addendum, nullum parilis ejusdem verbi סָבַב usus ¹ exemplum à Doctissimo isto Grammatico, causæque suæ minimè negligente, proferri, quo hæc ipsius interpretatio confirmetur. In suis ad locum istum com-mentariis rem sic explicat, וְכִּי הָיָה הַחֲרִשָּׁה כִּי נִקְבָּה תִסְבֵּב גִּבֹּר שְׂדֵהוֹ אִישׁ מִחוּז וּמִסֻּבֵּב אַחֵר הָאִשָּׁה וְכֵן אָמְרוּ רַבּוֹתֵינוּ וְלֹא בַעַל אִבְדָּה מִחוּז עַל אִבְדָּתָהּ וְאִם הִנֵּקְבָּה תִסְבֵּב אַחֵר אִשָּׁה כְּלוּמָר שִׁישׁוּבוֹ בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל אֵלֶּי ה' אֱלֹהֵיהֶם וְנֹאֲלָם, Et quid est novum istud? quòd fœmina resorbere gaber. Mos enim mundi est ut vir revertatur & circumeat post mulierem, atque ita dixerunt Doctores nostri f. m. Qui aliquid amisit, redit ad illud [seu quærit illud] quod amisit, at tunc fœmina redibit ad [seu converteretur post] virum suum; q. d. reversuros Israelitas ad Dominum Deum suum, ipsumque eos liberaturum. Si in textu haberetur אָחֵר post, quod ille verbo תִסְבֵּב subjunxit, ut ipsius constructioni inserviat, de ipsius interpretatione minimè dubitarem; ac cum nihil tale ibi reperiatur, subesse aliquid quod ipsum cum aliis ad insolitam ac aliàs inauditam ejusdem, redeundi intellectu accepti, constructionem hoc loco confugere faciat, non possumus non suspicari. Si cum aliis vertamus, Fœmina convertetur in virum, ut è veteribus nonnulli, eosque secuti Ebn Jannabi, & R. Tanchum, qui בַּעַל יָאֵתִי גִיבֹר תִסְבֵּב, verbum intransitivum esse volunt, (quamvis forsan & sine exemplo) idemque valere ac וְתִנְקֵלֵב דְּכִרָּתָהּ, mutabitur ac convertetur in virum: si hoc secundum verborum sonum intelligatur, concedendum est esse תִלְךָ חֲאֵל נִדְרִיָּה, illud rem novam & plane miram; at qualem vel promissam vel præstitam haud ausit quis affirmare. Sin ut illi volunt, ita ut sit, מִתֵּל לַעֲוֹן אִלְמָלָה בַּעַר, parabola qua exprimitur gentis Israelicæ potentia, postquam humiliata ac animo fracta fuerat (ad quam etiam sententiam prope accedit Calvinus, nisi quod verbo transitivè sumpto obsidendi significatum tribuit) non adeo hoc mirum aut sub veteri creatione infrequens, ut vel fœminæ animos gesserint viriles; cum tales repertæ sæpius fuerint heroinæ, de quibus affirmari poterit quod cecinit poëta,

فلو كان النساء كمثل هذه لغضت النساء على الرجال

ⁿ Si essent fœminæ instar hujus,

Certe præstantiores essent fœminæ viris. Vel, ii qui prius imbelles fuerint, & fœminarum quam virorum similiore, animos demum viriles resumpserint, iisque, quibus contemptui fuerant, superiores evaserint.

evaferint. Cum ergò hic expectandum sit aliquid dignum præfatione ista, qua se novum quid in terra creaturum dicit Dominus, nec tale aliquid nobis exhibeant quas vidimus sententiæ, quid ni illam, inquam Christianorum tam veterum quam recentiorum plerique eunt, de miraculosa Christi in utero virginis conceptione, amplectamur. Nihil est præter insolitam miraculi naturam, quod nobis objiciant Judæi; (at nihil hic solitum expectare jubentur) nihil quod rideant, cum maxime usitatum, & genuinum verbi intellectum sequamur. Ait enim Kimchius in Radicibus, de diversis thematicis סבב significatibus verba faciens, ענין כולם וכל אשר הם מזה השרש ענין סובב והקפת הרבר, Istorum omnium atque omnium ab ista radice oriundarum intellectus est circuitio & circumdatio rei, ideoque R. Judam contra R. Jonam (ut Ebn Jannabium appellat) tuetur, quod hunc solum thematici istius significatum statuerit; cum reliqui omnes ad eum necessario reducendi sint, scil. ad הסיבוב והקפה, circuitionem & circumdationem. Hunc ergò nobis amplecti liceat, ridentibus licet vel ringentibus adversariis, ut ita verba hæc à fœmina circumdatum, non ordinaria naturæ, sed novæ cujusdam creationis lege, virum nobis describentia, ad Christum à Maria Virgine in utero gestatum manu ducant. Si nominetiam נבר, quod non masculinum simpliciter, sed Virum & viribus pollentem denotat, eximiam quandam Emphasin tribuamus, quâ Christi, qui & adhuc in utero inclusus divina fortitudine plenus fuit, excellentiam innuat, nec est cur hoc rideant Judæi, cum ipsorum majores teste Abarbinele per נבר hic הנברוה, vere potentem, Deum, scil. ipsum intellexerint: Quod si Galatino fides adhibenda; & inter ipsos olim fuerunt, qui disertis verbis hunc Virum, non alium esse quam Regem Messiam asseruerint: Quorum tamen testimonio minime nobis opus est, cum res ipsa clamet, nec verba nisi ad sensus minus proprios, & constructionem duriores coacta, alii cuipiam aptari possint, cum in ipso adeo omnia suaviter conspirent, ut non immerito Magnus Vir Thomas Jacksonius, Collegii Corporis Christi apud Oxonienfes quondam Præses, dormire ac somniare sibi videri pronuntiaverit, qui tantum mysterium, dum hæc verba explicant, intactum præterierint. Hoc interim exemplo monuisse sufficiat, ut Sacræ Scripturæ oracula & mysteria non ad Judæorum arbitrium, sed veritatis normam expendamus. Ponderentur quæ proferuntur ad veritatem Christi confirmandam testimonia, ne quid momenti levioris inter ea collocetur, quæ pondus suum habent, ne, quod adversarii ea se contemnere simulent, ultro dedantur. Æquè culpandus est miles, qui vel gladio plumbeo hostem aggreditur, vel acutum nactus, eum sibi manibus risu alterius excuti patiatur.

Nota. Postquam hæc prelo subjecta sunt, incidit mihi in manus Doctissimi Viri Antonii Hulsii Theologia Judaica, in qua idem de loco isto Jeremiæ (versu, scil. 22. capitis xxxi.) nobiscum sentit. Quibus tum falsas Judæorum glossas diluat, tum sententiam suam tueatur, argumentis, apud ipsum videat, cui libet, p. 300, &c.

CAP. IX.

Eruuntur è Judæorum traditionibus nonnulla, quæ ad ver. 3 & 4. cap. vii. Evangelii secundum Marcum, ubi de ipsorum lotionibus ante cibum & à foro, &c. mentio fit, intellectum faciant; nec non ad voti Corban, cujus ver. 11. meminit, explicationem.

DUM in iis, quæ suis in Seder Taboroth Commentariis præmisit Maimonides, vertendis occupatus essem, ea mihi sæpissime occurrissè fateor, quæ & stomacho indignanti nauseam moverent, & manui fessæ calamus ferè excuterent. At cum à Celebris isto Doctore tantopere eadem prædicari, suisque tanquam omnium scitu maxime & necessaria & utilia ingeri animadverterem, quasi in ipsis totius religionis Judaicæ medulla consisteret, visum est mihi ea nostris etiam quâ potui fide communicare, quibus cognoscere quod illi sibi tam necessarium putant, vel eo nomine nec ingratum forsan erit, nec, si quid ego sentiam, inutile. Utilitates enim ex iis quæ de munditiæ & immunditiæ rationibus tradunt Judæi, si non alias, has saltem percepturi sumus, quod & meritò ipsis à Christo vitio verti probent, quod gravioribus legis præceptis neglectui habitis ad minutias nescio quas diverterint, additæque à se doctrinas, Dei mandatis, paleum tritico, corticem medullæ prætulerint, & ad ea quæ istiusmodi ipsorum μαλακοεργίας exempla affert Evangelium, intelligenda faciant. Quod ut aliquatenus comprobatum demus, mus, iis, quæ Marci vii. Seniorum traditiones vocantur, quarum ut plus æquo tenaces reprehenduntur, ex eorum disciplina lucem aliquam afferre conabimur. Capitis illius versibus 3 & 4, hæc legimus, Οἱ γὰρ φαρισαῖοι καὶ πάντες οἱ Ἰουδαῖοι, εἰὰν μὴ πύγῃ νίψωνται τὰς χεῖρας, ἢ ἐσθίωσι, κρατῶντες τὴν παραδόσιν τῶν προφύτων. Καὶ ἀπὸ ἀγροῶς, εἰὰν μὴ βαπτίσωνται, ἢ ἐσθίωσι, καὶ ἄλλα πολλά ἐστὶν ἃ παρέλαβον κρατῶν, βαπτισμὸς ποτηρίων καὶ ξερῶν καὶ χαλκίων καὶ κλινῶν. Non est mihi animus aliis immorari, sed ea tantum quæ ad traditionum intellectum conferant proferre. Liceat tamen de illis, qui superstitionis nimis huiusmodi traditionum observantiæ præcipuè arguuntur, pauca dicere ab instituto non aliena: de Pharisæis nimirum, qui quod à separatione nomen fortiti sunt, vel ob. frequentes istas ablutiones, quibus sibi tam à rerum quam hominum pollutione cavebant, ac se ab aliis, quos pro profanis ac pollutis habuere, distinguebant, meriti videantur. Hinc nota illa Pharisæi apud authorem libri Aruc descriptio, הוא שפירש עצמו מכל טומאה ומן מאכל טמא ועם כהן, הארץ שאינו מדרק במאכל, scil. qui se separet ab omni immunditie, à cibo polluto, & à populo terræ [vulgo] qui non adeo accuratam in cibo sumendo diligentiam adhibet, scil. quod forsan aliquando κοινὰς χερσὶ (ut de Christi discipulis hæc queruntur) cibum sumerent, vel aliquo alio modo negligentiores se præberent. Eodem fere modo & Rambam ad Chagigah, cap. 2. §. 7. פירושם הם אוכלי חולין בטהרה ונוהרים מן הטומאות כלן תמיד וכמו כן שומרין מאכליהן ומשתיהן כדי שיהיו טהורין, Pharisæi sunt qui cum munditie comedunt profana [cibum communem] & continue cavent ab omnibus immunditie generibus, eodemque modo cibo & potui suo cavent, ut mundi sint. Idem l. Yad. tr. Tumath ocelim, cap. ult. §. ult. אף על פי שמותר לאכול אוכלין טמאין ולשתות משקין טמאים חסידים הראשונים היו אוכלין חוליהן בטהרה ונוהרין מן הטומאות כולן כל ימיהם והן הנקראים פרושים ודבר זה קדושה יתירה היא ודרך חסידות שיהיה נבדל אדם ופורש משאר העם ולא יגע בהם ולא יאכל עמם, Quamvis vesci liceat cibus immundis, & liquores immundos bibere, sancti tamen priores solebant edere profana sua [cibum suum communem] cum munditie, & ab omnibus immunditie generibus cavebant per totam vitam suam, suntque illi qui appellantur Pharisæi. Estque res hæc sanctimonia superabundans, ut separet se homo, atque separet à vulgo, neque ipsos contingat, unāve cum illis vescatur aut bibat. Hinc illud à Pharisæis, qui eximium hunc sanctimonie gradum obtendebant, Christo objectum, Quid est quod cum Publicanis & peccatoribus edit ac bibit? Mar. ii. 16. at quem in finem hæc omnia? scil. שהפרישות מביאה לידי טהרה הגוף ממעשים הרעים וטהרה הנפש מביאה לידי קדושת הנפש מן הדעות הרעות וקדושת הנפש גורמת להדמות בשכינה וקדושתם, שנאמר והתקדשתם, &c. Quod à rebus ac hominibus profanis separatio corpus à malis actionibus mundum conservet, corporis mundities menti à pravis opinionibus munditiem conciliet, mentis vero puritas homines Deo similes reddat, quod jubetur, Sancti estote, quoniam sanctus sum ego Dominus sanctificans vos. Finis certe optatissimus, & quem ad consequendum nulla omittenda sunt media, nulla non adhibenda cura. At quem dum omnium maxime prætendebant Pharisæi, nihil minus quam ad ipsum sincerè atque ex animo collimabant, quibus ideo Christus vitio vertit, quod omnia opera sua facientes πρὸς τὸ θεαθῆναι τοῖς ἀνθρώποις, nihil amplius præstarent quam qui exteriorem poculi patinæque partem sollicitè purgantes, quod intus est sordibus plenum relinquunt. Cujus turpissimæ fraudis ne se à Christo solo, idque injuriā insimulatos querantur, pauca afferre liceat quibus à suis etiam larvati isti Doctores depinguntur; ac celebre inprimis est illud R. Josue, qui ante Christum floruisse perhibetur, dictum, חסיד שוטה רשע ערום אישה, פרושה מכור פרושין הרי אלו מבלי עולם, religiosus fatuus, scelestus, vaser, mulier sancta, & plagæ Pharisæorum mundo exitium ferunt: Laudatur in ipso textu Talmudico, tr. Sotah, cap. 3. §. 4. Plagas Pharisæorum vocat superfluos cultus ac ritus molestos, ab ipsis in religionem lege Mosaicā præscriptam subintroducitos (ob quales à Christo reprehenduntur) explicante Maimonide, בנוה ען זיאתהם, appellarunt additamenta ipsorum, quibus legem gravem reddiderunt, plagas. At quid ni in ipsos Pharisæos, non religionis solum, cujus columnæ videri volebant, sed totius mundi plagas & pestes, torqueatur censura ista? Ita aliis visum. Inter illos fatetur Maimonides fuisse non paucos qui nomen illud

Alpbesi tamen, qui lotionis materiam statuit, כל היד עד הקנה של זרוע, totam manum usque ad os Brachii, sententiam laudant author Turim, Rashba, seu R. Salomo Ben Adrath, R. Joseph Karo, R. Mordechai, aliique, eamque esse quæ usu & obtineat, & obtinere debeat; neque enim grave esse ut quis eousque aquam manibus affundat, illudque facere debeat, quo & omnem animo suo scrupulum amoveat, majoremque simul, quam diligens moris hujus observatio secum affert, mercedem obtineat. Prudenter interim monet ^d Joseph Karo, נכון להתנות ולומר שאינו מקבל עליו דבר זה, בתורת חובה אלא בתורת רשות, Expedire ut quis conditionem adhibeat, dicatque se illud in se suscipere non ut rem ad quam præstandam obligatus, sed ut planè liberam, ac spontaneam, quo scil. siquando tantum aquæ ipsi in promptu non fuerit, לא יצטרך להחמיר כמנהגו, non necesse sit illi secum adeo severè ac alias agere, atque ita, inquit, ראוי להתנות בכל, דבר שאדם רוצה להחמיר על עצמו homini conditionem istiusmodi adhibere in omnibus ^e in quibus plus sibi, quam necesse est, imponere velit. Maimonidem vero cum nullâ adhibitâ explicationis notâ vocem ^f פרק Perek simpliciter adhibuerit, probabile esse non aliam intellexisse compaginem, quam eam à R. Alpbeso distinctè propositam, quâ manus cum brachio connectitur; Arabibus ea زند [brachiale] dicitur, atque, inde eam etiam sententiam amplexus R. Salomo Bar Nathanael, ante panis propriè dicti esum requirit, غسل اليدين الى الزند, lotionem manuum usque ad carpos. Porro quæ hætenus dicta sunt optimè (ni fallor) quid per πύγματι νίωτεσθαι apud Evangelistam intelligatur, nos docent: eam scil. corporis partem quæ lotionem mundanda erat dictione πύγματι designari; quæ & Hebræicæ Perek, prout ab ipsis explicatam vi-* dimus, non malè respondet, atque ex istorum temporum usu magis quàm è præciso vocis intellectu forsan exponenda est. Si usitatiorem ejus significatum, quo pugnum, i. manum inflexis digitorum nodis tum mediis, tum iis quibus metacarpio inferuntur, adeoque protuberantibus, contractum denotat, respexeris, en tibi eorum sententiam, qui vel articulos digitorum medios, vel eos qui ad metacarpium sunt (condylos vel metacondylos) lotionis terminum statuunt: sin pro tota manu ad carpum usque sumseris, quam etiam eâ non impropriè designari putant ^g viri docti: en eam quam R. Alpbes atque alii (ut vidimus) præferendam censent. Imò & secundum Julium Pollicem exterior totius manus contractæ pars propriè πύγματι dicitur: ac Judæos Perek suum, articulorum ad exteriorem partem protuberantium spatio metiri vidimus. Nam quod Cl. Vir Lud. Capellus aliam nominis πύγματι significationem, quâ mensuram cubito sex digitos brevior denotat, h. e. à cubito ad digitorum discriminationis initium, sequi maluit, (favente etiam Theophylacto, qui ἕως τῆς ἀγκυλῶν vertit) non adeo iis quæ à Judæis olim, si traditioni fides, inter lavandum observari solebant, consonum videtur. Nam quod eorum loquendi formam, quâ aquam affundere jubent עד הפרק, usque ad Perek, in partes vocat, plane contra ipsorum disciplinam est, qui ab aqua quæ ultra Perek fluxerit, cavendum disertè præcipiunt (uti in sequentibus, volente Deo, videbimus) dicuntque שמעם ואילך אינו נקרא יד אפילו לענין קדוש ידים, inde & quod ultra est non appellari manum, ne quidem respectu sacræ istius ablutionis manuum & pedum è concha [in tabernaculo,] testante authore Lebusch, parte 1. num 162. §. 1. Quod autem à Mohammedanorum ritu testimonium petit, qui غسل اليدين مع المرفقين, lavari manus unâ cum cubitis (ut Kadi Ahmed Asphabaniensis) vel (ut Al Gazali) الى المرفقين, usque ad cubitos, jubent, haud satis firmum, est; cum licet lotiones suas Mohammedanos à Judæis accepisse minime dubitemus, non tamen eos in omnibus se illorum exemplo conformasse credamus. Imo ne ab illis didicisse videantur, in diversum non raro datâ operâ abiisse reperiemus. Exemplum dedimus loculentum in Specim. Hist. Arabum, pag. 309, &c. ubi ostendimus ideo Mohammedem diem jejunii Ashura, i. mensis decimum, quem à Judæis acceperat, in Tasua, Quare autem interpretatio ista, quâ πυγμή de ea corporis parte quæ ablutione mundanda erat, intelligatur, cæteris quæ ab interpretibus afferuntur præferenda videatur, melius, ni fallor, patebit, ubi & in cætera, quæ inter lavandum observabant, oculos conjecerimus, ad quæ igitur jam pergamus.

Aquam è loco seu conceptaculo suo in vas aliquod ^h huic usui idoneum transferendam diximus; quærendum jam quomodo è vase isto manibus sumenda, hoc enim inter ea collocat Maimonides, de quibus, כל הנוטל ידיו צריך לזוהר, solicitus esse debet quisquis manus suas lavare velit. Quod si altero latere in terram reclinato, vasi effluerit aqua, eâ manus ablueri, nihil proderit; ut nec si ex eodem alicubi pertuso continuo ^p impetu eruperit, eidem ipsas admovisse; nisi ejusmodi sint vasa, quæ siphunculis instructa fuerint, & epistomiis, quibus apertis aqua ad libitum lavantis, quoties opus fuerit, elicitur, dein versatis obstruitur; quæ enim ita depromitur aqua, ככח גברא non nisi vim admovente homine, effluit. Atque ita comparatum olim fuisse labium æneum in tabernaculo autumant, הכיוור אינו מקלח תמיד אלא היו בו ברואות וכל כהן שרצה לקדש ידיו ורגליו היה פותח, וכל כהן שרצה לקדש ידיו ורגליו היה פותח, לו הברוא ומקדש, Labium non emittebat continuè aquam, sed fuerunt illi siphones; quivis autem sacerdos qui manus & pedes suos lavare volebat, aperto sibi siphone lavabat. Atque ex his etiam de hydriis istis quarum mentio fit Joannis ii. 6. [ἦσαν δὲ ἐκεῖ ὑδρίαὶ λίθιναι ἕξ κείμεναι κατὰ τὸν καθάρισμὸν τῶν Ἰουδαίων, χωρῆσαι ἀνὰ μετρητὰς δύο ἢ τρεῖς] conjecturam sumere licet, scil. vel istiusmodi siphonibus instructas fuisse, quos sibi quivis manus mundaturus recluderet, vel majora saltem fuisse vasa, è quibus in minora depromeretur aqua in convivarium usum: utrivis generi satis congruet dictum quod sequitur ἀντλήσατε νῦν.

atur, non tantum ne refluat aqua semel affusa, sed כדי שלא יצאו הוין לפרק, ne omnino inter affundendum ultra carpum defluat, quo ullius ab ea pollutionis metus sit. Plura apud eundem authorem, aliòsque his de rebus legere est, quibus omnibus ex diametro opposita videntur ea, quæ de hoc ritu habet Illustrissimus Scaliger, ubi cum per πυγμαλον tale intelligi dixisset manus ^v Schema quod colligitur pollicis ungue cum quatuor digitorum summitatibus conjuncto, addit, "Cum igitur manus sic configuratae fuerint, attolluntur ita ut aqua, quæ inter lavandum manibus hæserit, una cum fordibus per exteriores partes manuum ad cubitum usque defluant, & mox manibus, eodem schemate manente, terram versus pronis demissis, ab cubitis in terram decendant: Itaque in lotionem manuum tria fiunt. Lavantur manus ita ut omnes fordes eluantur: Componuntur deinde in pugnum: Postremo elevantur & demittuntur." At hoc est quod nullo modo permittunt, ut vidimus, Judæi, ut manus postquam semel elevatae fuerint, ante lotionem peractam, atque aquam abstersam, demittantur: immunditiem hoc pacto augeri, non tolli. Pergit Illustrissimus Vir, Inde vides quare elevatio manuum vocata sit accurata illa χειρολαβία, qua ab antiquis usque temporibus hætenus utuntur Judæi. Ita enim, נטילת ידים, ipso interpretante est, Elevatio manuum, χειρολαβία. בַּעֲצוֹתָא בְּבִעֵץ, Declaratum est in Tofiphtha oportere lavantem manus suas Leshaphsheph, i. alteram alteri affricare, quæ primo obtuitu favere forsan videantur illi verborum πυγμῇ νίπτεισθαι interpretationi, quæ sonare ea vult pugno in cavum manus alterius immisso defricari, (quod sanè fieri solitum putat Scaliger, licet aliud hîc innui dicat) at penitius inspecta, & ex Rabbinorum mente explicata, nihil minùs quam eo tendere reperientur, nam nec defricatio, quam requirunt, sordium tenaciùs adhærentium abstergendarum gratiâ, nec tam manibus in pugnum flexis quam expansis, fieri solita videtur. Huc spectant quæ dicunt, הַנוֹטֵל יָדוֹ צֶדֶק לְשִׁפְשֵׁף שִׁפְשֵׁף, בחבירתה טמאה בראשו או בכותל מזהרה, Qui manus suas laverit, necesse est, ut eas affricet, si alteram alteri affricuerit, immunda fit, si capiti suo vel parieti, munda est: è quibus hoc elici docet Josephus Karo, necessariam esse quidem manuum defricationem, at, contra ac sonant Maimonidis verba, non שֶׁצֶדֶק לְשִׁפְשֵׁף שְׁתֵּי יָדָיו necesse esse, ut manuum suarum alteram alteri affricet, cum vel capiti, vel parieti eas affricare liceat, ideoque nihil aliud ex nonnullorum mente requiri ait ^d quam לקנח מים שעל ידיו במפה או בריס, ut abstergatur aqua quæ manibus adhæserit, sive mappâ, sive re quapiam aliâ ob illud quod in Talmude dictum est, כל האוכל פת בלא גינוב ידים, כשאר דברים, si quis comederit panem non exiccatis manibus, perinde est, ac si immundum comedisset. Ex iisdem non minùs perspicuè quæ diximus elici videntur. Affricationem istam manibus expansis, non in pugnum contractis, fieri solitam, inde patet, quod earundem ad caput vel parietem defricandarum meminit; ad quod neutiquam idonea erit, quæ ita flexa fuerit manus. Deinde nec ad sordes sollicitiùs purgandas confricanda manus, cum à manu ad manum transferri aliquando confricatione immunditiem, non tolli, doceant. Ideoque cavendum ne nisi utræque prius aquâ perfusæ confricentur, quod ut his verbis obscuriùs innuitur, ita ^f à R. Mordechai (ut alios omittamus) in Lebush, perspicue traditur, qui manum unam aquâ madidam, alteri eadem non simul perfusæ affricare, lotioni rectè peragendæ contrarium esse docet; at si simul eâ perfusæ fuerint manus etiam post affusionem primam licere ipsas confricare, cum pro una jam habeantur. Quod si integrâ Rebiith simul affusâ ambas proluerit, aut eâ in tres, ut in superioribus explicatum, partes totidem vicibus affundendas distriburâ, tum, צֶדֶק לְשִׁפְשֵׁף יָדָיו זו בְּזוֹ כְּדִי לִקְנַח, יפה כל המים קודם גינובם במטפחה, שבוה נטהרו יפה, oportere ut manuum alteram alteri affricet, quo totam aquam diligenter abstergat, antequam ipsas mantili exiccet; ita futurum ut optimè munden- tur. Hoc interim cavendum monens, ne inter confricandum partem aliquam contingat ad quam non pertigerit aqua; secus enim refluxente humore illas se invicem polluturas. Ex his facile statuere est cujusmodi sit de qua loquuntur ^g Magistri, manuum affricatio, quæ ab ea, quæ pugno alterius manus palmæ inserto fiat, satis diversa, & vix eam admittere videatur.

Quæ hæcenus dicta sunt ad eam præcipuè lotionem spectant, quam מִים ראשונים, aquam primam vocant, quâ scil. antequam cibum capere liceat purgandæ sint manus; quam rursus in primam, secundam & tertiam distinguunt, prout vel tota simul, vel binis, vel ternis (ut vidimus) vicibus, affusa fuerit, quas tres lotiones pro una habitas fuisse verissimum est. ^h Præter hanc, מִים אחרונים, aquæ posterioris, seu quâ post cibum ἀπονίπτεισθαι solebant, mentionem etiam injecimus, de qua adhibenda non minus quam de priori solliciti erant; imo vel magis. Nam cum permissum aliquibus aliquando fuerit priorem omittere, posteriorem istam semper observare tenebantur. ⁱ Ideoque quod in textu Talmudico dicitur, מְטוֹרֵין מִרְחִיצָתָא, ad lavandas manus non teneri, explicat Gemara, לא שנו אלא מים ראשונים, אבל אחרונים חובה, Non intelligendum hoc nisi de aqua prima, posteriorem autem debitum esse. Utriusque rationem reddit ^k Maimonides. Ad priorem lotionem non tenentur, מפני שהן טורדין במלחמה, quod belli negotiis anxie occupati sunt, posteriorem negligere vetantur, מפני הסכנה, ob periculum. Hujus e. lotionis necessitatem non tam à præcepto aliquo quam à periculi metu esse volunt; hoc est quod in *Talm. c. curandâ purgatione opus haberet, non video quomodo inter eos, de quibus hîc sermo est, collocandus sit, cum qui ita se habeat, post corporis ablutionem non secus se habeat ad ea quæ cum munditiæ curâ comedi debeant, ac qui illotis adhuc manibus est, scil. כשני לטומאה, ut secundus ad immunditiem propagandam, usque ad occasum solis, adeo ut ante illud tempus Terumâ ipsi vesci minime liceret. Jam verò de manibus pollutis nihil gravius pronuntiarunt, quam ut essent כשני לטומאה, instar secundi ad polluendum, adeo ut nihil immersio ista ad cibum communem capiendum promovisse videatur, quo nullibi interdicitur immundis, & ad quem nullibi requiritur à magistris totius corporis ablutio. Hîc autem, ut dictum est, de eo quod ordinariè ante cibum fiebat, idque tam ab aliis quam à Phariseis, loquitur, ad quem ex more nihil gravius postulari videtur, quam manuum aquâ affusâ lotio, imò nec ex vi vocis βαπτίζεσθαι, si quam maxime urgeatur, & de ipso Joanne f. Gudgedæ cibum capturo sermo esset, plus quam earum in aquam immersione purgatio. Quid est igitur quod cum prius verbo νίπτεσθαι usus esset, hic de venientibus à foro ^d βαπτίζεσθαι usurpet? Dicam quod sentio; cibum ordinarium capturis liberum erat sive manus in aquarum justæ mensuræ conceptaculum, vel fontem immergere, sive easdem eo quem descripsimus modo, aquâ affusâ lavare: docentibus passim Mishnâ & Gemarâ, & ex ipsis, Maimonide, his verbis, כל הצריך נ' והטביל ידיו במי מקוה אינו צריך דבר אחר, ^e Quisquis opus habet ablutione manuum, si ipsas in aquam conceptaculi intinxerit, non est ipsi opus ut aliquid aliud faciat. Imo immersionem istam pro gradu quodam eminentiori purgationis habitam patet ex iis quæ diximus, cum etiam sacris contrectandis eas idoneas redderet, ad quæ aquæ affusio sufficere non censebatur. Atque inde est quod ait author Lebusch, כיון שנטילה מעייל, ^f Cum aquæ affusio proficit [manibus purgandis] multò magis immersio [ad idem valet.] Cum ergò utram mallent harum lotionum adhibere possent, & satis probabile sit ex iis qui maiorem sanctimoniam speciem præ se ferrent, fuisse qui (quod de Joanne isto, cujus meminimus, asserunt) eam quæ gravissima putabatur observarent, non sine magna ratione usurpatum videatur verbum quod utramque comprehenderet. Nam quamvis βαπτίζεσθαι ei revera quæ immersione sit, præcipuè competat, non tamen de ea solum, vel necessariò, dici, patere arbitror ex illo quod occurrit Lucæ xi. 38. Phariseus autem videns admiratus est, ὅτι ἔ πρῶτον ἐβαπτίσθη πρὸ τῆ ἀδείας, eum non prius ablutum fuisse ante prandium. Ad quæ verba annotat Grotius ἐβαπτίσθη idem esse ac ἐνίψατο τὰς χεῖρας. Optimè, licet rei quam reddit, rationem haud satis Judæorum disciplinæ congruam esse ex iis quæ superius in medium adduximus liquet. Mallem ergò Rev. Bezae verbis dicere, τὸ βαπτίζεσθαι idem hic declarat atque τὸ λῦεσθαι καὶ χερνίπτειν; modo ita interpretari liceat, ut eo innuatur manus vel merfatione, vel aquæ affusione purgare. Cum utrovis modo id præstare liceret, quod tam hunc quam illum comprehenderet, adhibitum videtur vocabulum. Neque enim si vel solum aquâ affusâ lavasset Christus, fuisset quod admiraretur Phariseus, ne ipsi quidem Pharisei plus præstabant. Nec si totum corpus merfasset, magis idoneum hoc ad prandium commune sumendum reddidisset. Neque tamen hoc concessio, supervacaneum videtur quod ab Evangelista ponitur, qui prius, quid ante cibum sumendum ordinariè facere solerent, narraverat; hîc quid à foro venientes facerent, edicit. Emphasis enim in verbis ἀπ' ἀγοῆς, magis quam in verbi νίψωνται in βαπτίσωνται mutatione latere videtur. Cujus vim ut percipiamus, observanda est & alia adhuc Magistrorum regula, quam his verbis nobis ob oculos ponit Maimonides, tractat. Beracoth, cap. vi. Quòd si animum suum alio averterit opus est ut manus suas lavet, quoties lotione opus fuerit. Evangelista facta fuerit. Nisi πυγμῇ lotis edere nequaquam illis licebat: at hoc ut quis vel semel, idque manè, faceret, si domi se contineret, & ab immunditia manibus suis caveret ad totum diem sufficeret. Quod si in forum prodiret, aliisque se negotiis immisceret, opus erat ut eas denuo ablueret, quò cibo capiendò idoneus esset. Ratio manifesta est. Manus quis nescit esse עסקניות negotiosas? quis, cui alia peragenda sunt negotia, perpetuò eâ quam requirunt diligentia, ipsas observare poterit; ibi præsertim ubi alia forsan sponte, alia casu contrectanda essent, quæ priorem earum ablutionem irritam redderent? Multa enim erant, & ubique obvia quæ manus contaminarent, à quibus etiam vel domi manentibus, si quid inter lotionem & esum moræ intercederet, cavere vix possent. Si vel cruri, vel femori, aliive cuilibet corporis sui parti, quæ regi solet, ^bmanum admovisset, vel caput sibi scalpisset, lotio illa repetenda erat. Obiter notare liceat, inter ea quæ manus polluerent numerari legis etiam Sacræ volumina, modo אשורית Ashurith exarata fuerint (i. e. literis quas Assyriacas vocant illi, nos jam vulgo Hebraicas) non autem si עברית Ebrith, seu Hebraicè [i. e. characteribus, quos Samaritanos appellamus, quos olim annotat cum aliis *R. Nescio tamen an ab ea quâ, quò cibo capiendò idonei essent, se pararent lotionem, ἡμετεβλαψίται quos vocant, appellationem istam meruerint; ἡμετεβλαψίτης ^menim, si vim vocis capio, propriè Hebræorum, טבול יום, exprimit, quod eo die lotum denotat: qui scil. patre (ut loquuntur) pollutionis aliquo pollutus se mersare deberet, nec nisi post occasum solis, Terumam vel sacrum aliquod contrectare, ex lege poterat. Si qui quotidie sæpius πρὸς ἀγγέλων lavando nomen illud commeriti sint, nec hoc ipsos ad cibum quâvis diei parte idoneos reddidisse, ex instituto majorum, aut idem ab aliis præstari debuisse, ex vi vocis probari posse arbitror.

Ignoscet, spero, Lector, quod in his describendis, & traditionum quæ apud Judeos extant vestigiis eruendis, prolixior fuerim, ubi perpenderit viris magnis, quod ad eorum partem tantum animum adverterint, erroris (licet in re levioris momenti) causam fuisse, neque sibi, nisi expensis cæteris, liberum fore de discrepantibus interpretum sententiis judicare, aut facilè à cujus partibus veritas stet dignoscere. Porro ex prædictis (ut obiter notare liceat) de usu vocis βαπτίζεσθαι hæc duo fiunt perspicua, primò, haud necessariò eam, cum vel ad graviorem lotionis gradum Tebilah exprimendum adhibeatur, totius corporis in aquam immersionem indicare; cum de eo qui vel manus duntaxat intinxerit ex frequenti traditionis & disciplinæ Judaicæ usu dicatur. Secundò, eandem aliquando de leviori illo, qui aquæ affusione peragitur, usurpari & utrique indifferenter competere.

Ea ergo omnia quæ hîc ab Evangelista recensentur, in eorum quæ comuni כליים, seu vasorum appellatione apud Magistros comprehenduntur, numero esse videmus, ob quorum lotionem, non quâ à sordibus, si quas contraxerant, purgarentur, & quæ rusticitati contraria est, sed superstitionis illam, quâ pollutioni imaginariæ, ritibus hominum ingenio confictis, cultus Deo grati & sanctimonix, quam interim corde minime fovebant, prætextu, occurrere se putabant, à Christo reprehendi palam est. Superstitionis istius passim occurrunt vestigia, tum ubi de vasis privatim, tum ubi de pollutionis & purgationis legibus ac ritibus agunt. Inter ea forsân censendum, quod in more fuisse dicunt, ut post festa, vasa quæ in Sanctuario essent omnia merfatione abluerent, כפני שנגעו בהן עמי הארץ, ^x quod ea tetigisset vulgus: quodque vas aliquod quod assereret è vulgò quis ab aliis immunditiæ generibus immune esse, idque ita se habere ipsi crederent, nihilominus, מטבילין אותו משום טומאת עה, ^y abluerent ob immunditiam Am haaretz, populi terræ, seu plebei: ^z nec non quod si quis vas aliquod vel apud plebeium quempiam vel artificem, etiam quem Terumam rite edere nosset, deponeret, non tamen eo uteretur, nisi rei a Gonorrhaici calcatione pollutæ ritu prius purgato; ut & si vel duntaxat coram Idiotâ idem poneret, eique ejus servandi curam mandaret: quodque si talem quempiam in domo sua ad ipsam custodiendam relinqueret, אפילו היה כפורת או כרות ידים ורגלים הכל טמא, etiamsi interim vel vinctum, vel manibus truncatum, adeo ut nihil quæ ibi essent vasorum contrectare possit; universam suppellectilem, ut immundam, abluere deberet; & quod si doctus aliquis plebeio lectum ad dormiendum commodatò daret, ^b in quo intra ipsius docti ædes decumberet, tum lectus, tum omnia intra spatium quo plebeius iste manum extendens pertingere posset, immunda censerentur; ^c quodque si in eodem atrio cum plebeio degeret, quæcunque in atrio relinquerentur vasa ei legi obnoxia fierent: quibus id genus alia, quæ in eorum scriptis quamplurima occurrunt, qui addiderit, facile

Quos tamen, quamvis superstitionis nimix ac religionis circa exteriora inaniter occupatæ indicia manifesta, est quod obtendant Judæi, fuisse inter instituta & decreta ista, quæ statuerunt Majores, ut essent סיני לתורה, Sepe legi (ut loquuntur) quæque ירחיקו האדם מן העבירות, Homines ab ejusdem violatione longius abducerent, & ne illicita patrarent, etiam à licitis cohibendo, caverent. At erant alia ab iisdem traditione accepta, nec minori religione observata, quæ mandata legis gravissima plane irrita facerent. Tale illud cujus vv. 9, 10, 11 & 12, mentionem subjungit, justaque indignatione ipsis exprobrat Christus: honoris nempe, qui non tacito tantum naturæ, sed expresso Dei mandato, parentibus debebatur, vi traditionis ipsis denegati. Et dicebat illis, Bene irritum facitis præceptum Dei, ut traditionem vestram servetis. Moyses enim dixit, Honora patrem tuum, & matrem tuam; & Qui maledixerit patri vel matri morte moriatur. Vos autem dicitis, Εάν εἴπῃ ἀνδρῶν τῷ πατρὶ ἢ τῇ μητρὶ κορβάν (ὃ ἐστὶ, δωρεὸν) ὃ εάν εἴς ἐμὲ ὠφεληθῇς. Si dixerit homo patri suo aut matri, Corban (quod est donum) quodcunque ex me tibi profuerit [Beza, quo à me juvari possis.] Et ultra non dimittitis eum quicquam facere patri suo aut matri. Verba hæc cum prioribus hoc commune habent, quod eorum neutra nisi consultis Judæorum traditionibus facile intelligi possint. Secundo, חוקים Decreta, è mandatis, scil. ea quorum ratio nos fugit. Tertiò, משפטים Judaica, ea nempe quæ ut æqui ac justi inter homines observandi norma essent, tradita sunt. Est illud de quo hîc agitur, ex horum ^e Misphatim numero, non Deo magis, quam ratione, ipsaque (ut diximus) Naturâ dictantibus, neutiquam violandum: quo (quantum ad præsens institutum faciat) observare licet, ex Magistrorum sententia, præcipi liberis ut Parentes foveant, alant, vestiant, eorumque, quibus possint modis, inopiam sublevent. Quæ tamen omnia perversæ traditionis effato illis denegantur, dum vetatur qui vel iracundiæ, vel avaritiæ, vel impii cujuspiam affectus impetu abreptus voto se temerè obstrinxerit, ne Parentes ullâ ex re quæ penes ipsum sit commodum percipiant, aliquod ipsis pietatis officium præstare. Sunt enim verba ista, Κορβαν ὁ ἐάν ἐξ ἐμοῦ ὠφεληθῇ, nihil aliud quam solennis voti apud Judæos formula, quam verbis ex eorum disciplinâ desumptis sic efferre liceat, קרבן כל מה שתהנה, Corban esto omne ex quo à me commodum percipere possis; Tam tibi vetitum scil. atque illicitum aliquâ ex re quæ penes me est, utilitatem capere, ac cuiquam aliquid Corban, seu muneris, nomine Deo consecratum, in usus suos convertere.

כנוי (ut loquuntur) vicaria seu Synonyma est) statuatur, perinde se habet, nec multum refert שאני an שאני, cum in diversis exemplaribus ^h promiscuè occurrant, legatur; eodem res recidit. At in reliquis explicandis non possumus Doctissimo Viro assentiri, nam quod ille, נהנה לך, tibi utilis sim, reddi vult; è contrario sonare videtur, ex rebus tuis utilitatem capiam: patet hoc è perpetuo Misnæ per totum illum de votis tractatum usu, & uno vel altero exemplo allato extra dubium ponetur. Ejusmodi est quod tractatus istius, cap. iii. §. 11. occurrit, ubi si quis hæc verba protulerit, קונם שאני נהנה לישראל, Konam [vel Korban] quod non sim Nebeneh Le Israel, ipsi incumbere statuunt ut sit, לוקח בפחות ומוכר ביותר, seu caro emat & vili vendat, sin è contra, קונם שישראל לוקח בפחות ומוכר ביותר אם שומעין לי, Corban [sit] quo Israel Nebenin li, tum לוקח בפחות ומוכר ביותר אם שומעין לי, ut vili emat, & caro vendat, si ipsi auscultare velint: hinc igitur manifestum est Nebeneh Le Israel, reddendum esse, utilitatem cepero ex Israele, seu Israelitis, & שישראל נהנין לי, quo Israelitæ à me [seu rebus meis] juvari possunt; non ex mente Capelli, si utilis fuero Israelitis, & quo Israelitæ mihi prodesse poterunt. Nam qui caro emit, & vili vendit, aliorum magis commodum quam suum respicit, & è contra, qui vili emere cupit, caro autem vendere, si hoc sibi emptor suaderi patiatur, suæ magis quam alterius utilitati consulit. ^l ergò in his loquendi formulis idem valet ac ב, vel מן, ac proinde à *R. Eandemque in cæteris, quæ passim ibi occurrunt parili formâ conceptis votis, particulæ istius vim esse patet. se nulli hominum utilem futuram, sed à nullo utilitatem captaturam. Quare si hanc formulam ad Evangelistæ verba aptare velimus, dicendum non erit, קרבן לך שאתה נהנה; esset enim illud Corban esto illud quo à te juvari possem, & qui ita vovisset, fuisset אסור בהם, voto obstrictus, ne aliquid à parentibus commodi captaret. Sed mutatâ personâ, קרבן שאתה נהנה לי (quæ ipsissima verba, nisi quod pro קרבן est ejus vicarium קונם, ejusdem tract. cap. viii. §. 7. occurrunt) Corban esto, quod tu à me juvari possis, quo pacto essent parentes (vel quoscunque allocutus esset) אסורין או בהנייתו, ^k omnium quæ ab ipso expectare poterant officiorum spe exclusi; atque hæc certè formula iis quæ jam in textu Mishnico reperiuntur congruentior est. Alteram tamen illam, quâ cum מן construatur verbum (quam adhibuit etiam Doctissimus Vir Joh. Cochius) quod Servatoris verba magis κατὰ πρόδρας exprimere videatur, apposuimus: nihil interim est in sensu discrepantiæ, & judicio suo utatur lector. Sed à diverticulo in viam redeundum.]

Si cui impium hoc verbum ἑρατὸν ὀδόντων temerè fugisset, ut solennis voti vinculo obstrictum, non sinebant, nisi eo ab ipsis prius solutum, illi cui ex se utilitate capiendâ interdixerat, quocunque prætextu benefacere, scil. ne voti violati reus fieret; non quod hoc pacto aliquam facultatem suarum partem Deo, vel absolutè, vel sub conditione consecraret, aut pridem consecratam indicaret, quæ tamen opinio, ex interpretibus melioris notæ non paucos in errorem (si magnorum virorum pace dicere liceat) induxit, & locum per se satis clarum obscurum reddidit. Contrarium planè docent Hebræorum (ad quæ in genuino hujus loci sensu eruendo recurrendum ipsi fatentur) scripta. Res exemplo, ex ipso ¹ Talmudis textu petito, clarius fiet. Impio cuidam Beth-Horonitæ erat pater, מורד הימנו הנאה, interdictus omni ex ejus rebus utilitate capiendâ. Ille cum ad convivium nuptiale, quod filio suo instruxerat, patrem invitatum cuperet, nec tamen voto se penitus solvi, hunc excoGITAVIT dolum, ut ad amicum quendam triclinii & cœnæ jus à se transferret tantisper dum veniret Pater, atque unâ cum illis cœnaret; quod factu prorsus illicitum statuunt, nisi bonâ fide res istas amico contulisset, nullâ Patris, cui nullo modo prodesse tenebatur, invitandi conditione expressâ. Hinc interim liquet, ipsum facultates suas Deo neutiquam voto isto consecrâsse, cum eas alii dono dare potuerit, quod in easdem jus, si quid patri ex illis subministrasset, nequaquam perdidisset, sed voti solummodo violati reus factus fuisset. Nihil ergò aliud valet hac in loquendi formâ Corban, vel δῶρον, quam אסור, i. vetitum prorsus, nefas atque illicitum. Esto scil. אסור בכרבן, Non minus vetitum quam Corban, attingere. Nihil enim referre tradunt in his votis (quæ אסור Esar interdicti vocant) utrum ea simpliciter per vocem אסור Asur, aut ejusmodi aliam, illicitum denotantem efferrentur, sive ita ut quod aliàs licitum, rei cuiuspiam ab usu communi semotæ assimilaretur, hac solum lege ut ejusmodi esset res ea quam & licite consecrare, eademque nondum consecratâ liberè uti posset; veluti pecus quæpiam munda, quam Deo in oblationem voto הקדש Hekdesb (quo nomine alteram votorum speciem appellant) seu Sanctionis, consecrandi potestatem haberet; cum rei ex instituto legis prorsus vetitæ (carnis, puta, porcinæ aut animalis cujuspiam immundi) mentio, ^m voti nuncupandi formam non ingrederetur. Nam si diceret quis, Sit hoc mihi caro porcina, vel tam illicitum ac carne porcina vesci, nullo tenebatur voto; sin autem, Sit hoc mihi Corban, munus vel holocaustum, quæ è rebus erant ante dedicationem licitis, rei quam his assimilata voluit, potestate se in posterum exuebat, ipsamque eo respectu, in eundem cum Corban, quod in usus privatos convertere nefas erat, statum redigebat. Hæc vocis Corban & similium in votis concipiendis vis & ratio. En igitur mandato Dei, traditionem ipsorum ex Diametro oppositam! Pater, ad inopiam lapsus, filii opem exposcit. Respondit filius (δραψὲν τὴν ἀγριότητα πιστεύμεν τῶν ἡδῶν, ut loquitur Philo) voto se impediri quo minus hoc præster. Provocat pater ad mandatum Dei promissis & minis undique munitum, quo sibi in filii bona id juris concessum quo à nemine mortalium spoliari debeat. Opponit filius traditionem sapientum (ad quorum verba magis quam ad verba legis attendendum) quâ ipsi votum suum, vel hujus vel aliûs cujusvis mandati neglectu ac contemptu, præstandum docent, ideoque sedulo cavere jubent, ne ad patrem aliquid

Idem ex methodo etiam qua in votis relaxandis utebantur perspicuum fit. Ne ad alia divagemur exempla. Si quis voto, quo caverat ne quid unquam ab ipso boni acciperent parentes, solvi cuperet, ac viam quo id fieri posset sibi monstrari, ^{possent quos eum in finem adierat, aliud ipsi ostium, ut loquuntur, aperire,} אין פותחין בכבוד אביו, ואמו, ab honore patris & matris non aperiunt (uno Eliezere contradicente) i. e. non licet honoris ipsis debiti mentione injecta ansam illi pœnitentiæ ac remissionis petendæ suggerere [ut volunt, ne falso se illo moveri dicat, cum nemo tam perfrixtæ frontis sit, ut palam profiteri velit se nullo illos honore prosequi velle] eandemque ob causam, & à portis hisce, seu votorum solvendorum locis

[in quibus comminiscendis ac pœnitentia voti ducto, vel duci se cupienti, suggerendis non minima cernebatur Sapientis peritia] Dei etiam & Præceptoris honorem excludunt. Ita (quicquid prætendi possit) eorum honos qui nullo voto temerari legitimè posset, ne votum illegitimè conceptum, ideoque naturâ suâ irritum, appareret, atque ita sapientum & traditionis honos una rueret, loco cedere cogitur, nec in rationem venire permittitur, & quicquid sit, non in parentum, sed filii qui quod ipsi jam molestum, mutato animo, videtur, voverat, gratiam fit, idque ita ut potestatem mandato jam obsequendi, non ipsi mandato, sed traditioni à Magistris eidem prælatæ, debeat. Confirmatur idem alio quod apud ipsos occurrit exemplo.  appellatur Oblatio libaminum, est simila oleo perfusa, libamina autem vinum quod

VISUM est mihi huic etiam tractatui quædam præmittere, sicut in illo de sacrificiis feci. Dico ergo, Menachoth, oblationes, vel munera, partitione primariâ bifariam distribui, viz. in oblationem, quæ una cum sacrificio igne consumitur, estque ipsi consequens (eam scil. quæ appellatur oblatio libaminum, quæ sacrificio isti necessario adjungenda est) & oblationem quæ seorsim offertur; nec est oblatio libaminum. Oblatio autem libaminum comprehendit tam eam quæ totius cœtus, quam eam quæ privati cujuspiam est. Siquidem jam ostendimus in præfatione ad tractatum de sacrificiis, genera sacrificiorum omnia, tam cœtus quam privatorum, quatuor esse, Holocaustum, Sacrificium pro peccato, Sacrificium ob delictum, & Pacificorum. Atque hæc quatuor genera, è quinque animalium generibus desumuntur, viz. ovibus, bobus, capris, turturibus, columbis, iis quas ibi descripsimus conditionibus. Jam ergo dico ad sacrificium quod è volucribus fuerit, haud requiri oblationem libaminum ullo prorsus modo. Textus Sifri est, Potestne fieri ut holocaustum è volucribus requirat libamina? dicere vult, è bobus aut ex ovibus: qui textus est in sectione Nefacim. Eodem modo, cum sacrificio pro peccato, aut ob delictum, non necesse est ut adducatur oblatio libaminum, eò quod dicit in sectione de libaminibus, Ut solvatis votum, aut sponte vestra, aut in solennitatibus vestris. Et cum dicunt, quicquid adducitur ex voto aut oblatione spontanea, requirit libamina, excipiunt sacrificia pro peccato, & delicto, quæ non offeruntur vi voti aut oblationis spontaneæ. Eandemque prorsus ob rationem neque cum primogenito, neque decimis bestiarum, neque paschatè requiruntur libamina, quoniam horum nihil vel ob votum vel ut spontaneum affertur. Ex his omnibus quæ præmissa sunt patet, ad quodlibet è pecoribus holocaustum aut sacrificium pacificum requiri libamina, sive privati alicujus sive totius cœtus oblationes fuerint, at ad sacrificium pro peccato aut delicto, non requiri, excepto tantum sacrificio pro peccato aut delicto leprosi, quemadmodum jam ostensuri sumus. Illud autem quod appellatur Oblatio libaminum, est simila oleo perfusa, libamina autem vinum quod una cum holocausto aut etiam pacificis offertur; hoc est quod dicit, Et vinum in libamen. Hæc omnia, viz. similam [cum oleo] commistam, & vinum, appellant libamina, per synecdochen, cum nec vinum sine simila requiratur, nec simila sine vino, at simul adhibita sint ex appendicibus oblationum, viz. holocausti & pacificorum, corum, quemadmodum ostendimus. Quantitas autem similæ & vini, quæ afferri debet cum holocausto, eadem est quæ & cum pacificis offertur. Discrepat autem secundum discrepantiam speciei ex qua offertur oblatio, & discrepantiam ætatis ejus quod offertur; adeo ut sit triplex quantitatis [differentia;] primo cum fuerit oblatio è genere caprino (perinde autem est si major si minor fuerit [pecus]), aut è parvis generis ovini, viz. agnus anniculus, tum oblatio libaminum, quæ ad harum unamquamque requiritur, si plures si pauciores fuerint, decima similæ, perfusa quartâ parte Hin olei, cum vini ad libamen quarta parte Hin, si fuerit oblatio holocaustum, siue pacificorum; quod si holocaustum illud vel sacrificium pacificorum, fuerit ovis grandior, quæ Ail siue aries audit, tum oblatio ad ipsum requisita constat duabus decimis [similæ] perfusæ tertiâ parte Hin olei, vinique ad libamen tertiâ parte Hin: atque hæc est secunda quantitas oblationum libaminum. Tertia est, ut cum fuerint holocaustum aut pacifica è genere bubulo (siue grandior siue minor fuerit bos, perinde est) sit [Minchab] oblatio ad quodlibet eorum requisita tres decimæ (partes Ephæ) perfusæ dimidio Hin olei, cum vini ad libamen dimidio Hin, quæ quantitates duplicantur secundum numerum oblationum particularium, siue privati alicujus fuerint, siue totius cœtus. Dixit Dominus⁴, Secundum numerum quem facietis, ita facietis singulis secundum numerum eorum. Neque est quod ab hac [regula] excipatur, neque ei addunt vel detrahunt, excepto agno illo qui offertur die festo Azymorum secundo, die quo elevatur manipulus qui est Holocaustum, uti diximus, de quo expresse dicit scriptura, fore [Minchab] oblationem ipsius duas decimas, perfusas tertiâ parte Hin olei, & libamina ad ipsum requisita, quartam Hin vini, sicut & agni cujuslibet. Exceptâ etiam leprosi oblatione pro peccato, & delicto, quorum cum utroque [offertur] decima pars Ephæ. Est enim oblatio leprosi quemadmodum explicabimus, duo agni masculi, cum scemellâ unâ, quæ sunt oblatio pro peccato, holocaustum, & oblatio pro delicto, de quorum Minchab dixit, & tres decimæ, &c. Atque hæc est Minchab libaminum, quæ comburitur una cum oblatione, viz. vel cum integro holocausto aut cum partibus pacificorum. Atque hæc sunt libamina quæ requiruntur ad omnes oblationes, quorum mentionem fecimus, cap. v. Sbekalim. Hæc autem ad eadem plenius describenda reversi sumus. Atque hæc una est Mincharum [oblationum] distinctio: Divisio secunda est, earum quæ non sunt sacrificii alicujus appendices, suntque duarum specierum, vel Oblatio privati, vel Oblatio cœtus. Oblationes cœtus tres sunt; quarum una est Omer [Manipulus] elevationis; qui offerebatur feriâ secundâ Paschatis, cujus ritus omnes hoc tractatu descridescribuntur; ejus autem pugillus in altari offerebatur; reliquum comedentibus Sacerdotibus. Secunda est duorum panum, qui die convocationis offerebantur, cujus meminimus, cap. i: Zebachim. De ea dixit Dominus: Ex habitaculis vestris offeretis panem elevationis: eandemque oblationem Minchab nominavit, dicens, Cum offeretis Minchab novam Domino in hebdomadibus vestris. Tertia est, Panes propositionis, quos comedebant sacerdotes singulis diebus Sabbati, qui erant duodecim placentæ, quarum singulæ constabant duabus decimis partibus Ephæ: atque hæ tres repellunt immunditiam; nec tamen comeduntur, si immundæ adducantur, quemadmodum cap. vii. Pesachim ostensum est. Sola autem oblatio manipuli repellit Sabbatum, sicut hoc tractatu declarabitur. Porro oblatio privati in quinque species distinguitur. Prima est, cum ea ipsi offerenda sit ob peccatum aliquod à se commissum. Secunda, cum ob rem aliquam, quam obtinere cupiat. Tertia, cum adducenda ipsi sit cum certo aliquo sacrificio, quocum offerenda decernitur, quæ dum Minchab appellatur, tralatitia locutio est, uti ostensuri sumus. Quarta, ea quæ sacerdoti summo privatim offerenda incumbibat, aut etiam privato semel, quemadmodum ostensuri sumus. Quinta, cum quis eam sponte adducit, sibi que offerendam imponit. Harum specierum prima (offerenda est) cum quis per errorem deliquerit in immunditie Sanctuarii aut rerum ejus sanctarum, aut in juramento quod ore protulerit, aut cum pejeraverit in juramento ad testimonium confirmandum, siue ex ignorantia, siue ex superbia. Si quis enim aliquo quatuor peccatorum transgressus fuerit, sacrificium offerre tenetur, quemadmodum initio sermonis nostri ad tractatum Zebachim diximus: cui offerendo si non sit, offerat decimam partem Ephæ è similâ oleo non perfusâ, nec thure ipsi imposito; atque hoc appellatur Minchath Chote, oblatio peccantis; appellavit autem Deus ipsam Chataat, Oblationem pro peccato, statuitque ut de eo pugillus offeratur, reliquum comedentibus sacerdotibus. Species secunda est, quam offerre debuit mulier declinans [adulterii suspecta] quæ à cæteris oblationibus quibusvis eo distincta est, quod sit è farina hordeacea, estque etiam ea absque oleo aut thure, & offerendus ex ipso super altari pugillus, reliquum comedentibus sacerdotibus, uti cap. ii. tract. Sotah ostendimus; appellaturque Minchath Zelotypiæ, quod nomen ipsi imposuit textus Biblicus. Species tertia est, cum ipsam quis cum sacrificio aliquo definito offerre debeat, e. g. Si quis se ad sacrificium Eucharisticum offerendum obliget, vel Naziræatum voverit, ac completi ipsi fuerint dies Naziræatus. Jam enim tibi indicavi, cap. v. Zebachim, offerri cum sacrificio Eucharistico diversas panis species, & similiter cum ariete à Naziræo (offerendo.) Has autem species, quæ unâ cum sacrificio Eucharistico & ariete Naziræi offeruntur, nequaquam appellavit

Scriptura nomine Minchab [oblationis] neque è numero oblationum censentur, cujus rei demonstratio est, quòd sacerdos, cum sacrificium Eucharisticum aut arietem Naziræi offerret, panem una cum illis oblatum comederet, æquè ac Israelitæ. Quòd si Minchab esset, comburere ipsum oporteret, sicut in scriptura dicitur, Omnis autem Minchah sacerdotis igne cremabitur, non comedetur. Sapientes autem ipsas Minchab nominarunt per Metalepsin, quare & inquirat tractatus iste de ratione panis istius conficiendi, quomodo faciendus sit, & quænam ejus mensura. Species quarta, ea est quæ vocatur Chabite, oblationes in sartagine frixæ, Sacerdotis summi; estque decima pars Ephæ, cujus dimidium offertur unâ cum sacrificio jugi matutino, dimidium cum sacrificio jugi, quod inter duas vespèras offertur, totaque comburitur. De ea dicit Dominus, Statutum perpetuum Domino, tota suffietur. Atque hæc oblatio unicuique Sacerdoti summo quotidie offerenda incumbit, eademque Oblatio sacerdotis uncti appellatur, ideo quod de ea dicit, Quam offeret Domino eo die quo unctus fuerit. Ea autem quæ cuilibet sacerdoti semel offerenda est, eo se habet, quem descripturus sum, modo, nempe quòd sacerdoti, ubi ad ætatem pervenerit, ac ministerium [illud] suscipere velit, hoc primum omnium faciendum sit, ut decimam [partem Ephæ] similæ afferens ipsam in Mincham [oblationem] offerat, eamque totam adoleat, cum sit Minchab sacerdotis, quemadmodum præmissum est; atque hoc innuitur dicto ipsius, Hæc oblatio est Abironis & filiorum ipsius, quam offerent Domino, die quo ungetur, Decima pars Ephæ: Hoc enim versu & munus Sacerdotis summi, quod quotidie offerebat, & munus cujuslibet Sacerdotis [ipsi offerendum] cum primo ministerium in se suscipit, comprehendit. Scias autem quod etsi Sacerdos, ex quo mandatis præstandis obnoxius est, ministerio idoneus sit, non permetterent tamen fratres ipsius sacerdotes, ipsum ministerio fungi, donec annorum esset viginti. Species quinta, quam quis sponte præstat, eamque sibi imponit, vocaturque Minchath Nedebab [munus voluntarium] quemadmodum ostendetur. Estque generis quintuplicis; vel enim offertur simila oleo perfusa, atque hoc appellatur Munus similagineum; vel opus coctum clibano, quod & duarum est specierum, vel è placentis, vel laganis; [vel Munus in craticula; vel Munus in sartagine, paratum.] Quæ omnia exerta sunt legis verba; & quamcunque harum specierum sibi imposuerit, ea ipsi offerenda incumbit, nec non quamcunque mensuram; modo decimâ [parte Ephæ] minor non fuerit, uti ostendetur. Quinque autem generibus istis, thure & oleo opus est, suntque è simila cujus pugillus offerendus est, reliquum comedendum.

Quæ autem supersunt de oblationibus post oblatum pugillum, appellantur Reliquiæ oblationum, quas comedunt sacerdotes, nisi munus sacerdotis fuerit; tum

By EDWARD COCK, M.D.

Canon of Christ Church, and Rector of the Church of St. Andrew, in the City of Oxford.

TO THE

Right Reverend FATHER in GOD

Lord Bishop of SARUM.

My LORD,

THE concurrence of several reasons, (each of which were sufficient) have moved me to offer to your gracious acceptance this essay. First, My duty to your Lordship as my Diocesan, who may justly challenge from me some account of my employments. Secondly, That gratitude which obligeth me to acknowledge your Lordship's many favours extended to me and mine. And, thirdly, the need of patronage and protection that this Work hath, in regard that there is in it much stress laid on such part of Learning, (the Oriental I mean,) which of late, if not all along, hath had that unhappiness, as to be scarce able to keep itself, not only from neglect, but contempt, as needless; at least of no great use or necessity. In some places abroad where it formerly found great encouragement, (if we may believe general complaints,) it hath now little regard, although I doubt not but that it will in good time recover its honour. That it may not be so among us at home, it must owe to the favour and countenance of men excelling as in authority and dignity, so in learning and judgment; in which rank none being more eminent, so none will be more ready to afford it than your Lordship, who have your self always been a lover of those Studies, and by long experience know and have made known the usefulness of them. I shall not here trouble your Lordship with giving an account of what is in these Annotations done, that being the proper work of the Preface. I shall only add, that besides the former motives, I have a strong encouragement to make this address to your Lordship from an assured confidence, that whatsoever it be that I bring, being the best that I have at present, and proceeding from those intentions with which it is offered, it shall by your Lordship be favouredly accepted from the hands of him who is,

My LORD,

Your LORDSHIP'S Most Humble Servant,

THE main thing in these Annotations endeavoured, is to settle the genuine and literal meaning of the Text. Seeing it is often very differently rendred by Interpreters, according to their different judgments, from what we read in our English Bibles; and that in them also we have various readings in the Margin, I have laboured, as far as I could, to find out the truth among them, by examining such as I have occasion to take notice of, by the Original Hebrew, which is the standing rule which was at first by the goodness of God for such delivered to us by the prophets and holy men divinely inspired, and hath ever since, by his wonderful providence, been preserved uncorrupt and sincere.

Of any that shall question it, we may ask when it was corrupted, whether before Christ's time or since? If it be said before, and as an argument alledged for it, that there is a translation of greater antiquity than his time, viz. in Greek, which so much differs from the Hebrew copies which we now have, as to shew that in the copy which the authors thereof had, many things were read otherwise than in these, we are not to be moved by it, except three things be first made evident, 1. That the copy which they had was a truer copy than any reserved among the Jews which might be derived to us from them. 2. That those Interpreters strictly and precisely followed the letter of their copy, and did not give themselves liberty of expressing what they conceived to be the sense and meaning, either more largely or in different words, or had not some notions of the words which are not now so usually known. 3. That the copies which we have of their version be genuine and uncorrupted, as they proceeded from them, without mixture or alteration. Which things have not yet been sufficiently proved, and I suppose cannot be.

Again, If it had been before Christ's time corrupted, it can scarce be doubted but we should have heard of it from him, who so often reprehending the Jews for their perverse interpretations of it by the glosses of their traditions, we cannot think but he would much more have reproved them if they had corrupted the text it self.

And after his time it is no way probable that it could be altered or corrupted by any concurring malice of the Jews, (as it must have been done by a general conspiracy for corrupting all the copies, or else would have been a vain attempt) seeing it cannot be doubted but that among so many thousands of them, of whom many were converted to Christ, and among them divers others (we may well suppose) like Apollos, mighty in the scriptures (Acts xviii. 24.) many had in their hands true copies of it, by which they would have discovered any forgery. And from them, that there were copies imparted to other Christians also we have reason to think, when we find that among them for many years after Christ the scriptures of the Old Testament were read in their churches in the Hebrew language: for that it was so among the Syrians we have from a learned ^a man of that nation, who in a book that he wrote in Arabick, concerning divers heads of the christian religion, speaking of their manner of reading the scriptures in the church, saith, كان في القديس تقرأ الكتب العبرية ومنع عن ذلك ما أفرير, i. e. In ancient time the books of the Old Testament were read in the Hebrew tongue, till St. Ephraim forbid it: which we cannot think was for any other reason, but because they looked on the Hebrew as more genuine and authentick than any translation, not that they had not then translations of the scripture in their own language, as we shall by and by shew to be more than probable.

For these and other reasons, even the care that the Jews themselves (as is by all known and confessed) always took of writing it exactly true, as that whereon their own preservation depended, we cannot on any probable grounds question the integrity thereof. Yea a learned ^b man, who is looked on to have laboured as much as any to question the integrity of the Hebrew text, doth confess that in Christ's time, and Jonathan's the paraphrast, the Hebrew books that they then had were the same that we now have. And what then have we farther to be solicitous about in this matter? for of those was then the book that our Saviour stood up to read in the synagogue, and expounded by the same Spirit which first dictated what was therein written, Luc. iv. 16, 17, &c. and the reading of which he justified by asking the lawyer, who would know what he might do to inherit eternal life, What is written in the law? how readest thou? Luc. x. 26. Those the scriptures, which he bad the Jews to search, as in which they thought to have eternal life, and as which testified of him, Jo. v. 39. and the same those of which he saith, that He came not to destroy but to fulfil them: and that till beaven and earth pass, one jot or tittle should not pass from them, till all were fulfilled, Mat. v. 17, 18. and which he so often cites and refers the Jews to, and the fulfilling of which he made the rule of what he did and suffered. Which his divine approbation of them, without questioning the copies they then had of them, may justly seem to us a testimony of the integrity of them at that time, of greater validity than any human testimony from any different reading reading in any translation, to make us question it. However these arguments may be eluded by such as will be contentious, yet they are such as may well sway with a sober mind, that neither before nor after Christ's time the Hebrew copies were corrupted, and so ought to be our undoubted rule.

^a Al Tactiti, c. 29.

The forecited author saith, that translations are to be examined by the original text, if any copy of it be uncorrupted, and not that by translations: and that is that therefore, which not doubting those copies that we have to be so, I have endeavoured in part to do, so far at least as may serve to justify, or to give account of, that translation of our own which we follow; (and deservedly, it being such and so agreeable to the original, as that we might well choose among others to follow it, were it not our own, and established by authority among us:) which could not well be done without comparing it with others also, and bringing all to the original Hebrew, as the test, as hitherto it hath had the honour to be esteemed, and will so still have, having on it that divine impress which will maintain its right and dignity against all that can be opposed.

For the end proposed it was oft necessary to look into the signification of the words in that tongue, and what several senses they are capable of, that it may accordingly appear which of such as by several interpreters are fastened on them, will be best agreeable to the place in which they occur, and according to the construction they are used in. For by the different understanding of them is that great variety which is amongst interpreters, of which account cannot be given, much less they be thought oftentimes reconcileable, or that all their different versions proceeded from one fountain, or at least one reading: but looking therein it will be made apparent that the variety proceeded not from any variety in their reading, but from the variety of significations of one word: among which some have, according to their different judgment, preferred one, some another, yet so as that all have thought themselves to follow the same original, and ought not presently to be condemned, as disagreeable to it. According to this respect, several places in the New Testament cited out of the Old, which according to the usual translations seem to differ from them, as there now read in the Old, will be found not to differ at all from them, according to another signification which the word, in which the difference is placed, is as capable of as that by modern translators usually given it, and by them that follow those translators looked on as having no other. As for example's sake. Where we find, Heb. viii. 9. And I regarded them not, saith the Lord, cited out of Jeremy xxxi. 32. where in ours and other translations read, Although I was an husband unto them, saith the Lord: a man would think that these proceeded not from the same reading of the Hebrew text, till enquiring into the word בעלתי Baalti in that language, he find that that hath both these significations to be an husband, and to despise, loath, or not have regard to; and so (to omit other examples) in that signal place in this prophecy of Micah, chap. v. 2. which being cited, Matt. xi. 6. Thou Bethlehem Ephrata art not the least among the princes of Judah, will seem to flow from another reading than what now is read in the prophet, Though thou be little among the thousands of Judah; till upon enquiry it be found that the word צער Tfair, used by the prophet doth signify as well great or illustrious, as little. Then will the difference appear to be from the interpreters taking, some the one signification, others the other: and that therefore these places might be rendred in the Old Testament to the same purpose, that they are in the New. One translation therefore is not presently to be condemned, because it differs from another, but both are to be tried by the original; and when they may both be found to agree to that, neither is rashly to be condemned, but with due deliberation and discretion, that to be followed which may give the most convenient meaning to the place; which may oft be so doubtful a case, as that a man, though of good judgment and a discerning spirit, may be put to a stand, and will not dare rashly to determine on either side.

This having been observed by our translators, they have with great modesty and ingenuity, we see, put various readings or rendrings in the margin of our bibles, as doubting which to prefer, and leaving it to the prudent reader which to choose; as if the one and the other were (as the Jews in such cases use to speak) both the words of the living God; both true and agreeable as well to the original words as to the analogy of faith. And such modesty is by all in interpreting the scriptures very imitable, and being observed would prevent many quarrels, in which the truth, by rashly contending for it, is lost, and such uncharitably censured, as forsaking the truth, which did heartily seek it, and perhaps did not err from it.

Now for these ends, viz. both of finding the one or several significations of some words, where there was any dubiousness or difficulty, and the convenientest meaning of them in the place, agreeable to the scope or context, I have made use of (according to my skill) the best helps as I could meet with, and those of several kinds. 1. Such are, the comparing of such places, as the word or expression that is to be explained, occurs in, elsewhere in the scripture. 2. The inspection of several of the most approved translations. 3. The use, either of such books as give the signification of single words, as, Dictionaries, &c. or else labour to give the meaning of them as joined with others, as, commentators and expositors. The translations that have been looked into are both ancient and modern; the more ancient, the Greek, (commonly called the Septuagint) and the Latin, (known by the name of the vulgar Latin) and the Syriack and the Arabick versions. The Greek and Latin have been so long known in all places in this western part of the world, and so much by many hath been said of them, that it will be needless to give any account of them: but the other, viz. the Syriack and Arabick, though well, and only, known in the eastern parts, so unknown among us, till the late noble editions of the Polyglot Bibles at Paris and London, that it may seem requisite to give some. That the Syriac had anciently a translation of the scripture into their language, is manifest, and such as may challenge priority of the Greek it self, if we may believe them. But for making the matter more clear, we may observe that they have two translations, the one done out of the Hebrew, the other out of the Greek. Gregorius Abul Pharajius in his History, (which was printed at Oxford in Arabick and Latin) thus tells us, that the Greek version made by the LXXII Elders in Ptolemeus Philadelphus's time, which was received not only by the Greeks, but by most sects of the Christians, yet was not followed by the Syrians, especially the more easterly ones: for that they had a translation which was called the Simple or plain version, because the translators did not in it so much labour for elegance of words, which was conformable to the copy of the Jews: but (saith he) the more western have two translations, that Simple one which was translated out of Hebrew into Syriack, after the coming of Christ, in the time of Addæus (or Thaddæus) the apostle; or as others affirm, in the time of Solomon the son of David, and Hiram: and another more florid made according to that of the LXXII out of Greek into Syriack, a long time after the incarnation of our Saviour. For better understanding what he saith, and the opinion of those of that nation, we may farther take notice of what an ancient bishop (Soaded, Bishop of Hadetha, cited by the learned Sionita in his preface to the edition of the Psalms in Syriack and Latin) says, that as to the translation of the sacred books it was thus, the Law, Joshua, Judges, Ruth, Samuel, David, (or the Psalms) the Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, Canticles, and Job, were done in the time of Solomon, at the request of Hiram King of Tyrus his friend. The other books of the Old and New Testament in the time of Abagar king of Syria, by the care of Thaddæus and other apostles. Their later version I suppose to have been made by Thomas Heracleensis: for so I find in a Syriack MS. (of which account is given in the preface to the second Epistle of St. Peter in Syriack, Greek and Latin, printed at Leiden, An. 1630.) a distinction made betwixt the translation which was made in ancient days, and the translation of Thomas Heracleensis. And so in the Old Testament in the MS. Syriack copy, is there prefixed to one version of the story of Susanna, that it was according to ܐܕܘܢ ܐܕܘܢ the translation of Heracleensis, (for there are two versions of that story in the copy, but neither of them may be supposed to belong to the ancient Simple version, as neither probably any of the Apocryphal books; before some of which (as the first book of Esdras) is put, That they were conformed to the tradition of the LXXII, and at the end of it, that it was not found in the Simple version, and so likewise before Tobit.) When this Th. Heracleensis lived I have not yet met with any certain narration, only I find him signalized in a Syrian calendar among their saints or holy men, by having his name among those, to whose memory the 26th day of Haziran, or June, is consecrated, which makes it probable that he is not of late standing; which will farther be confirmed, if he be the same (as I suppose he was) of whom Schultingius makes mention in his Bibliotheca Ecclesiastica, tom. 3. pag. 106. by the name of Thamās Harbalanus, giving an account of him out of a catalogue of missals made by Ignatius patriarch of Antioch, that he translated out of Greek into Chaldee (as he calls the Syriack) the missals of John the Evangelist and of Clement, about four hundred and seven years after Christ. But when the Syrians contend for the antiquity of their version, we see it is for that other more ancient. But besides what they say for themselves, wherein perhaps they may seem to go too high, we have not only from the Greek fathers, but from all our copies of the LXXII it self undoubted proofs of the very great antiquity of some Syriack version. In all the editions that we have of the LXXII, (except the Complutensian) as well that out of the very ancient copy in the King's library, as the rest from other copies expressed, we have at the end of Job these words, Οὗτ' ἐρμηνεύται ἐκ τῆς Συριακῆς Βίβλου, &c. he is interpreted out of a (or the) Syriack book, i. e. the Bible, (for out of no other book would they have taken words for authentick text.) Which shews that there was a Syriack book (or translation) ancients than any of them: and that it was so written in those ancients copies, out of which any of them were transcribed; they all of them, though in other things differing between themselves, agreeing in it. And this plainly gives us to look on the Syriack version as very ancient, which is that which at present we say, and withal seems a sufficient proof, that (as we above intimated) there was before St. Epbraim's time such a translation among the Syrians in their own tongue, which they might have used, if they had not thought the Hebrew more authentick, and as so, given that honour to it, as to use only it in their churches. If they had not then had any, his forbidding them to use the Hebrew had been a depriving them of any use of the scriptures of the Old Testament, which we suppose was not his mind to do, but only to cause them to be read in a more intelligible language, in which he is said to have written comments on it.

But although this be as much as may suffice to our present purpose, yet having fallen on the mention of this matter, it may perhaps not be amiss by the way, to endeavour to give farther some little account of it, which if any think not to be of much concernment, he may pass it over.

Whereas the last chapter of Job in the Hebrew text, and such translations as follow it, ends with the 17th verse, and these words, So Job died being old and full of days, in the Greek called the Septuagint, are added to the quantity of several verses more, and that so anciently that some of the Greek fathers have commented on them as authentick text. ^d Olympiodorus saith, that they were delivered as so from the apostles themselves; and Polychronius, that they were so accounted by the fathers. There is first added, It is written that he should rise again with those whom the Lord should raise: Then follows what we mentioned, He (or this man) is interpreted out of the Syriack book, dwelling (or that he dwelt) in the land of Auitis (or Uz) in the borders of Idumea and Arabia: and his name was Jobab, with other things concerning his wife and a son, and his genealogy, as that he was of the posterity of Esau, and the fifth from Abraham, and reigned in Edom after Balac, &c. as likewise concerning his friends that came to visit him; after which, in the copy printed according to that very ancient MS. in the King's library, is repeated again a briefer account of Job himself, having prefixed to it as before, He is interpreted out of the Syriack book, but in other copies, this is not found. What use to make of this we shall after see. And it is by diverse ancient and modern taken notice that Aquila and Symmachus, who translated the Old Testament out of Hebrew into Greek, concluded that Book as the Hebrew doth; but that Theodotion, who likewise so translated them, and lived about 180 years after Christ, concluded it as the Septuagint doth, with additions out of the Syriack version.

But here may be objected against what we would thence infer concerning the antiquity of that Syriack version; what is by some of the Greeks said, that by the Syriack, named in those additions to Job; is meant the Hebrew tongue; to that purpose makes what in an anonymous Greek author, (whose words were imparted to me by my reverend and most learned friend Dr. Thomas Marshall) prefixed in a MS. copy to Joannes Melala, is said, viz. that it was Origen's opinion that it is so. Of what credit that author is I know not, for it is not likely that Origen thought or should say so. In that commentary on Job, which goes under his name, it is said that that book was written first in Syriack, and then done into Hebrew, being polished and completed by Moses. If so, then the Syriack and Hebrew in his opinion were looked on as different. But that book is looked on as spurious, and the opinion a groundless conjecture. What Origen thought may easily be collected out of his epistle to Africanus, part of which is set forth before the text of Job, by the learned Patricius Junius, printed according to the MS. copy in the King's library, where he saith, that those words which follow in the Greek after the 17th verse of the last chapter are not found among the Hebrews, and therefore neither in Aquila, but in the LXXII and Theodotion. Had he thought that by Syriack, out of which it is expressly said they were taken, had been meant Hebrew, he could not have said they had been wanting in the Hebrew books. However, by others it is so said. For so Nobilius in his various readings to the Greek tells us; that the Greek scholiast saith that he calls the Hebrew dialect, Syriack, because of the affinity betwixt them, and endeavours to prove it. Of that Greek scholiast, I can give no account but from him. But in Olympiodorus in the Catena on Job, we have the same expressly affirmed, who having observed that Aquila and Symmachus end where the Hebrew doth, but Theodotion hath the same additions that the LXXII, then gives his opinion thus, The Hebrew dialect he calls in this place Syriack; then confirms it with those very loose and un-concluding arguments; because the Syriack language is of very high affinity with the Hebrew, having the same number of letters (viz. 22.) and then because Judea is comprehended under the name of Syria.

But though this be by him and others, who perhaps looked not much into those tongues, affirmed; we cannot be much moved by it. For besides that no such words are found in any Hebrew copy, which he himself confesseth, and so destroys what he would affirm, if Hebrew and Syriack be one, we cannot think it an opinion generally received by the fathers. Some of them certainly knew, that to say Syriack and Hebrew are different things, and would not confound them by calling one the other. Besides, what we have already said from Origen, St. Chrysostome (who living long at Antioch in Syria, could not but know what was meant by the Syriack language,) on the 48th Psalms, according to the Greek division, in one verse, cites both the Syriack and the Hebrew, and as distinct readings; and so Theodoret on Psalms cxv. and on Jonah iii. 4. to omit many other testimonies, several of which are found in the Greek scholiast, and Nobilius's notes thereon.

And whereas, as the same Nobilius observes, some say that by Syriack is meant Chaldee, that signifies nothing, for it will be no more than to say, by Syriack is meant Syriack: for these are at most but two dialects of one tongue, however it hath obtained that that which the Jews retained after their return from Babylon, where they learned it, and lost much of their own, and framed much to the rules of the Hebrew, be peculiarly called Chaldee, as any that would know more of it may see in the learned preface of Ludovicus de Dieu, to his Grammar of the oriental tongues. To this day divers of the Syrians call themselves Chaldeans, and their tongue Chaldee, and that which we call Chaldee the Jews call אַרַמִּי Arami, Syriack. And what then would, if this were granted, be thence concluded, but that either the book of Job was written in the Chaldee dialect, or else that there was in it a translation of that book in which those additions were read as authentick text when the Seventy translated it into Greek, and they followed its authority. Neither of which, I suppose, will be granted; for besides that, in the Chaldee paraphrast that we now have, no such additions are found, it is manifest that that is of much later date than Ptolemæus Philadelphus his time, and that there was any other in his time in that dialect, which is now lost, none can prove, nor will any Christians easily grant, although ^{some} Jews contend for it, and would have the Greek of the Seventy to have been translated out of that, and not out of any genuine Hebrew copy, which is too great a slur to be cast upon it. There is therefore nothing said except they mean it is the Hebrew which is called Syriack, and who should mean so? surely not the Seventy, who by all are said to have been Jews; they would not so far have profaned their holy tongue (as they all call it, by way of excellency to distinguish it from all others and ^{peculiarly} Syriack) as to call it so, nor taken for authentick text any thing that they had not found in it; no; nor Theodotion himself, so long after them, having that skill in Hebrew which he had, have confounded those names, nor any ancient Greek who knew so much of it as to able to translate it.

There was a time (as we have intimated) after the Jews return from Babylon, when their language had so much of Chaldee, or Syriack, mingled with it, as that it might have been as well called Syriack as Hebrew; yet even then was it rather called Hebrew than Syriack, as appears in the New Testament. But sure the ancient proper Hebrew, such as we now speak of, none could so call who had any insight in those tongues, except for some design; so that to say that by Syriack is meant Hebrew, must be the assertion of some Greeks, who were either ignorant of those languages, or else were unwilling to attribute too much to the Syriack, or give preference to it, above the Greek version, as ancienter than it. They might as well tell us that Jacob spake Syriack, when he called the heap Galeed as well as Laban, who called it Jegar Sabadutha. But if it be granted them, that by Syriack in those words in the Greek was meant Hebrew, how then will they unriddle how that which, according to them, was anciently a part of the text in the Hebrew, and thence as so, taken into the Greek, is now wanting in all the copies in that language, and was likewise omitted by Aquila and Symmachus, who undertook the translation of the whole that was looked on as authentick? they will not be able to give any rational account of this. But to us, who look on as meant by Syriack that language properly so called, it will be no difficulty. For if it be asked how it should come to pass that those additions should so anciently come into the Greek version, being not in the Hebrew, but said to be taken out of the Syriack book, the answer, I suppose, will be easy. Some anciently among the Syrians, (whose custom of inserting notes or Scholias in their copies may be perceived out of such as are taken notice of, in the various readings of the Syriack in the Polyglot Bibles, gathered by the learned Mr. Thorndike) had somewhere in his copy of the Syriack translation to the book of Job added for explication sake, according to what he had either by tradition, or out of some history then extant, received concerning the person of Job that brief account of him, not unlike to which, though not quite the same, there are found prefixed to it in two copies in that language, which were made use of in the edition of those Polyglot Bibles, two in something different terms, and one shorter than the other; as he that pleaseth, may see in the various readings of the Syriack in that book. This, those that copied out anciently, those versions of the Septuagint and Theodotion, (for it will be too much to say the authors of them themselves, especially of the first, if they were truly the Seventy, who commonly bear that name) finding in some such old Syriack copy, thought worth while to translate into Greek, and add in their own at the end. (Yea so, as in differing copies they found such account given in differing terms, to take notice thereof also, as appears by what is done in the ancient MS. of the King's library, as we have mentioned.) Which other transcribers after continued, till what was so added was in time taken in as part of the genuine text; with inanimadvertency enough, seeing the appendix, as is well noted in the various lections to the Frankfort Greek edition, doth not redolere stilum Canonis, favour of, or any way agree with, the stile of the canonical text. And this being observed, the meaning of those words, He (i. e. Job, his person, not the book, as the author of the comment, called Origen's, seems to think) is interpreted, will be, account is given of him in the following words out of the Syriack book (or version.) That expression is agreeable, as to the use of the word ἐρμηνεύεται and μερμηλεύεται, &c. (to be interpreted,) in the New Testament and other authors, so to what is usual among the eastern people, and peculiarly in the Arabick writers to call the account given of the genealogy, name and history of any, ترجمة Tarjamatoho, his interpretation (as often in that famous writer of lives Ebn Chalikan, and Others) and perhaps in the Syriack book might be written ܡܬܬܪܓܡܐ ܕܗܘ Hu Methtargam, He is thus interpreted, i. e. account is thus given of him.

This conjecture is abundantly confirmed by what we read in Polychronius forecited, who witnesses that those additions to Job, however by many received into the text, whose opinion himself followed because of the authority of the Fathers, yet were by others rejected; “They (saith he) reject the genealogy which is in the end, because it is not in the Hebrew, and the book is concluded with those words, And Job died being old and full of days, and say, that the likeness of the name in the genealogy of Esau, which is in the book of Genesis, where mention is made of Jobab, gave occasion of error to some, and of making that scholion, or note, and that in tract of time afterwards, that which was written in the margin (or elsewhere) was by others taken into the text.”

However it were, yet these things which have been said, taken at the least advantage, give testimony to the antiquity of the Syriack version. That which was mentioned in the ancientest copies of

of the Septuagint and Theodotion, which were seen and used by the Greek Fathers, and had such credit when they were written as to be taken notice of as of great authority, and little less authentick than the text itself, must needs be ancient. I hope none will think this to be eluded by saying that Job alone was then translated into Syriack, and not other books of the scripture; this would be a supposition contrary not only to the testimony of Syriack writers and others, which ought not rashly to be contemned, but to all reason.

Something to this purpose may be collected also out of the conclusion of the book of Job in the printed Arabick version, in which that which makes the 18th verse in the Greek, viz. It is written that he should rise, &c. is not found, nor that which follows, He is interpreted out of the Syriack book, but most of the rest, (after a breach made) is, though somewhat different from what is in Greek: for whereas in it is said, that he was the fifth from Abraham, the Arabick saith he was the sixth, with some other differences in the Arabick it self, but made more by the mistake of the Latin translator, as he that shall look into it shall easily perceive, as where instead of Asom, a proper name, he puts nomen, because the word, so signifying, hath the same letters with the other. And then he concludes, saying that the author of the copy, out of which he wrote it, saith, that this book was translated out of Syriack into Arabick. Whether that author meant it of the whole book, or only of the additions, may be doubted, as also some other things which cannot be farther determined without sight of his MS. copy. However, it appears that the Syriack version was then in great authority and veneration. I have been long in this digression, not seeking to attribute more to the Syriack version than may in reason be due to it, but to vindicate to it that which it may justly challenge, as to its antiquity. To return and proceed,

We reckon likewise among the ancient translations, the Arabick, though all of much later date than the former. In that language there are several versions, some done out of the Hebrew, some out of Greek, some out of Syriack, and perhaps one of late years done and printed at Rome out of the vulgar Latin, as I was told by one of that church, was intended, and I have seen some sheets of it, but I know not whether it were completed. However, that is none of those we speak of. Those that I had to deal with are two, the one, that which is found in the Polyglot Bibles, which when, or by whom, done is uncertain; it is conformed mostly to the Greek; in this part, I mean, of the Minor Prophets; for the whole Bible is apparently not of one texture, but in some parts seems more conformed to the Hebrew, (as in the Pentateuch) in others to the Syriack, in others to the Greek, as he that peruseth it will find. The other is a Manuscript, the use of which I had out of the store of my learned and very good friend Mr. Robert Huntington. There is no name of the author expressed (that I find) in the copy. Whether it be the work of R. Saadiab Haggaoon (a Jew famous as for his other works, so for his translation of the books of the Old Testament, out of Hebrew into Arabick) I have reason to doubt, seeing the prophecy of Isaiah, which is in the same volume, differs from what I find in another copy of that prophecy, which bears his name. And it is certain that others of the Jews, besides him, did translate the scriptures (or part of them) into that language, and therefore if it be any where by me cited as his, it is not positively affirm'd, and I almost think it is not his. Whose ever it be, it seems to be of some antiquity, for it is not of late years that the Jews have used to write in Arabick, as formerly they did, as is shewed in the preface to Porta Moysi. Whether we should reckon Jonathan, who made a paraphrase of the prophets, among translators or expositors, I something doubt, because taking liberty of a paraphrase, he rather makes his business to give the meaning than the particular signification of the words, which is more the business of a strict translator; although every such translator too may not amiss be looked on as an expositor or commentator. This paraphrase is of great authority with the Jews, and is constantly affirmed to have been made much about Christ's time; and I know not why we should question it. For those allegations against it, which are brought out of that paraphrase of the law, which goes under the name of Jonathan, and hath besides the difference of the stile, many things in it favouring of greater novelty, signify nothing, that being confessedly none of this Jonathan's work, and therefore is as the other paraphrases, on the other books, of much less authority (if any at all) than that of Onkelos on the law, or the true Jonathan on the prophets.

Besides these ancient versions, it was convenient to look on others more modern; such are those of Pagnin, the Figurin, Munster, Castalio, Junius and Tremellius in Latin, and Diodati in Italian, &c. which will be found sometimes cited. These often differing among themselves, and from the ancients, and from ours, give us occasion to examine the words in the Hebrew, and to enquire more narrowly into the grounds of the difference, and to see what the original will bear, that so we might be able to judge between them, which not seldom will be an hard matter to do, and force us to leave the reader to prefer that which seems to him best in his own judgment, seeing that will bear more, by reason of the different use and signification of the words that occur in it, and all making a good sense. When I have occasion to cite the vulgar Latin, I have mostly chosen to give it in the words of the Doway translation into English out of it, as that which perhaps would be judged more authentick than any rendering of mine own. In the use of our English translation I would desire the reader to have an eye to the marginal reading, together with what is in the text.

Now for finding the signification of the Hebrew words, besides the ordinary Dictionaries, which are more common, the reader will sometimes find cited R. David Kinchi's Radices, or Roots, a dictionary in Hebrew by him compiled for the words used in the scripture, from whom our ordinary Lexicographers borrow much; and again Abu Walid, an ancients author than he, whom he often cites by the name of Rabbi Jonab, as Aben Ezra doth by the name of R. Marinus, his name at length being Abu Walid Marun Ebn Jannabi Cordubensis, a very learned man, and of great credit among them; called, Prince of Grammarians, who wrote divers tracts about Grammatical matters, the last of which is his book of roots or dictionary, expounding the Hebrew in Arabick, in which language he wrote all. There is nothing of his, that I know, printed, that which is cited is manuscript; so is also another dictionary of R. Tanchum, which we made use of, though not properly composed for scripture words, but for such as occur in the Misnaioth (or text of the Talmud) and Maimonides, and an old Hebrew and Arabick glossary. Add to these the heads of the Hebrew concordance compiled by R. Nathan, which have been translated into Latin by Antonius Reuchlinus, and also by the learned Mr. Nicolas Fuller, whose translation is not printed, but in his own hand writing remains in the Bodleian Library. Under this head may come also some Arabick Lexicons, which it was necessary to make use of, for seeking after the signification of divers Hebrew words, by comparing them with the same roots in the Arabick: a way necessary to be taken in regard that that copious language continuing in greater latitude than the Hebrew (from which it had its original, and retains that affinity to that in the opinion of some of the learnedest Jews, it may pass rather for only a dialect of it than a distinct language from it) affords often the genuine significations of divers roots, which are now lost in the Hebrew, and of several words which occur so seldom in the original text, (which is all that we have left of that language in its purity, and cannot contain all words) that it will be hard to find the right meaning of them without that help, which therefore the most learned of the Rabbins take and direct to, by making search into that neighbouring language wherein they will be often found more common, and the meaning of them be manifestly declared by the known use of them therein. What is said of the Arabick language, is to be said of the Syriack and Chaldee, they also, together with the Hebrew, being אחת משפחה אחת of one family, as Aben Ezra speaks, only that they are not, as now left, so copious as the forementioned.

These helps being used for finding of the signification of single words, on which the sense mainly depends, it was yet farther convenient for giving the meaning of them in the context or sentence in which they are placed in construction with others, to consult expositors or commentators, and those of several sorts, Jews and Christians: the Jews because, though they have now so far lost their own ancient language, that it is not any more common to them as a vernacula, or mother tongue, but, what they have of it, they learn, as others that study it do; yet do those of them who will get any learning, so make that their whole study from their childhood, that they are more than ordinary versed in it, and get more skill in the letter of the scriptures, than usually any others; at least did so, when those writers which we have to deal with flourished; so that their comments are, and have been always thought to be, very helpful for attaining the literal meaning of the text, except in such places as are prophecies concerning Christ, or make for the christian religion against them: in such they being obstinately set on maintaining their traditions received from their fathers, and with them combining against Christ, will be sure to wrest them as far as they can from the right meaning. But then, that is another reason why we should look narrowly into them, that where they pervert any such text, we may vindicate and rescue it out of their hands, that they may not securely triumph among themselves, as if they had the scripture on their side against us. And that hath been indeed no small part of my business in such places, which hath made me perhaps sometimes so long to dwell on them, as to make me seem tedious to the reader: but I knew not how well to avoid it without betraying the cause, or giving up the buckler to them.

Those that we especially make use of, are Rabbi Salomo Jarchi, R. Abraham Ezra, R. David Kinchi, and Isaac Abarbanel, (or as some call him, Abrabaniel) who are all well known by name, as being printed and given account of by Buxtorf and others, whose expositions, where they might seem to the purpose, I have as far as I could, laboured to give a faithful account of, though to prolixity, that if we be not always directly holpen by them in finding the truth, we might see how and wherein they err from it, and so by the discovery thereof, be more earnestly stirred up to seek after it and embrace it. Besides these, the reader will find often cited one R. Tanchum, an Hierosolymitan, who is less known, because never yet printed, although, as far as I can judge, he might as well deserve to be so as some of the rest, as as much conducing in divers places to the understanding of the text, as any of them. He wrote notes in the Arabick language on the whole Old Testament (as himself declares) though I have not had the happiness to see them on divers of the books thereof; on the Prophets (all but Isaiab) I have. When he lived I know not, only it appears he was after the time of Moses Maimonides, whom he often cites, and follows in many things. To these may be added Talkut, a book so called, being a collection of divers allegorical expositions on the scripture. What other Hebrew books are cited, and are printed, I shall not need give particular account of, seeing any that desires it may have it in Buxtorf's Bibliotheca Rabbinica, and others. The Christian expositors, or Other writers,

Greek,

Greek, Latin, or Others that are made use of and cited, are such as are well known to all that look into such books, and any may know what concerns their works by looking into them, and seeing what account they give thereof in their prefaces. That they are of different professions, it matters not in this business. We had to examine how far they help for finding out the true meaning of the text, not what their opinions otherwise were, it being more to be regarded what is said, than who said it, and the truth abstracted from consideration of the person and his authority, to be received at any hand. Their difference in their expositions sends us again to look more narrowly into the text, and to see what that will bear, and which of them best agrees to that by which all must be tried. And that they should so much differ among themselves is no wonder, if we consider how great variety of opinions in explication of things there often is, where they are uttered in the plainest terms, and the most known language and usual phrase of the times: how much more then, when this original language here used, is so long time since grown out of use, and many expressions in it, then doubtless, even by the vulgar well understood, seem now as so many riddles, and much of the history and customs of those times quite forgotten? and even then in the prophetick writings, there were some things that seemed dark, according to what we read, Ezek. xx. 49. Ab Lord, they say of me, Dost not be speak parables? So that all helps for the making things plain that we have, though improved to the highest, are little enough, if at best sufficient. One may perhaps do more than another, yet none so much as not to leave more for others to do. It may not seem strange therefore, that after so many learned commentaries written, others should yet endeavour to make some things plainer, at least, and more known, by the help of their labours, and by addition perhaps of some other helps which they had not the use of; there will be room in this field while the world lasteth, till we come where that tongue which is now so far lost, shall, as some think, be again the universal language.

As to this present work, the thing first proposed was to have given the meaning of the text in brief marginal notes; but upon second thoughts, it was deemed more convenient, that first a larger exposition, wherein things might be discussed, and the reasons and grounds of differing opinions, as to the interpretation of doubtful places, laid open, lest what should be otherwise positively said, might seem too magisterially spoken; which being done, out of it, may shorter notes (if occasion serve) be taken, and the reader be referred for the justifying of them to the larger; and in them perhaps he may in some places find, that I dare not pass judgment for preferring one exposition before another, and there it is referred to him to take his own choice, or make use of either as occasion shall serve, when more are agreeable to the words and analogy of faith, and give a good meaning.

I have not meddled with drawing from the words inferences and conclusions. That will be every man's own work when he hath a settled meaning to ground on, without which, they will be as a superstruction without a foundation. But what I have done, the reader, whose candour I beg wherein I have erred, or been defective, or superfluous (as oft having to deal with so many different Expositors, whose opinions I had to look into and give account of, I have, I doubt, been inforced to be) will judge. If I have contributed any thing, though never so little, in this kind, which may be to God's glory, and the churches good, I have the utmost of my desire, and humbly thank God alone for so far enabling me.

MICAH.

CHAP. I.

VERSE I. The word of the Lord that came to Micah the Morasthite, in the days of Jotham, Abaz and Hezekiah, kings of Judah, which he saw concerning Samaria and Jerusalem.

THIS prophet is by the same name and title mentioned, Jer. xxvi. 18. called the Morasthite from the name of his city or place, where he was born or lived, which, whether it were Moresteth mentioned ver. 14. ^a as some think, or Maresthab, ver. 15. and Josh. xv. 44. ^b as many others will have it, or some other place of that name, as 'tis hard to determine, so not very material. That it was pertaining to the tribe of Judah, and not of Ephraim, as ^c Some think, is more than probable, because in assigning the time of his prophecy, he nameth only such kings of Judah, under whom he prophesied, not any king of Israel, which, if he had been a subject to them; 'tis probable he would have done, (as ^d a learned Jew notes) especially seeing his prophecy concerneth not Judah alone, but the ten tribes also, as those of Hosea and Amos do. Another ^e Jew says, 'tis manifest, that his country was of those places, that belonged to the kings of Israel, for what reason he sheweth not.

[Samaria and Jerusalem.] The first was the chief city of the kingdom of Israel, or the ten tribes, the other of the kingdom of the other two tribes, viz. Judah and Benjamin; and so under them is comprehended the whole of both kingdoms ^f. God being provoked by their sins declares, that he will proceed with great severity in judgment against them, and doth it in such terms, as might justly rouse them up from security, and awaken them to a speedy repentance.

2. Hear, all ye people, hearken, O earth, and all that therein is, and let the Lord God be witness against you, the Lord from his Holy Temple.

By people may be understood (as by most is) either the people of those countries, or of all others; and so by earth either particularly that land, or the whole habitable world, and the fulness thereof; that is, as 'tis well expressed, all that therein is, all the inhabitants thereof, which fill it, and occupy it. The people of that land are more peculiarly spoken to, and his judgments particularly denounced now against them: yet what is said or done to them, is for example to all others, ^g and they may be looked on as summoned to take notice thereof, and to consider the justice of God's judgments, and his way of proceeding against obstinate sinners.

[O earth.] Though by earth may well be understood the people on the earth, yet because of the words that follow it may seem to note the earth it self, and so sheweth, that such is the terror of the judgments that God denounceth, as that the earth it self should be so moved, as if it were sensible thereof; and so reproveth their great ^h stupidity, in that senseless creatures are called on, as if they would would sooner hear than they. See Isaiab i. 2. and xxxiv. 1. Jerem. vi. 19. and xxii. 29. the like expressions: as also, chap. vi. 2. and elsewhere.

Let the Lord God be witness against you.] When those evils, that I denounce, shall come upon you, he shall thereby convince you, that I faithfully declared his will unto you, and forewarned you of what should certainly be, except you did repent; and consequently that you perished through your own wilful obstinacy, and your refusing to give ear to my message from his part delivered to you. For illustrating the expression, see Psal. l. 7. and especially Ruth i. 24. and Malach. iii. 5.

From his holy temple.] Tho' this might in a convenient sense be understood of the temple at Jerusalem, and is so by some, yet is by others a reason given against that, because the temple was at Jerusalem, * and belonging then only to the kingdom of Judah, whereas the judgments here denounced concern the ten tribes also, who then had nothing to do with the temple. Altho' this reason seemeth not sufficient to others. However, by the most it is understood of heaven, called his temple (as Psal. xi. 4.) ^m of which the earthly temple was a representation, God being also said to dwell in it, Solomon saying that he built it for an house for the Lord to dwell in, 1 Kings viii. 13.

3. For behold, the Lord cometh forth out of his place, and will come down, and tread upon the high places of the earth.

The Lord cometh forth out of his place, &c.] God, who is every where present, filleth all places, and is bounded by none, is yet more particularly said to be there, where he exhibiteth more peculiarly his majesty and glory, as in his proper place; so in the heavens, and so of old in the temple of Jerusalem: and he is ⁿ said to come forth out of his place, and to come down to any other place, ^o when he shows there more apparent tokens of his taking notice of what is done there by men, (which before they might think him not to do, and to be absent from them) and effects of his presence and power there by acts either of mercy or judgment, for executing of which he is therefore here said to ^p come forth, and to come down. Some, that in the former words by his temple understand the temple at Jerusalem, here by his place understand the same, and by his coming ^q forth out of it, the withdrawing the gracious tokens of his majestic presence, which he was wont there to afford: and that he would not be confined (as it were) to that place, but from his ^r throne of mercy betake him to his throne of judgment, and show forth his power every where in punishing them.

And tread upon the high places of the earth.] All that is highest, exalted in the land, or among the people. Their towers, and strong places, their princes, and chief ones shall he bring under, as a thing that is most weak, and contemptible, troden upon, or crushed by the foot: none of them shall be able to resist him, or stand before him; or shewing himself to be high above the highest on earth, as a man is above what he treads under his foot.

4. And the mountains shall be molten under him, and the valleys shall be cleft: as wax before the fire, and as the waters that are poured down a steep place.

And the mountains, &c.] Farther to express the terror, with which God will proceed in judgment against them, he represents him as a consuming fire (as he is said to be, Deut. iv. 24. and ix. 3. and Hebrews xii. 29.) or as accompanied with a fire that shall devour before him, and a great tempest round about him, (as Psal. l. 3.) or with burning coals going forth at his feet, Hab. iii. 5. for, saith he, the mountains shall be molten under him, shall be consumed, saith the ancient Latin, shall be moved, or tremble, the Greek and Arabick, which tho', as to what is meant, they come all much to one pass, yet as the word properly signifieth to melt or be melted, so that it ought so to be here rendred, appeareth by what is subjoined, as wax before the fire. Neither may this expression, that mountains and rocks should be molten, seem improper, if we consider, what hath of late time been seen in the eruptions and flowings of Mount Aetna, and is seen in other places (as Strombolo, &c. from which continual streams of fire, and molten matter issue down) or what those that make experiments that way will tell us may be done by fire on the hardest marble.

And the valleys shall be cleft.] ^s Hab. iii. 9. 'tis said, thou didst cleave the earth with rivers, so perhaps it may be here understood; that the valleys should be cleft or rent with those fiery streams, that should come down from those molten mountains, or, shall be rent and broken into pieces. By some it is rendred, shall be dissolved, (so the Greek and Arabick) but the proper notion of the word is to cleave or to be cleft. The same word is used, Gen. vii. 11. where 'tis said, the fountains of the great deep were broken up. That these words are not here literally to be understood, and according to what they properly sound, as if these things, which are said, should really so be done, is manifest, but by way of similitude, to express, that as great things should be done, as those mentioned, viz. that God should in executing his judgments appear with such irresistible power, that no persons, or places, tho' they might seem as strong as the mountains, as firmly fixed as the earth, should be able to resist, or endure before it, any more than wax before the fire, or, subsist and keep together, and stand in their place, any more than waters poured down a steep place; but as easily be brought down and destroyed, as wax is molten before the fire, as speedily as waters run down in such a place. By mountains ^w some understand, those that dwell on the mountains, ^x or, cities on the mountains; ^y Others, such as were of highest degree, greatest power, and eminency among them: and so on the contrary, by valleys, they understand the inhabitants of the valleys, or towns in lower places, or those of lower condition: that the scope may be, that none of any condition, or in any place, high or low, shall be able to resist, or escape his punishment; it shall find them out, and reach them all. These threats were made good in the destruction of Israel by Salmanaser, of Judab by Sennacherib and Nebuchadnezzar.

5. For the transgression of Jacob is all this, and for the sins of the house of Israel. What is the transgression of Jacob? Is it not Samaria? and what are the high places of Judab? Are they not Jerusalem?

For the transgression of Jacob is all this.] Of all this, that is threatned, the cause is on their part, viz. the many provoking sins, of which the whole family of Jacob, consisting now of the two kingdoms of Judab and Israel, are guilty. Jacob and the house of Israel, are both names, which may comprehend the whole twelve tribes, as denominated from their Father Jacob, who was also called Israel. They are sometimes more particularly used to express the ten tribes as distinct from Judab and Benjamin. Here all the twelve tribes seem spoken of, Judab as well as the others being accused and threatned. ^z Some think by Jacob to be meant all the twelve tribes, and by the house of Israel more particularly the ten; ^a Others on the contrary, by Jacob the ten tribes, and by Israel, Judab with Benjamin, because in the following words Jacob and Judab are distinctly named. Yet Others also by both of them ^b think only the ten tribes here meant, and that they are named because they were most in number. It will not much concern us nicely to dispute about this, seeing the judgments are denounced against them all; and when the words were spoken, we suppose they all of them knew, how by these names they were meant and spoken to, Isaiah viii. 14. they are called both the houses of Israel, and in this prophecy, chap. iii. 1. and 9. we read, the heads of the house of Jacob, and princes of the house of Israel, when the princes of Judab are manifestly spoken of, who built up Zion with blood.

What is the transgression of Jacob?] Here by Jacob seem particularly denoted the ten tribes, because Samaria was the chief city of their kingdom. Yet ^c Others would have this name here also to comprehend all the twelve tribes, because, say they, Samaria was the cause of idolatry, not only to those tribes, who were properly under the kingdom of Israel, but to Judab also, which thence took the infection.

What is? or, ^d as Others think it more properly rendred, Who is the transgression? i. e. Who is the cause of the transgression of Jacob? Is it not Samaria? that is, the king, or inhabitants of Samaria? which being the chief city of the kingdom at that time, corrupted all the other places thereof by its ill example. So, who is the high places of Judab? that is, who is the cause that in several places of Judab high places, contrary to the law, are built for false worship? Is it not Jerusalem the royal city? that is, the king, and inhabitants of Jerusalem, who having first built such there, the infection thence spread it self through the whole land of Judab, and they also did what they saw done at Jerusalem: for looking on that as an holy city, they supposed nothing would be done there which they ought not to follow.

6. Therefore I will make Samaria as an heap of the field, and as plantings of a vineyard; and I will pour down the stones thereof into the valley, and I will discover the foundations thereof.

Samaria as an heap of the field.] Samaria having been first in sin, shall be first in punishment: which punishment is here described. He who, for the wickedness of the inhabitants, maketh of a city an heap, of a defenced city a ruin, Isaiah xxv. 2. will cause her by the Assyrians his instruments to be made ^e as an heap of the field, or a wast hillock, or heap of rubbish in the field; And as plantings of the vineyard, such places as are planted with vines, which they use to plant on hillocks, as best thriving in such places: so that the place where Samaria stood shall be as such a field only, and for such use, as if there never had been there a populous inhabited city. This shall be brought to pass by their rowing or throwing down the stones thereof (for it stood on an hill) into the valley, when they shall have rased it to the very foundation, and plucked up even the lowest stones that were covered with the earth, so that there be not left one stone standing upon another, Mat. xxiv. 2. Luke xix. 44. (where the like destruction of the temple and Jerusalem is described.) The Latin renders it, as an heap of stones in the field, where a vineyard is planted: ^f and so some expound an heap of the field, an heap of stones gathered out of the field, that they may not hinder them that work; and thrown up together, afterwards to be thrown out of the field, and dispersed; ^g Others somewhat differently; but all make the scope to be the expression of utter destruction and desolation. Compare chap. iii. 12. and Jer. xxvi. 18. where the same thing that here is meant, is expressed in terms tending to the same purpose.

pose. ^b That Samaria was thus ruin'd by the Assyrians seems manifest out of the 2 Kings xvii. 24, &c. where the people brought up by the king of Assyria, are said to be placed in the cities of Samaria, not in Samaria it self.

7. And all the graven images thereof shall be beaten to pieces, and all the hires thereof shall be burnt with the fire, and all the idols thereof will I lay desolate: for she gathered it of the hire of an harlot, and they shall return to the hire of an harlot.

And all the hires thereof.] That we may know what is meant here by hires, compare Hosea ii. 12. where the idolatrous people are taxed for saying of their vines and figtrees, These are my rewards (or hire, for the word is of the same root with this here, and differs only in the last letter) that my lovers, that is, my idols have given me. Add out of ver. 5. for she said, I will go after my lovers; that give me my bread and my water, my wool and my flax, mine oyl and my drink.---And what God saith, ver. 8. she did not know that I gave her corn and wine, and oyl, and multiplied her silver and gold, which they prepared for Baal, viz. for presents to Baal, or wherewith they made Baals, as chap. viii. 4. it is said, of their silver and their gold have they made them idols. These expressions being considered, it will appear that by hires, may be conveniently understood all their wealth and good things, which they looked on as the gifts of their idols, and rewards of their service to them; or, those precious things and rich donaries, which having receiv'd and gain'd from their own people, or others their friends and partners with them in their idolatry, they dedicated to their idols, or made images of, or adorned them and their temples with. And according to this last interpretation. ¹ Some will have the idols to be compared to harlots, and the idolaters to their lovers, who bestow gifts on them for their hire and recompence of their lewdness: ^k but this is by Others excepted against, because elsewhere in scripture the idolaters are compared unto strumpets, which prostitute themselves and their idols to their lovers, or such to whom they prostitute themselves. This scruple will be taken out of the way, if we consider what is said, Ezek. xvi. 31, 34. (concerning Jerusalem) Thou hast not been as an harlot, in that thou scornest hire. And the contrary is in thee from other women in thy whoredoms, in that thou givest a reward [or hire] and no reward is given thee: and again, ver. 41. I will cause thee to cease from playing the harlot, and thou also shalt give no hire any more. The same word being in those places used that is here, makes manifest that 'tis used not only for such gifts and hire, as adulterers give to harlots, but for such also as more unsatiable harlots give to men, to hire them to commit lewdness with them: and so if it be here understood of such gifts as Israel gave to, not received from, her idols, she may still be looked on as the harlot, and the idols her lovers, and the gifts the hire of an whore, not received, but given by her. These shall be all burnt with fire, except such as the enemy shall see fit to carry away. And so the meaning of the following words will either be, and all the idols thereof will I lay desolate, ¹ that is, take them out of the way, that they be no more worshipped; ^m or, as Others, will have by idols meant, the temples of their idols will I destroy; for she gathered them of the hire of an harlot: all those presents and rich gifts, with which she made, or adorned her idols, and their temples, she gathered of the hire of an harlot, viz. from such as ran on whoring after those idols, and prostituted themselves to false Gods; and they shall return to the hire of an harlot, ⁿ shall fall into the hands of those who are given to the like idolatry, and by them (namely, the Assyrians) be employed in the worshipping and adoring of idols; as of the calf of Bethel 'tis said, It shall be carried unto Assyria for a present to King Jareb, Hosea x. 6. or else, according to the first interpretation, ⁿ all the wealth that they looked on as a reward of their idols to them, shall return or be given to such, who should likewise look thereon as gifts bestowed on them by their idols, who, they thought, gave Samaria and all its spoils into their hands, (as Belshazzar and his Lords, who drinking in the vessels that were brought out of the temple at Jerusalem, praised their gods of gold and silver, &c. as if they had bestowed them on them, Dan. v. 3, 4.) ^p Others think it needless so nicely to prosecute the words, but that they be understood as a proverbial speech, that all their wealth which they acquired in or by their idolatrous worship, and looked on as rewards from their idols with which they committed spiritual fornication, as it was like the hire of an harlot, so should come to the same pass, as usually the hires of harlots do, which by the curse of God on them come to nought, and do them no good. ^q There is another rendring of the words by some given, viz. Because of the hire of an whore she gathered [them,] and while there is the hire of an whore, they are turned away, that is, they impute their wealth, and such things as they enjoy, to their idols, (as their hires or rewards from them) and while these things remain to them, they are turned away from me, who indeed have given them all, and forsake my service. But this seems more harsh.

8. Therefore I will wail and howl, I will go stript and naked: I will make a wailing like the dragons, and mourning as the owls.

I will go stript and naked.] That is, as one spoiled and stript of his garment, whether by others, and so left naked, ^r or having himself, in

in token of extream heaviness and sorrow, cast off at least his upper garment, wherewith he was usually adorned. * Some expound it as one spoiled of his right mind and understanding, distracted through extremity of affliction and anguish of mind; and so casting away his clothes, (which sense, viz. of foolish or distracted, they will have the same word [שולל Sholal] to have Job xii. 17, 19.) whether the prophet speaks this of his own person, † that in compassion to them he cannot but conceive the greatest sorrow, and so will in all outward signs express it: or whether he speaks it as in their person, to shew what great affliction they shall be brought to, or in his own person representing what shall befall them, as so Isaiah xx. 2. is bid to go naked and barefoot for a sign to the Egyptians and Ethiopians, that they should be forced to do so, and therefore the Greek and the Chaldee Interpreters expound these words of the people in the third person, not as of the prophet in the first, that they should so go stript and naked, and make a wailing, &c.

So almost all Interpreters render the word תנין Tannim, Dragons, only the ancient Syriack translation renders it by ܝܘܪܘܪܝ yoruro, which in that language, as their own authors tell us, signifies a kind of wild beasts like a dog, between a dog and a fox, or a wolf and a fox, which the Arabians call from the noise that they make, ابن اوي Ebn Awi or wawi ١ and our English travellers, and other Europeans, by a name borrowed from the people of those countries, where they are more known than in Europe, Jakales, which abiding in the fields and waste places, make in the night a lamentable howling noise, in so much that travellers unacquainted with them would think that a company of people, women or children, were howling one to another, as none that have travelled in the night in those parts of Syria, &c. can be ignorant. And with him agreeth an Arab version of Rabbi Saadias (as is probable) rendering it بنات اوي Benat awi, that is, Jakales. This translation seems to carry more reason with it, then the rendering it dragons; because of the hissing of dragons, as other serpents, we hear and read, but no where in any creditable author of their howling, or making such a noise, as may be called wailing, or like to it. And the same will be confirmed by the authority of a learned † Jew, who observes it for an error in Expositors, that in this, and some other places, they render dragons, where they should render Jakales, viz. the beast which we mentioned. His note on this place is this, the truest interpretation is, that 'tis a beast called ابن اوي Ebn Awi, the property of which beast is, to gather together in the night, and to answer one another in crying and howling, so that wailing is compar'd to the noise that they make. Much like he notes on Jeremiah ix. 11. where what is rendered a den of dragons, according to him ought to be, an habitation of Jakales (as there likewise the Syriack hath it, as also chap. x. 22.) and on Mal. i. 3. he also notes, that there it ought to be so rendred Jakales, not dragons of the wilderness; as likewise; Lam. iv. 3. Those wild beasts, not seamonsters (as ours) or dragons (as others :) for, saith he, serpents (as dragons are) have no breasts, and in both those places the Syriack renders it by the same word, which it here (as we said) useth. That which was cause of this mistake in that last place he saith is, because the word which signifieth Jakales in the plural number, is in writing the same with that which signifieth a dragon in the singular, both תנין Tannin, and so they took them for one in signification: and the same cause we may think every where to have given occasion to this mistake, viz. the likeness of the words of so differing significations. To prevent such mistake, from what he hath suggested to us a rule may be thus summed up, that wheresoever we meet with תנין Tannim, or תנין Tannin, or תנוות Tannoth (for they are all one in sense) as plurals, they signify those howling wild beasts inhabiting waste desolate places. But where תנין Tannim (as Ezek. xxix. 3. and xxxii. 2.) with ׀ M. in the singular (which Rabbi Tanchum saith is substitute for ׀ N.) or תנין Tannin in the singular, or תנינים Tanninim in the plural, they are to be rendred, dragons, or serpents, or sea-monsters, or whales, or the like, according as they are spoken either of such creatures as are on the land, or in the waters. This rule is confirmed by the Syriack translation which we mentioned, in that usually (I think every where except Psalms xlv. 19. where it rendreth תנין Tannim by ܬܢܝܢܐ Tennyono, which signifieth calamitous or dolorous, as the learned Sionita there notes,) where either of those three forms of the first rank is found, there it renders it constantly by that word ܝܘܪܘܪܝ yoruro, which we said signifies that howling beast; but where either of the latter, * there it useth another word, viz. ܬܢܝܢܐ Tanino, which signifieth a dragon, or serpent-like creature. And that these words so like in the letters in the Hebrew, may have these different significations, may be farther made evident from the like use of the Arabick tongue, in which as תנין Tennin signifies a dragon or great serpent, so תינן Tinan signifies a wolf, to which the beast we speak of is much like in kind, shape and conditions. [The Arabick version likewise in several places renders it بنات اوي Benat awi, Jakales.] It may be observ'd that usually where the Syriack puts ܝܘܪܘܪܝ Yoruro, there the Chaldee, which is but a different dialect of the same tongue, puts ܝܪܘܕܐ Yaruda with the letter ܕ D. in the last place, which the translators render dragon, but probably for no other reason than because they thought the Hebrew word, which was rendred by it, so to signify. But it is not unlikely, that it ought to be rendred as the Syriack is: because in those places, wherein the Hebrew word manifestly signifies a dragon, there he useth another word, as the Syriack doth. Probably therefore the Chaldee ירודה Yaruda may in that dialect signify the same, that יורורו Yoruro in the Syriack, the one dialect pronouncing that by ר D. what the other doth by ר R. Or it is not impossible, that the ר D. crept into the place of ר R. by the mistake of such as transcrib'd it out of the first ancient copies, reading and so writing ר D. for ר R. it being well known how little difference there is between those two letters, both in the Hebrew alphabet, in which letters the Chaldee is written, and likewise in the Syriack: so that it might be easy so to mistake, if this may not seem too bold a conjecture.

And mourning as the owls.] Or Ostriches, for so the ancient Interpreters generally render it. Some more modern render owls, which some * learned men prefer and defend. † Others again very learned are for retaining the old. They bring probable arguments on both sides. But it is but conjecture against conjecture, there being no way of certainly knowing by other helps, what the word did signify among the Jews in ancient times, when the scriptures were written; only it seems manifest, ‡ that it was a bird keeping in desert places, and making a doleful and mournful noise: and such that some sort of owls make is well known. But it is affirm'd also by § travellers of good credit, that Ostriches make a fearful skreeching lamentable noise: so that it will be hard to determine. Mr. Fuller who would have it rendred owls, and perhaps more particularly skritchowles, thinks that the word should be more properly written striche-owl: so we find in the Doway English-Bibles Striches in this place: but perhaps the letter O is by the Printers fault left out, and it should be Ostriches, for they render out of the vulgar Latin.

9. For her wound is incurable, for it is come unto Judah: he is come unto the gate of my people, even to Jerusalem.

For her wound is incurable, [or grievous] or she is grievously sick of her wounds.] The causes of this lamentation are in the former words expressed, viz. 1. The desperateness and incurableness of the wounds of Samaria, or the grievousness of what she suffered or should suffer by the sword, famine, plague, and captivity, every one of which was a sore evil, with which she was grievously afflicted. 2. The extent or far spreading of this wound, or these evils. They did not seize on Samaria, or Israel alone, and there stop, but proceeded and went on as far as to reach Judah also. † Some look on this as denoting that evil, which was brought on the cities of Judah by Sennacherib, who so far proceeded as to besiege

Jerusalem it self, some years after that Sbalmaneser had taken Samaria, and carried Israel captive, 2 Kings xviii. 9, 10, 11 and 13, 17. and 2 Chron. xxxii. 1, 2, &c. But others think this not enough for the meaning of the words, because this wound was not incurable to Jerusalem, which God delivered from the hand of Sennacherib, wonderfully destroying his army by the hand of an angel, and bringing on him also destruction, as appears 2 Kings xix. 35, &c. and 2 Chron. xxxii. 21, 22. and ‡ therefore will have here the final destruction of Jerusalem, and the carrying the Jews into captivity by Nebuchadnezzar to be pointed out, and to signify, that as now Samaria and Israel, so afterwards Jerusalem and Judah should be grievously afflicted and destroyed, none being able to cure their wound, to rescue them from destruction.

He is come unto the gate of my people.] That is, the enemy, though not expressed, because the verb is of the masc. gender, whereas the preceeding nouns and verbs are of the feminine. § Others, it is come, viz. the thing or evil condition, the whole matter spoken of, which may be in either gender uttered.----Of my people, so Interpreters say the prophet speaks, because he was of the tribe of Judah.

10. Declare ye it not at Gath, weep ye not at all: in the house of Apherath roul thy self in the dust.

Declare ye it not in Gath.] The like words are us'd, 2 Sam. i. 20. in David's lamentation over Saul and Jonathan, whence † Some look on it as an usual form in lamentations for some great national calamity, intimating the greatness of it, being such as their enemies would rejoice at, and therefore wishing it might be concealed, if possible, from them, and counselling them not to make it known to them by any publick expression of sorrow, as weeping, &c. Gath was a city of the Philistines, enemies to Israel and Judah, § although then in possession of the kings of Judah, and such as would rejoice to hear what evil had befallen them.

In the house of Apherath (i. e. dust) roll thy self in dust.] † Apherath, a place (as some will) not far from Jerusalem, (perhaps the same with Opbrab which is reckon'd among the cities of the tribe of Benjamin, Josh. xviii. 23.) There, ‡ farther off from the Philistines, and that they may not take notice of it, silently mourn, or roll thy self in dust or ashes (for the word signifieth either.) § Others, for the house or houses of and belonging to Apherath. † Others within Apherath, viz. within thy own land, taking by this name to be design'd the whole land of Judah, which being laid desolate should be all dust and dirt. ‡ Others think the land of Ephraim to be signified by it, whose houses should be ruined or turned to dust, or filled with it. and the following verses, reckoneth up several places whether belonging to Israel or Judah) by alluding to the names of which he expresseth the present or future condition, which they should be brought to, together with others not named, even the whole land. ^a Others, because some of those names are not elsewhere found in scripture, think, that they were not the usual proper names of the cities of the land, but names put upon them by the prophet, by which, and by descanting on them, he might declare, what he had to say of, or to the people, for making them sensible of what should befall them. Some Interpreters therefore retain them as proper names, ^o Others render the meaning of those names, our's do both, in the text giving us the names, and in the margin, the significations of most of them.

[Roll thy self, &c.] Here (as in some other places) there are in the original Hebrew two readings, one in the text, which is called Cetib, i. e. that which is written; the other in the margin, which is called Keri, viz. that which is read, that which is read is התפלשתי Hithpallesthi, according to which 'tis generally by Interpreters rendred as the word sounds, Roll thy self, as the words of the prophet speaking to the people: that which is written is התפלשתי Hithpallashti, and sounds, I have rolled my self; as if he speaking of himself told them, what he did in his own person, mourning in secret for the calamities hanging over the land, and so shewed them, by his own example, what they should do. Either sense is good, and both aim at the same end, whether taken, as a precept, or an example.

[Pass ye away thou inhabitant of Saphir, &c.] Saphir signifieth fair or elegant. It is by some taken for a proper name of a city so called. By others as an epithet of some place, thereby noted for its fair situation or beauty, and ^p they will have Samaria to be meant by it. ^q Others understand it of the daughter of Judah, or Jerusalem, which was beautiful for situation, Psalms xlviii. 2. To this place or city, whatsoever it be that is called by this name, 'tis denounced in these words, that to it and its inhabitants shall be for their former beauty and glory now shame and confusion. The other names also some apply to Samaria and Jerusalem, but the exposition will be plainer by taking them for proper names of places.

The inhabitant of Zaanan came not forth in the mourning of Beth-ezel.] Of Zaanan in the margin is of the country of flocks. Others the going out, for so the Vulgar Latin hath it, She went not out that dwelleth in the going out; the word being by Some deriv'd from a noun

Zon, that signifieth sheep or herds of little cattle, by Others from a root that signifieth to go out, even that by which here is an allusion to it made. But the simpler interpretation will be to look on it, as a proper name, as the text of our Bibles doth. Saint Hierome long since noted these passages of the prophet in the preceding, this, and the following verses, to contain such difficulties as that there is great need of the assistance of the Holy Spirit to explain them. He knew not how to reconcile the Greek version and his own, and fit them to the original, which were all that he had then to do with. How much more difficult will it be to reconcile so many translations as have since come forth? The diversity between them ariseth from the different acception of the words, some taking them to signify one thing, some another, and from their different placing them in the construction. Our translators endeavour to keep as near the words in the original as they can, and the meaning of them according to their rendring seems this, That when Beth-ezel (which was first taken by the enemy) was led away mourning, the inhabitants of Zaanan came not forth to bewail with them, or comfort or help them, as standing on their own guard for fear of the enemy, or, knowing that the same calamity should quickly befall themselves, and so they should have enough to do to bewail themselves. [For] He shall receive of you his standing, of you, O inhabitants of Zaanan, though you remain longer than those of Beth-ezel, [yet] he, that is, the enemy, shall receive his standing, that is, the reward for his labour, and time spent in besieging, and taking you: your spoil shall be his recompence. ^r So both among the learned of the Jews and Christians, do diverse explain these words. And according to this exposition Beth-ezel is look'd upon as first taken and destroy'd. There is by ^s another learned Jew another rendring given, whereby Zaanan is said to be first destroy'd: he with some alteration, thus gives the meaning: The inhabitants of Zaanan came not forth in the mourning of Beth-ezel [or had not opportunity to come forth, &c.] which received its standing more than you, or remained longer than you, or after you, that is, whereas they of Zaanan expected to have seen those of Beth-ezel gone before them, and to have bewailed their calamity, 'tis come to pass otherwise, and they retain their standing more than you of Zaanan, or after you, and shall see your ruin and bewail you. He also citing Aben Ezra's exposition gives this sense of it, the inhabitants of Zaanan went not forth to mourning [and also] Beth-ezel shall take or learn of you its standing, that is, to keep it self at home, and not go forth to bemoan, or help its neighbours; but he rejects it, as going contrary to Grammar, and the punctuation, in separating למספר Le-mispad, to mourning, from Beth-ezel in construction, beside that Beth-ezel keeping, or kept in

by reason of its siege, as he supposeth it to be, cannot be so properly said to learn, what it did not of its own choice, but was forced to. But this seems different from what our printed copies of Aben Ezra have. There is yet another exposition, which offers it self thus. The inhabitant of Zaanan shall not go free or escape, for so the word יִצָּא Yatfa is used also to signify; the mourning of Beth-ezel, shall take from you (O inhabitants of Saphir or of Zaanan) its standing, or its measure, or conjecture, that is, by seeing what you suffer, they of that place shall take guess, or learn what shall befall them. This exposition seems to keep as close to the letter as any, and is confirm'd as to the first part of it by the Chaldee Paraphrase, as to the latter by some of the learned ^a Jews. It may be brought nearer to the foregoing thus. The inhabitant of Zaanan came not forth in the mourning of Beth-ezel: he shall take his guess from you, that is, by you (of Beth-ezel or Saphir) learn what shall be his own condition. In these expositions the names are taken as proper to places so called, (which seems the plainest way) against which is denounced, that the like evils shall overtake them; the others look on them rather as epithets, or names put only in respect to the present occasion, to denote Samaria, or Jerusalem, or Judab, or others. ^a A learned Jew of that opinion to this purpose; that as for the daughter of Judab, which would not stir abroad to condole with her neighbour, but kept at home still and quiet, the enemy should take from them the quiet and tranquillity of their kingdom, and remove them away into captivity; so rending that which ours render standing, by stability, tranquillity or quiet habitation. To the same purpose some Christians also, as Arias Montanus. Junius and Tremellius thus render, The inhabitant of the place abounding with flocks (or cattle) shall not go forth, there shall be mourning in the places near adjoining, which receive from you their subsistence. The Vulgar Latin thus, she went not out, that dwelleth in the going out; the house adjoining shall receive lamentation of you, which stood to her self. In such variety of expositions (and more may be found) the reader may have liberty of choosing: he will be hardly able to reconcile them.

12. For the inhabitant of Maroth waited carefully for good, but evil came down from the Lord unto the gate of Jerusalem.

For the inhabitant of Maroth waited carefully, &c.] That is, ^a expected, that good should come, but it came not, but on the contrary evil came, &c. The margin has was grieved, the word signifying both to expect, or wait for, and to be grieved or be in pain or sorrow as a woman in travel. They were seized on with grief or sorrow, because (for so the participle יָצָא Gi properly signifies) evil came down, &c. Maroth therefore seems to be a city in the neighbourhood of Jerusalem, or one that had dependence on it, and so could not but be involved in calamity, when that was distressed; and so grieved for good, that is, for its want, and being deprived of that good which it hoped for, or once enjoy'd, by the coming of evil down unto the gate of Jerusalem, or as far as the chief city, Jerusalem it self. See ver. 9. The name of Maroth, ^a Some will have here by transposition of letters, put for Ramoth, viz. the cities singly called Ramah, of which there were more in the lands of Judab, and Benjamin, and so to comprehend them all, put in the plural number, and called Maroth, bitter, or bitternesses, from the bitter calamities that should befall them. Others translate the word ^a Rough places, ^a Others Bitternesses. ^b Others think the whole kingdom of Judab by this name design'd, in respect to the many evils in her, and sorrows that were to come upon them. But the taking it otherwise than for the proper name of a city, doth (as in the forenamed and following places) but open a way to more uncertain conjectures, and doubtful interpretations.

13. O thou inhabitant of Lachish, bind the chariot to the swift beast: she is the beginning of the sin to the daughter of Zion: for the transgressions of Israel were found in thee.

O thou inhabitant of Lachish, bind the chariot to the swift beast, &c.] Lachish is said to ^a have been a city of Judab, nigh to the border of the ten tribes, and so reckoned up among the cities belonging to Judab, Josh. xv. 39. against which Sennacherib King of Assyria laid siege, 2 Kings xviii. 13, 14. and Isaiah xxxvi. 1, 2. and said to have been one of the last defended cities that remained of the cities of Judab, when Nebuchadnezzar King of Babylon came up with his armies to fight against Jerusalem, and against all the cities of Judab that were left, Jer. xxxiv. 7. denouncing against this city the evils that were to come upon it, he bids the inhabitants thereof to bind the chariot to the ^a swift beast (as horses, mules, or the like) or saddle the swift beast, that is, say ^a Some with good probability, prepare for speedy flight from the enemy which shall come upon you, or to go away out of your country. ^b Others think, that 'tis spoken to them by way of derision, you that were wont so to do, viz. to bind the chariot to the swift beast, (^b as formerly abounding in such things, and priding themselves therein) do so now; as much as to say, that the case was now altered with them, ^b and they were not able to do as they were wont to do, when they could at pleasure call for their chariots and horses. ^c Others take it as if they were bid to make ready chariots riots at the command of the conquering enemy, to convey his messengers from Lachish to Jerusalem, to demand the city to be rendred up to him, (as he did, Isaiab xxxvi. 2.) The verb רתם Retom rendred bind, is no where else found in scripture, but (* as a learned Jew faith) the sense requires that it be so taken. The Latin translation indeed renders the words otherwise, viz. Tumult of the chariot of astonishment to the inhabitants of Lachish. But why the author thereof should render this word רתם Retom, Tumult, or the Greek, a noise, or the following word רעש Recesh, astonishment, no reason is given by those that follow that translation. As for the first word, wherever, besides in this place, a noun of the same root is found, it signifies a plant, whether Broom, a pliable plant that is easily bound, or as Others will, Juniper, but never any thing like tumult or noise. And as for the second, it is not found but ¹ in the signification either of horses, or such like swift beasts, or else of wealth and riches, whether in cattle or other goods. But it may be observ'd as to the first, that the same theme רתם Ratam, in the Arabick tongue, which is of great affinity with the Hebrew, signifies both to break, or dash and beat in pieces (from which the notion of tumult, and noise, or crashing is not much different) and also to tye or bind on. For the second word רעש Recesh, whether he took it to be of nigh signification to the word רגז Regez not much different in sound, and signifying fear, trembling, and great commotion, or what other reason he had to render it as he does, is uncertain; for the Greek takes it for horses, or horsemen, as in the Syriack also it signifies, and is here put.

She is the beginning, &c.] The crime laid to the charge of the inhabitants of Lachish, is, that She was the beginning of the sin to the daughter of Zion, or Jerusalem, viz. that she, being first infected with idolatry receiv'd from Israel (on whose land she bordered,) spread it abroad in the rest of the country, even as far as Jerusalem it self. Those sins, whereby Israel transgressed, were found in her, and propagated from her, or by her. In the first part of the verse 'tis said, She is, and in the latter, in thee, with a change of persons, though speaking of the same. This is the exposition by the most given, and is more easy and probable than that which ^m Some bring, viz. that the sin objected to Lachish is their rebellion against King Amaziah, wherein they consented with, if not gave occasion to Jerusalem, according to the history, 2 Kings xiv. 18. and so were transgressions in her like those of Israel, or the ten tribes, which rebelled against the house of David from Jeroboam's time and after.

14. Therefore shalt thou give presents to Moresheth-Gath: the houses of Achzib shall be a lie to the Kings of Israel.

VOL. I.

Therefore shalt thou give presents to Moresheth-Gath.] For these thy evil doings shalt thou be brought to that condition, that thou shalt be fain to send presents to those that are thine enemies, as Moresheth-Gath, a place or city of the Philistines, to obtain assistance from them, (which shall be in vain to thee:) or, as ⁿ Some by way of derision, give now presents, &c. as thou wert wont; or, as the margin hath it, for Moresheth-Gath, that is, ^o to redeem and obtain favour for thy self, and thy neighbour city, if possible. But the learned Jews will not have על Al, here rendred, for, but to signify the same that אל El, to, as in several other places it doth. In this way Moresheth-Gath is taken for the name of a place, or city, probably nigh or belonging to Gath, a place often mentioned. Others considering the word Moresheth as coming from the root ירש Yarash, which signifies to inherit, accordingly translate it ^p to the inheritance of Gath, and the word שליחים Sbilluchim, which we render presents, they render emissaries (the word being from the root שלח Salach, to send) ^q they taking it to be as applicable to persons, as things sent; which if they take ^r for messengers sent to implore assistance from them, the sense will be much to the same purpose; but if, as Divers ^s expound it, for scouts, or spoilers, as if the meaning were, that Lachish being taken should afford to the King of Assyria soldiers, which he should together with his own send to make inroads on the possessions of Gath, it seems more harsh: and more yet to interpret it, that the King of Assyria ^t should send spoilers, &c. for it is spoken to, or of Lachish, that she should give. Nor seems it plain with others to expound, ^u To the inheriter of Gath, that is, to the Assyrian, which hath taken that city for his inheritance and possession, thou shalt give presents. ^v Others yet, Thou על Al, together with Moresheth-Gath (or the town so call'd, which once belong'd to Gath, but was now in the possession of the Benjamites) give presents to make thy peace. ^x Others to Gath, that was once the inheritance of Judah, taken by David, since again retaken and the inheritance of the Philistines, even thither thou shalt be compelled to send presents. But the first exposition seems the plainest.

The houses of Achzib shall be a lie, &c.] Though the houses of Achzib were strong, and in them the Kings of Israel might put their trust, and hope for help of defence, yet they did, or shall (for the time is not expressed whether meant of the past, or present, or to come) fail their expectation, and be but a lie unto them. Achzib is the name of a town named together with Maresbeth, Josh. xv. 44. and the same, or another of the same name mention'd, Josh. xix. 29. and Judg. i. 31. as belonging to, or bordering upon the lot of the tribe of Asher. This name agrees with, or is deriv'd from the word כָּזַב Cazab, which signifies to lie, and therefore is by ^y Some here rendred the houses of lying, or vanity, which were for deceit, or in vain, to the Kings of Israel, as if it were a farther epithet or description of Gath, or how they should prove to the Kings of Israel, by whom ^z Some think here meant the Kings of Judab, not of Israel as distinct from them: so Abaz, King of Judab, is call'd King of Israel, 2 Chron. xxviii. 19. ^a Some think the cities of the Philistines denoted by the houses of Acbzib, so called, because of their falseness to Israel; or else the cities of Judab which failed Israel, when they expected help from them; or any other towns, countries, or nations, as Egypt or Affyria, from which Israel or Judab desired help, but were deceived by them. However, to the name of Acbzib, here is an allusion in the following word אָכַז Aczab, which is rendred a lie, to shew what they should prove to them that trusted in them. ^b There be also, who by the houses of Acbzib, that should be a lie to the Kings of Israel, think meant the houses of false worship in that city, wherein they worshipped idols, from which they in vain expected help.

15. Yet will I bring an beir unto thee, O inhabitant of Marefbab: he shall come unto Adullam, the glory of Israel.

Yet will I bring an beir unto thee, O inhabitant of Marefbab.] He threatens, that yet, or farther yet, he will proceed to bring unto the inhabitants of Marefbab an beir, viz. an enemy that shall take possession of them, and all they have, as if it were his inheritance, and thrust them out; (for the word יָרַשׁ Yarash signifies both to inherit, and to disinherit, or thrust out.) The name Marefbab including in it the signification of inheritance, here is, in what is denounced against it, an allusion to its name. This city, by ^c most supposed to be the country of the prophet, is mention'd among the cities belonging to Judab, Josh. xv. 44. and see 2 Chron. xi. 8.

He shall come unto Adullam the glory of Israel.] That this is the literal rendring of the words as they lye in order, there is no doubt, and so giveth plainly this sense, ^d that the enemy, that beir of Marefbab, should proceed and come as far as to Adullam, which is called the glory of Israel. Against which nothing may be excepted, but that Adullam was a place of meaner condition than to be called the glory of Israel; but, perhaps, there might be then reason either from its situation, or its strength, or beauty, why it was so called, tho' now unknown. Many therefore like not this interpretation, but rather follow that, which our translators also give in the margin. The glory of Israel shall come unto Adullam. But then in telling what is meant by the glory of Israel, they do not agree. ^e Some take glory as spoken by way of irony and derision, or of antiphrasis, or expressing things by their contrary, and to intimate disgrace and dishonour. The same honour which Israel had, shall Adullam also have, viz. shame, ruin, and destruction. If this sense be embraced, then may the word כָּבוֹד Cabod be looked on according to another signification ^f which it hath of weight or heaviness, as if he should say, the heavy weight of calamity, or burden, under which Israel is pressed, shall fall even on Adullam also. 2. ^g Others think, that the word beir is here again understood, the beir of, or he that hath seized on the glory of Israel, shall come as far as Adullam. 3. ^h Others, the glory of Israel, that is, their wealth and riches, ⁱ or peculiarly their children, spoken of in the next verse (which are the glory of their parents) being taken away by the Affyrian conqueror, shall come, or be brought by him to Adullam, whether he shall proceed to take that also. 4. ^k Others think the Affyrian to be called the glory of Israel, as he in whose friendship the Israelites formerly gloried, but now have all their glory taken away by him. 5. ^l Others by it think to be meant Jerusalem, which was the glory, both of that land, and all the earth: then the words must sound according to the first rendring in our translation, be, that is, the beir (or conquering enemy) shall come unto Adullam, and to the glory of Israel, or, as Some ^m reading it in the Vocative case, he shall come unto Adullam, and so near to thee, or beyond thee, O glory of Israel, O Jerusalem. ⁿ Some, the glory of Israel shall come to be but as Adullam, an obscure cave, or ignoble place, that cave where David flying from Saul, hid himself, 1 Sam. xxii. 1. and where at other times he was, 2 Sam. xxiii. 13. and 2 Chron. xi. 15. But it is mentioned not only as a cave, but as a city, a royal city, Josh. xii. 15. taken by Joshua and Israel, and transferred to the tribe of Judab, Josh. xv. 35. made a city of defence by Reboboam, 2 Chron. xi. 7. a city that had villages belonging to it, Nebem. xi. 30. so that for all that is said, it might, for reasons then well known, be call'd the glory of Israel. It may farther be considered ^o whether by the glory of Israel, may not be meant God himself, as if he should say, that he by his justice on them manifesting his glory, would come even as far as to Adullam, in the inmost part of the kingdom of Judab, giving all into the hand of the enemy. And while Adullam, and the other particular places are named, ^p no doubt, the whole land is understood thereby, and God's judgments denounced to all of it, and so the next words will be directed, not to the last particular city named, but to the whole land.

16. Make thee bald, and poll thee for thy delicate children, enlarge thy baldness as the eagle, for they are gone into captivity from thee.

Make thee bald, &c.] God's judgments being thus gone out against thee, O thou land of Judah, nothing remains, but that thou give up thy self wholly to sorrow and mourning, and express thy grief in all outward signs thereof; which, according to the custom of those times, was by plucking and cutting off the hair, even to the bringing of baldness on themselves. See Jer. vii. 29. Amos viii. 10. Job. i. 20. The occasion of sorrow to her was very great, viz. because the choicest of her people, call'd her delicate children, those that were tenderly and delicately brought up by her, and most dear unto her, should partly be slain, partly carried away captive by the enemy; and she (spoken to as a mother) is bid to shew great signs thereof, even to enlarge her baldness as the eagle which hath lost her feathers; as of eagles in a general 'tis said, that at certain times they do: except we may think some kind of eagle, which is naturally bald, particularly alluded to.

CHAP. II.

VERSE I. Wo to them that devise iniquity, and work evil upon their beds: when the morning is light, they practise it, because it is in the power of their hand.

WO unto them, &c.] How justly deserved those judgments were, which before, and after, are denounced against Israel and Judah, the prophet makes manifest, by a declaration of some of those sins, which the inhabitants of them were guilty of. As here first, because the powerful ones among them (for which a wo is denounced against them) did in the a night upon their beds, when they should have b communed with their own hearts, (and examined their ways to see what they had done amiss, that they might amend it) devise iniquity and plot evil; not to conceal it, as a work of darkness, c but that they might be ready to act it as soon as the morning light should give them opportunity: and then did, without delay, practise it openly in the light, and face d of the sun, without fear or shame, with all their might, as far as it was in the power of their hands; because there was none, who by executing justice did restrain them, but they were suffer'd to do what they could, and would. It may be observ'd that the word אֵל El, which is rendred power, doth also signify God, and that is the reason, why the ancient Vulg. Latin renders, because their hand is against God: but the like expression being elsewhere used, as Gen. xxxi. 29. Deut. xxviii. 32. Prov. iii. 27. he renders it by
